J. Stewart Woodhouse, well-known Los Angeles scenarist, has just completed an adaptation of one of America's most famous classics for Director Ray Smallwood, who has left for New York to complete arrangements for its production. There is a possibility that the picture will be made in California owing to better climatic conditions. Mr. Smallwood, who has long had his heart set on this story, says it will be the chef d'oevre of his motion picture career. Mr. Woodhouse has developed a continuity which Mr. Smallwood believes will make a production de luxe and his past successes with Mme. Nazimova and in other all-star features give interest to his new venture.

ANTHONY MAKES COMPARISON

Walter Anthony of the Principal Pictures Corporation scenario staff, was interviewed recently, regarding the mutilation of novels in the processes of transferring them to the screen.

"There is not likely ever to be any general effort on the part of picture producers to follow more closely than at present the outlines and details of printed books," Mr. Anthony said. "Book buyers and readers are frequently uncharitable and unjust in their condemnation of picture revisions of books they have read and enjoyed.

"The novel form is one thing, the drama form is another, and the picture form is different fundamentally from either.

"A novelist can begin his story in the middle, at the beginning or at the end. He can, like the journalist, start his story with 'John Jones shot and killed Bill Smith last night while the latter was picking his teeth;' or he can begin at the beginning and show the toothpick in the course of manufacture or he can develop the psychological causes leading up to the murder in any manner that suits his style. The author is telling the story, not the characters.

"Charles Dickens keeps you in the dark for three hundred pages as to the reasons why Monks is so eager to make a crook out of poor Oliver Twist.

"But the picture maker cannot tell the story; he has to take the unfolded chronologically and in the characters out of the book, put them on the screen and let them tell it. Thus the plot must be order of its actual unfoldment, without the aid of an author's style, his literary devices, his philosophy, humor and reflections on human life.

"Many novelists permit their characters to develop plot by sitting opposite each other and talking, or the plot is the development of 'soul-states.' In the former case, the picture maker can only show the teeth of his characters and permit them to grin or scowl at one another—which isn't very edifying—while in the latter case, they have not, as yet, perfected a camera that will photograph a 'state of mind,' or a 'soul conflict.' There must be action, physical clash and visible movement.

You can photograph the rescue of a drowning man, but you cannot take a picture of a discussion on the nebular hypothesis or of a woman changing her mind."

"Cape Cod Folks," now being prepared for the screen by J. C. Hawks, is this scenario writer's fifteenth adaptation for Reginald Barker. The two have worked together since the old Inceville days. Among the Barker pictures adapted by Hawks are "The Eternal Struggle," "Hearts Aflame," "The Storm," "The Branding Iron" and "Bunty Pulls the Strings." "Cape Cod Folks" will go into production as soon as the scenario is completed and will be Barker's fourth picture for Louis B. Mayer presentation through Metro.

Max Graf, supervising director of the Graf Productions, is expected to arrive in Hollywood with his latest completed film, "Half-a-Dollar Bill' which followed "The Fog" at the San Mateo Studios.

Louise Fazenda recently received an interesting offer for "The Dover Road," a C. C. Burr Production to be made in New York. ..Lionel Barrymore was scheduled for the other leading role. Much as Miss Fazenda would have enjoyed doing a picture in New York, she had already begun her work in "The Galloping Fish" when she received the first wire. ..The comedy queen is now in Yuma, Ariz., where the company will be busy for the next four weeks.

Sweet summer breezes!

Edward Martindel will enjoy them in full when he moves into his new home, now near completion, which is located on one of the highest hills in Hollywood.

"My place is so high it is almost as far up as the cost of living," declares the film actor. "The only reason I can't see China from my back window is that the earth isn't shaped right."

Suggest Hindu History Film

A. K. Mozumdar, the noted Hindu metaphysician who recently completed the filming of his first motion picture production entitled "Beyond the Veil," has just received an offer to picturize India's history. A group of his wealthy compatriots, including several princes of the royal blood of the various provinces of India, have made the suggestion to Mozumdar through S. G. Pandat, a local Hindu attorney. The patrons of the proposed enterprise selected Mozumdar, not only because he is the first Hindu who ever entered the ranks of film producers, but also because he was himself a descendant of the reigning family in Bengal before he renounced his worldly position and socal caste to become an ascetic and philosopher.

Mozumdar is seriously considering this proposition and will probably engage on the making of this historical film after he has completed the second in his series of metaphysical motion pictures. "Beyond The Veil" is now being rapidly cut and edited by a capable force, headed by Harry Decker, at the old Charles Ray Studios.

Virginia Brown Faire, First National featured player, will be engaged in one of those stories of the versatile "gold digger" when "Lillies of the Field" in which she plays the featured role goes under production. Miss Faire has not read the script yet, only informed that she will be of the chorus!

Spotiswoode Aitken will play the role of a blind professor, one of the important roles in Hunt Stromberg's current production.

Roy Hughes Productions will make a series of five-reel out-door western pictures for the Shadowland Productions, Inc., it was stated at the Shadowland West Coast office by Rex Thorpe, Western distribution Manager. The stories will be written and supervised by Thomas Dixon, Jr., featuring Donna Hale and Miles Leavens. The Company is now on location near Phoenix, Arizona, fiming real western atmosphere.

"Thus I turn my back;
There is a world elsewhere.'
—Coriolanus.

Likewise said little twelve-year-old Dolores Blair who so frequently during the past five years has delighted New York and Eastern audiences with her excellent toe-dancing numbers, said by critics to be equal and even surpassing that of artists twice her years. age.

For Dolores is now with us and is determined to ascend the heights in filmdom and while only having arrived in Hollywood but a few short weeks ago she has filled a number of professional engagements; one of which was a dancing number for the Hollywood Players last Saturday night at the American Legion stadium. She is now cast and started work this week in the part of the orphan child in a new Century Comedy for Universal release.

Rex Thorpe, Western Distribution Manager will make a trip North this week in the interest of the Shadowland Productions distribution office that is located in San Francisco.

Thimmeway T o Change Name

On petition to the Superior Court, Thimmeway Titles, Inc., was authorized by Judge Creil Tuesday to change its corporate name to "Hollywood Laboratory." ....The reason for the change was stated to be that the purpose of the firm was often misunderstood to be limited to title production, while the firm is a producer of all classes of film and still picture work, and operates a complete motion picture laboratory on Lillian Way, close to Santa Monica Boulevard.

No change whatever has taken place in the directorate or the management, and none is contemplated.

Wm. C. Thompson, President of Shadowland Productions arrived from New York City this week where he has been for the past month making arrangement for the distribution of pictures that the Shadowland Productions will release this coming year.

Dr. Abrams, he of electronic vibration theory, which recently startled the medical and scientific world, is to receive no little exploitation in Victor Hugo Halperin's production, "Souvenir," which has just been started at the Hollywood Studios. Halperin is noted for putting across "idea" pictures, such as his last success "Tea With a Kick," and in "Souvenir," it will be the power of music combined in a dramatic way with the discovery and application of the electronic theory. The plot is laid in Russia at the late Czar's court at the time of the revolution and turn to the present form of government.

An actress portraying herself..

This is Colleen Moore's unique role in "The Swamp Angel," the First National picture being directed by Clarence Badger.

In the picture Miss Moore plays the part of a typical small town "tomboy" who becomes an actress and returns to her home town in a play written around her own life.

She portrays the role of "herself" playing baseball on a vacant lot and the gallery is composed of players enacting the town's characters who are in the theater audience. The theater scene is without doubt one of the most unique and unusual in the history of pictures.

Now that pictures are being made in the four corners of the earth, Maurice (Lefty) Flynn is on location in the Bahamas.

He expects to return to Hollywood in the near future.

Andre de Beranger, who has been cast for an important role in Metro's all-star production, "The Man Whom Life Passed By," may be said to be "a man without a country." He was born on an ocean liner midway between France and Australia.

DEL LORD IS SATIRE SHARK

Casting an eye over the field of comedy directors, it is quite noticeable that for the most part, they are all young men and the majority of them under thirty years of age. Also, it seems rather a coincidence that many of them have jumped right over the apprentice stage and landed directly into the director's chair.

Of this number of present-day directors of popular comedy pictures, men who have never served as assistant directors or cameramen, we point to Del Lord, under contract with the greatest producer of them al, Mack Sennett

Del Lord is a product of Canada, claiming Hamilton, Ont., as his natal city. He is one of those who when very young took Horace Greely's advice to young men and journeyed westward, finally landing in Los Angeles back in 1914, when moving pictures were taking the city by storm.

Del's first job was as stunt man and comedy-cop, for the Comedy King. Being a daring individual, it fell to his lot to be chauffeur for the Sennett comedy cops, for it needed a man actor with nerves of steel to guide that now well-known police patrol.

Del continued with the Sennett comedies for a couple of years, before going with the William Fox Company. From a slap-stick comedian he jumped to a full-fledged director with the latter, for whom he personally wrote and directed about twenty successful two-reelers. After this engagement, followed a contract with the Educational Pictures, for which concern he directed about fifteen fun films.

About six months ago, Del Lord returned to the scene of his first moving picture activities, the Mack Sennett Studios, where he has successfully directed five comedy specials, two with Ben Turpin as his star., and three with the all-star troupe.

A good line on the type of humor Del Lord injects into his pictures can be had by witnessing such stories as "The Dare Devil," and "Ten Dollars or Ten Days," with Ben Turpin, or "Down to the Sea in Shoes," and "One Cylinder Love," both of which are portrayed by the all-star Sennett companies.

Players, directors, assistant directors, cameramen and property men are in a state of chronic breathlessness at the Hal Roach Studios in Culver City. Visitors from other studios watch with amazement and unbelief as members of the various Roach producing units go by on the run. Rival producers declare it's just another unnatural phenomenon of the screen.

The feverish activity started a few weeks ago when Hal Roach announced a bonus plan by which the director, assistant director, cameraman and property man divide a substantial cash sum on every picture kept within certain financial limits. The stars don't participate but they are hustled from one scene into another by enthusiastic production staffs. The result, according to Mr. Roach, is that his Pathe-comedies are being made quicker, better and cheaper, with mutual advantages to all concerned, and that more money will be available for motion picture production under this system.

It is quite the ordinary thing for visitors at motion picture studios to stand around and admire the artists and their costumes.

But when the actors stand around and admire the visitors and envy their professions and covet their uniforms it is quite out of the ordinary.

That's what occurred recently at the Hollywood studios when Commander William Winton Galbraith, executive officer of the U. S. S. Maryland and assistant naval intelligence director, arrived at the studio in company with Lieut. Col. John Colt Beaumont of the U. S. Marine Corps.

The distinguished officers were the guests of the J. K. McDonald company which is producing "Misunderstood," for First National distribution.

Big things are being predicted for George Hackathorne by those who have seen his superb portrayals in "Human Wreckage" and "Merry-Go-Round." At the present time he is playing one of the principal roles in "The Turmoil" which Hobart Henley is directing at Universal.

Madge Tyrone, New York newspaperwoman, is writing continuity for "Snake Bite," a recent popular novel. Edwin Carewe, now enroute for Algiers to film "A Son of the Sahara," is to produce it on his return.

JAMES MORRISON is en route home to Hollywood after a two weeks visit with relatives and friends of Mattoon, Ill.

After fifteen weeks of continuous work, Helene Chadwick is to take a few weeks vacation before starting her next production for Goldwyn.

Miss Chadwick has just completed her leading role in "Why Men Leave Home," for Louis B. Mayer, which followed her characterization of the feminine lead in "Law Against Law," a Rupert Hughes picture for Goldwyn.

During the past three months, Miss Chadwick has had but five days off and has worked fifteen hours a day on a number of occasions. She will spend her vacation with her mother in Northern California.

Apfel Writing Of Cinema

Because he is so often requested to relate to his non-professional friends the history and mechanics of the motion picture industry, Oscar Apfel, one of the real pioneer directors of the art—or business—has in mind the writing of a little booklet on this subject which he will distribute when published as a Christmas gift.

The booklet will be bound in limp leather binding and the name of the individual to whom it is given will be tooled on the cover.

Apfel is now compiling data for the gift book which will tell of the inception and progress of the cinema in detail. It will be profusely illustrated with photographs of the various Hollywood studios of ten years ago and today and with portrait studies of prominent actors, actresses and directors of both periods.

The boat built by the "Our Gang" kids of the Hal Roach Studios for their new pirate picture was formally christened and launched at Wilmington, with little Mary Kornman, their pirate queen, doing the christening with a bottle of catsup. The boat glided nicely down the ways into the Pacific and sank so fast that the camera hardly had time to catch the action. That was all in the story Mark Goldaine is directing, but a big wave from the wake of a passing vessel, swept the camera off its raft, and sent it to join the pirate ship. This wasn't in the story. A professional diver salvaged the camera which is again functioning as usual.

Lillian Rich has earned the title of, "The busiest leading lady in Hollywood."

After completing the leading feminine role in Strongheart's latest film, "The Love Master," she commenced with Jack Hoxie in "Wyoming."

With but one day of rest, she was again put to work in the current Hoxie production, "Hard Rock," which is now being made at Universal.

John H. Richardson recently completed the heavy role in Laurence Trimble's forthcoming Strongheart feature entitled "The Love Master."

LOIS ZELLNER HOME

Lois Uellner, clever screen writer, has returned to her Hollywood home after a month at Santa Monica.

Most children are frightened at the discharge of firearms. Not so with little Paul Ingraham, Jr., when several shots were fired during the making of "Ponjola." It was a great Fourth of July celebration for him and he only yelled for "more shoot."

It is just one conference after another with Carl Laemmle, chief of Universal out at the big U lot these days. Laemmle has just returned from an extended journey to Europe that gave him several new ideas about pictures. These are being imparted to the members of his extensive staff. No decision has been as yet arrived at on Ivanhoe. It is likely that one will be made in a few days. If Universal is to make Ivanhoe King Baggot is to direct it, taking a company from Hollywood to England to make the picture in the original Ivanhoe settings. Baggot has just finished "Blackmail."

Volla Vale is going to introduce into the organization of sixteen leading screen women, of which she is an officer, a resolution making it a club rule that every member stand up for and boost Hollywood at every opportunity that presents itself.

Russel Simpson and Mary Carr screen "man and wife," have been re-united.

They parted twelve years ago on the Lubin lot in Philadelphia, after the taking of "The Barrier," Rex Beach's famous novel. In that picture Mrs. Carr was Simpson's squaw.

The re-marriage is in "The Swamp Angel," the First National picture now being made with Colleen Moore in the leading role.

Russell and Mary are the parents to Ben Lyon in this picture.

"Dewey," the clever little dog of the malamute strain, is working in the current Lloyd Hamilton production, directed by Gil Pratt. Dewey belongs to Harry Marks.

Boyce Combe who is playing the lead in "Daddies" at Warner Brothers Studio, first broke into the limelight in America when he toured this country in 1911 as one of the amateur golf players from England.

Combe is an athlete of no mean ability and for years was leading man in many famous musical comedies, both in this country and England.

"The Girl Expert," Harold Lloyd's latest picture upon which he is now at work at the Hollywood Studios, is to be released early this year. This is his first independent production since leaving Hal Roach. It is a feature length comedy laid in a small town and has none of the slapstick or hair breadth escape thrillers. From early indications it is shaping up as Lloyd's greatest effort.

FILM HAS PSYCHIC THEME

Dealing with the myriad mystic liefs which from time immemor- l have been built into tradition nong mariners, "Superstition," ie of the great independent pro- uctions of the year has been com- eted at the Hollywood Studios. Conceived as a short story called Trapped," by I. W. Irving at the ne Sir A. Conan Doyle was vis- ng the United States to preach the gradual establishment of a gular means of communication ith the spirit land, the tale relates cidents, founded on fact, of what e apparently personal influences this life from those who have ne on.

It is one of the very few mo- on pictures on its theme, and with eat readymade audiences waiting r it, made by the expressions of ch men as Doyle, a considerable interest has been aroused about the distribution. Fred C. Kusse, chief of Creative Productions, which made the picture won't say a word. Neither will W. H. Carr, the general manager.

The film is now in the cutting room where Director John B. O'Brien is bringing it down to proper length. Louis Weddock is editing. Among the players in the cast of the film are; John Bowers, Marguerite De La Motte, Cesare Gravina, Edward Burns, Joseph Dowling, Claire McDowell, Sheldon Lewis, Spottiswoode Aitken and Martha Marshall.

In addition to the interest aroused by the general theme of the film it has commanded attention on the spectacular side due to the intensely vivid portrayal of a storm at sea.

WITH THE YOUNGS

Richard P. Young, youthful conuity and title writer of Holly- ood, recently disputed, with one f his friends, the fact that James oung is the only one of the Young lan to direct the famous Clara imball.

A newspaper clipping, from his crapbook, won the argument— nd the bet—within a few moments. n fact there was no comeback; hese headlines proved sufficient: Clara Kimball Young in stellar ole of Photoplay—Harry Garson upervising—Richard P. Young andling the megaphone.

After the loser had recovered rom the loss, explanations were n order.

Sometime ago, after Young had ust finished directing an Alsatian icture in the East, Clara Kimball rrived in the same city, where he ad been shooting, on a personal ppearance tour. To put the stunt ver big, Garson and the manager f the theater secured Young and is cameramen to show the folks ow the movies are made.

And while he kept one eye on he star, Miss Young's new direc- or kept the other on the traffic fficers, who were not aware of he fact that a permit had not been ecured from the chief to block raffic.

Virginia Valli has returned to her home after a short vacation at the nearby beaches following the completion of her work in Goldwyn's "Wild Oranges," which King Vidor directed. She will start work soon on "The Signal Tower," a Universal production to be directed by Clarence Brown.

Arthur Housman, well-known screen actor, helped to make things pleasant for Lloyd Hamilton during his recent stay in New York.

So when Arthur arrived here the other day as a member of a Goldwyn company returning from the East, Lloyd met him at the train with the keys to Laurel Canyon, a card to the country club, and the latest map of the detours between Hollywood and Culver City.

Immediately upon completion at the Hollywood Studios of his featured character role in the Beverly Production, "The Whipping Boss," Eddie Phillips started work in the role of Noah Swift, the juvenile lead, in the Reginald Barker Production for Metro of the well-known book, "Cape Cod Folks." In this, Frank Keenan is to return to the screen in the featured role of the old sea captain, Eddie Phillips' father.

If the late Nat Wills could have met Tully Marshall in his present make-up, the king of tramp comedians would have gathered many interesting pointers on just how a down-and-out hobo should appear.

Marshall is playing one of the featured roles in the Joseph Henabery production, "The Stranger" for Paramount with Betty Compson, Richard Dix and Lewis Stone as the other featured members of the cast. The story was written for the screen by Edfrid Bingham from John Galsworthy's "The First and the Last" and Ralph Block is the production editor.

Dainty Virginia Fox, well-known leading lady, did the unusual last week.

While spending a brief sojourn at Guenther's Murrietta Hot Springs, she had a number of "still" photos taken on the beautiful palm drive. When the prints are made they will be used as "fan" photos.

"That's one way of showing the out-siders just what beautiful places we have in California," says Miss Fox.

At last it has happened. It was bound to occur, and here it is: "Yes, We Have No Bananas" has reached the screen.

"Yes, etc; will be the first comedy produced by "Zit's Comedies, Inc., of which "Zit," New York dramatic critic, is president.

The cast reads like a list of Broadway's Best Bets. Don Barclay, star of "Go-Go," Gilda Gray, the quivering terpsichorian, Belle Baker. Vaudeville's song-bird, Mabel Withee, Francine Larrimore, Edna Aug, Anna Chandler and Lillian Shaw.

Baby Therese Rose, whose recent very creditable work was seen in "Our Gang" comedy, directed by J. P. McGowan, is a full grown comedienne in weight of not in age and experience, tipping the scales at more than one hundred pounds and but six years of age.

Furthermore, if ancestry and weight combined have anything to do with it, Baby Therese is destined to reach the heights in her chosen vocation as her great-great-grandfather was Alfred Bunn who wrote the Libretta of the "Bohemian Girl" and was manager of the Drury Lane Theatre, in London for many years. His wife, Therese Rose's great-great-grandmother, was his star in many productions.

There are busy times ahead of Edmund Lowe. He is now playing the male lead in "Nellie the Beautiful Cloak Model" a Warner Brothers production and at the same time will play the featured role in "The Waning Sex" a legitimate play by the Hattons, to be presented at Eagan's Little Theater.

Lowe who is the son of former U. S. Senator, J. R. Lowe, was educated for the bar and possesses degrees from the University of Santa Clara and Leland-Stanford.

John L. E. Pell is making the historical arrangement of the story for D. W. Griffith's next production "America.." Pell is the author of "Down to the Sea in Ships" with a thorough knowledge of New England history.

PROPHECY COMES TRUE

When D. W. Griffith "discovered" Carmel Myers several years ago and induced her late father to allow her to become a film actress, the master director predicted that she would be playing parts in three years.

"It will take three years of hard work and then you will be playing important parts," said Griffith.

Two months afterwards Miss Myers was playing leads, thereby anticipating Griffith's prediction by two years and ten months.

Douglas Fairbanks gave her the feminine role in "The Matrimaniac" and ever since she has been appearing in important characters. her most notable work being the portrayal in Goldwyn's "Slave of Desire." This characterization, according to those who should know, will make a full-fledged star of Carmel Myers.

She is at present appearing opposite John Barrymore in "Beau Brummel" at the Warner Studios.

ANENT THE ROACH BREW

While filming certain scenes of a Stan Laurel picture recently completed at the Hal Roach Studios, a keg of near-beer was one of the "props." Jimmy Finlayson, passing by, took a drink of the stuff and walked off to the next stage. A few minutes later Mae Laurel met him on the lot. He was pale and talked much to her of being "through" and of "reforming."

"I just sauntered into the Biltmore," he stammered, "and it has grown frightfully small! I almost filled the lobby. There were rabbits and chickens (real ones) sitting about in the chairs. A bally duck waddled by me in a very insolent manner. A richly dressed old lady paraded past me to the desk—and jumped on top it. She turned around and Ye Gods! she was a monkey! I tell you I'm cured. If near-beer can do that to the Biltmore — well, I'm through."

Investigation revealed that Finlayson had wandered onto a half portion set being used by the "Dippy-Doo-Dads" for their next picture. The rabbits, ducks, chickens and monkeys were the actors.

Life is but a battle ground for Milton Sills. He no more than completes work on one motion picture production wherein he must wage a mighty battle, than his services are sought madly by other producers for parts requiring gory conflict.

Sills' most spectacular pugilistic display to date was in "The Spoilers." He has now signed to play the role of Calvin Gray in Richard Walton Tully's production "Flowing Gold," which calls for a hand-to-hand struggle of even more violence and intensity.

Candidates for the part of Buddy Briskow, the husky Texas lad with whom Sills is to mix in this picture, shudder when they learn that the script calls for their punishment at the hands of this famous screen fighter.

Edward Burns, who is now on his way to New York, where he will play the leading role opposite Gloria Swanson in the screen version of Maude Fulton's famous stage play, "The Humming Bird," stopped over at Atlanta, Georgia, where he visited the only replica of Bobbie Burns' cottage in Scotland.

It is one of the most remarkable houses I have ever seen," commented Burns. "The building is constructed of solid stone, with furnishings built entirely of mahogany, which I understand are the only duplicates of Burn's original furniture. It is regarded as one of the most interesting historical curiosities in America."

Several bored critics were given a real thrill at the Hollywood studios the other day when they previewed the recently completed Renaud Hoffman feature, "Which Shall It Be?" It proved to be most novel in that there is no leading man or woman, no villain and no romance—simply a page from life. It is a screen adaptation of the well-loved old poem of the same name.

Use Radio For Studio Work

Neil Jack, chief electrician for the Fred Niblo Company is installing a novel studio arrangement. A portable radio transmitter and receiver on location and in the office.

Mr. Niblo is having a street set erected on the back of the Clune lot. Under the direction of his production manager, Charlie Stallings, the street is nearing completion. Mr. Jack has already installed a portable radio apparatus so Mr. Stallings is able to get in direct touch with the office or the stage without troubling to go or send some one to deliver his messages and without bothering to have an inter-communicative system of phones installed.

"I think we will find the radio of great use when we get out on location up on the Ridge route," Mr. Jack said. "There we will be out of telephone and telegraph communication with the studio so you may well imagine the time and money saved by using the radio. In time I believe radio apparatus will be as necessary on a "set" as any other equipment. We haven't begun to put radio to the many uses for which in time we are going to find it invaluable. Mr. Niblo is already finding the set I installed in his home a great convenience as well as a wonderful method of keeping him in touch with what is going on."

Mr. Jack was one of the first men on the West coast to become interested in radio. He has been a prominent member of the radio club from the time of its inception. He entered pictures in the electrical department of one of the big studios; then tried camera work for a time and re-entered the field as an electrician about a year ago when he joined Mr. Niblo's company. He now has charge of the entire electrical department for the Niblo unit of the Louis B. Mayer organization.

Grace Cunard, the famous serial star, has been signed to the cast of "The Elk's Tooth." Miss Cunard accepted the role upon condition that she be compelled to partake of her customary thrills during the filming of the picture. Her desires are certain to be satisfied, the script calls for battling bull elks and a stampede of maddened elk thundering down a snow-covered mountain side. As the semi-villainess, Miss Cunard, will find herself favored with dangerous sequences.

Dick Jones has been very busy with the producer, Mack Sennett, rounding out a lot of the preliminary features attendant with a new production about to be started, and has already predicted that the story of "Mary Anne," is one of the best he has ever had anything to do with.

Gibson Gowland plays the title role in the film version of Frank Norris' famous novel, "McTeague" which will be released under the title "Greed." It was made by Erich von Stroheim for Goldwyn.

Small Bruce Guerin is counting the days until Hallowe'en, for on that eventful evening not only will ghosts rap on the window-panes, but he is going to give the grandest party of his four years of life. Forty guests, mostly kiddies, have been invited and Bruce and sister Marjorie are bubbling over with excitement and plans. Daddy Guerin, who is head technician at a local studio, has promised to run off some comedy reels but further details of the fun Bruce says are a secret. He's mighty glad the Warner Brothers, who have his services under long-term contract, have given him a between-pictures vacation and he's hoping they won't call him back to the studio until after the momentous evening.

Harry O. Hoyt, deserts the scenario department for the megaphone. He is to direct "The Woman On the Jury," a First National picturization of the emotional stage play.

Ralph Lewis has received his first fan letter from South America. It came from Chili where "The Birth of a Nation," which was first shown in Los Angeles eight years ago is being exhibited for the first time.

The letter congratulates husky Ralph on his characterization of Stoneman in Griffith's masterpiece.

Will Film In Boston

New England has agreed to open its treasures of Revolutionary relics to motion pictures, and D. W. Griffith has gone to Boston with 150 members of his staff and players to photograph the incidents of the early war on the actual sites; for his next production "America."

By arrangement with several of the historical societies including in particular the Lexington Historical Society, the weapons, drums, costumes, vehicles, etc., used during the war will be used in the action. It will be the first time these articles have ever been shown to the world through motion pictures.

Battle scenes will be taken on the famous Lexington Common, where the historic "shot heard round the world" was fired. Buckman's tavern and the Adams house where John Hancock and John Adams were sleeping on the night the British came, will be used as settings.

The action under Griffith's direction will continue along the road to Concord where the battle of the bridge will be fought. It is Griffith's intention that all scenes shall be taken on actual sites excepting where improvements prohibit, but in every action some photographs of the actual site will be included.

Corinne Griffith finishes her "Black Oxen" part and has gone to Mineral Springs, Texas, to visit the home folks. She returns in two weeks to star in "Lillies of the Field."

Ward Wing is directing a picture at the R-C Studios that he started several months ago at the Universal Studios and which was temporarily postponed on account of the illness of Lillian Marshall, playing the feminine lead. It is a story of studio life, in which thirty well-known stars appear. Wing is playing the juvenile, with Miss Marshall as feminine lead. Robert Marks is playing the juvenile heavy, and Priscilla Bonner is enacting the role of the ingenue. Some of the celebrities appearing in the picture are Herbert Rawlinson, Priscilla Dean, Wallace Beery, Ramond Hatton, Kathlyn Williams, Grace Darmond, Gladys Walton, Hoot Gibson, Clyde Fillmore, Mahlon Hamilton, Neely Edwards, Roy Stewart, Reginald Denny, and Estelle Taylor.

For the first time in a long list of screen successes, Lon Chaney is appearing on the screen without unusual make-up, costuming or physical distortion.

With Conway Tearle and Dorothy Marshall, Chaney is playing one of the important roles in Sam Wood's production for Paramount of "The Next Corner," Kate Jordan's best-seller which Monte Katterjohn has adapted to the screen..

Vera Steadman, Christie comedy leading lady, is back from her trip to New York. She will return to films as Bobby Vernon's lead in a new film.

Eugenie Besserer, character actress who has just completed the role of Marty in "Anna Christie," was Margaret Anglin's understudy prior to commencing her film career, 13 years ago.

Pola Negri finally has deserted the haunts of the Parisian Apache after three weeks spent in their company—at Paramounts's West Coast studio.

For several weeks the famous Polish star has been playing in the Herbert Brenon production of "Mon Homme," the French play by Andre Picard which Eve Unsell adapted to the screen. All of the opening scenes of the picture and much of the action of the story occurs in the underground haunts of the Parisian criminal which have been duplicated faithfully by the studio artisans. Now after nearly a month spent in this setting, the story has reached the point where the cast desert the Apache settings for the luxury of a modern Parisian home. Charle de Roche, Huntley Gordon and Adolphe Menjou are featured in support of the star.

The latest picture convert among the juvenile class is Mervyn LeRoy, who, unlike his now famous contemporary, Merton, has found it unnecessary to crash studio gates as an extra. LeRoy, late of the well-known vaudeville team LeRoy and Cooper, has definitely decided upon the screen for a future. His proven ability as a performer has done much to further his progress before the camera.

He will soon be seen in "Little Johnnie Jones."

Mildred Booth, recently of Honolulu (not a native), is a newcomer on the Hal Roach lot. She will be seen in several forth-coming Will Rogers productions.

SHOW SPIRIT OF "GET THERE

"I think the greatest thing a producer can do in making pictures other things such as entertainment value being equal," says Bryan Washburn, "is to get into the action the spirit of 'get there.'

"When one reflects that millions of young men and women in addition to their elders, see the pictures, it is impossible to avoid realizing how much they must be influenced by what they see. I know that when I was getting started, dreaming dreams of the future, every story, play, picture or article I saw or read and which had the spirit of energy and stick-to-itiveness well developed, proved an inspiration. That's the kind of food I want my own boys to digest."

"So, in my pictures I hope to include as frequently as possible, this buoyant spirit, the spirit of youth of dreams of great things to come. In "Try and Get It," my first production, which Cullen Tate directed, I am a young bill collector in a printing office. I am sent to collect an impossible bill by the boss—as a test. I get the spirit of determination, or do-or-die—and win out. That's what I mean. Others may see and do likewise. And all the time the audiences are being entertained."

Harold Shaw Acts as Own Research Department for "The Living Past"

Harold Shaw is not only directing "The Living Past," one of Metro's new special productions, he also is acting as head of his own research department.

The locale of the story is laid in Russia and England. Mr. Shaw spent the greater part of the last ten years of his life directing in England and other countries of Europe, including Russia, and is qualified to pass expert judgment on every detail of picture making regarding those countries and the customs of their people.

Hardly an hour of the day passes that he is not asked to give his opinion regarding the correctness of a British automobile license plate, the uniform of an officer of the Russian army, the furnishings of a London apartment and a thousand and one other details. In one case he is fortunate for most of the members of the cast are thoroughly familiar with continental ways and people. Alec Francis, Lionel Belmore and D. R. O. Hatswell, are natives of London, Enid Bennett is an Australian where British customs prevail, Harry Northrup was born in Paris and has traveled extensively in Europe, William Humphrey directed pictures in England several years, Mary Alden has traveled in Europe and so has Lorimer Johnston. Harrison Ford, who has the lead role, is the only one whose experiences have been limited in geographical scope to America.

Victor Schertzinger directs Hobart Bosworth in "The Man Whom Life Passed By," a new Metro all-star special. Victor Herman directed him in "Rupert of Hentzau," and Victor Seastrom was his director in "The Judge and the Woman." Now, Hobart thinks that if he can appear in a picture directed by Victor Flemming his Victor-y will be complete.

Harry D. Brown, supervising engineer of the Hollywood Studios, has been selected from all of the electricians in the industry, to have charge of the lighting effects for the annual ball of the screen cameramen (American Society of Cinematographers), at the Biltmore Hotel on October 27th. Brown promises to put on some jazz lighting, which will surprise the dancers.

Harrison Ford, whose forte is roles in which he appears in all the regalia of a gentleman of leisure, dons a chauffeur's uniform for the first time, for his role in "The Living Past," a new Metro all-star special which Harold Shaw is directing.

General Isaac R. Sherwood, the highest ranking Union veteran who fought in the Battle of Franklin, and Colonel John A. Fite, the highest ranking Confederate officer who participated in that bloody event and is now alive, are assisting Allen Holubar in filming the battle of Franklin, at Franklin, Tennessee, for "The Human Mill," Holubar's first big Metro production.

Kiddies nowadays know how to demand their rights. Little Bruce Guerin, during his between-pictures vacation from the Warner Brothers studio, has been posing for innumerable publicity-photographs, wearing the latest fashions for youngsters of his age, playing with toys of all kinds. In each instance he was presented with a sample of the article by the company, granted permission to use his photograph and, looking over his assortment of toys, Bruce decided it wasn't a half-bad way to spend a vacation. But once something went wrong with the scheme. After posing for automobile-pictures, he politely waited for the usual presentation, which failed to come, then demanded, "Don't I get this nice big shiny automobile for a sample?" However, a week later there came from the motor concern a tiny replica of their famous costly model, complete even to the speedometer except that it is run by pedal-power instead of gasoline, and just big enough for one four-year-old boy.

Parallel Sire's Triumphs

As most everybody knows, Willie Collier, Jr., is the son of Willie Collier, Sr., and, also, as most everybody agrees, the latter is the greatest farceur of the American stage. Many are willing to agree that the son is destined to achieve an equal rank as an exponent of the silent drama. Each succeeding production in which Willie, the Second, appears seems to inspire the leading critics to augment their enthusiasm in predicting great things for him. Now, according to advance reports, this descendant of a stageland favorite has surpassed all of his previous screen efforts in Reginald Barker's latest production, "Pleasure Mad." As the son of parents suddenly lifted from poverty into the highest social whirl through an unexpected acquisition of wealth, he is given opportunities to show the versatility for which he is already famous and his performance is proclaimed one of the "good things" in this picture.

When Willie, Jr., decided to follow in the footsteps of his distinguished father, it became a question in his mind as to what road led to a goal approaching in importance the one his sire had long held. He felt there were too many limitations on the stage—he had the urge to leap about, to reach out, to be a lot of different places in the same play. Consequently, he chose the screen as his field and after making an auspicious debut in a New York-made feature and following it with other successes, he hurried to Southern California, the mecca for all photo-players. From the day of his arrival he has been kept busy, and his star is now high in the firmament.

Victor Schertzinger, who is directing "The Man Whom Life Passed By," was at one time musical director for such famous stage artists as Calve and Nordica.

ASSEMBLE THEDA BARA UNIT

B. P. Fineman, who is producing the picture that brings Theda Bara back to the screen, announces the acquisition of two of film-land's leaders in the persons of Tod Browning and Paul Bern, who will act respectively as the director and scenarist.

Browning recently completed the production of "The Day of Faith," one of Goldwyn's most ambitious productions for the coming releases of the season. Prior to this engagement he spent several years at Universal where he made "The Virgin of Stamboul," "Outside the Law," and a number of other exceedingly successful films.

Paul Bern stands without a doubt in the very topmost ranks of his profession of editor, author and scenarist. He is the only man in his line who is thoroughly acquainted by personal experience with every angle of motion picture production, from the laboratory up to the director's work on the set. Until recently Bern was editor-in-chief of the Goldwyn studios, where he himself provided the scenarios for "The Christian" and "Masters of Men." Subsequently he adapted "The Wanters," John Stahl's latest completed production, and also for "The Marriage Circle," which Lubitsch is now filming at Warner Bros. studio.

With these two men as a nucleus, Fineman is rapidly completing his production organization, and will soon announce the cast that will support Miss Bara in her most ambitious screen vehicle.

Leon Rice, President of The Mission Film Corporation, announces the completion of the story for the next all-star feature. It is from the pen of H. H. Van Loan, the well-known writer, and is entitled "FLATTERY."

The continuity is now being written by Mr. E. R. Schayer in collaboration with Mr. Van Loan.

Production will begin in the very near future according to Mr. Rice.

The Creator took the spirit of discontent and installed it in a body of laziness; He gave it the attitude of a snob, the constant sneer of contempt, a desire to shirk responsibility and a certain skill at getting by in the world. Its characteristics became wilfulness, selfishness, venomous backbiting and greed. And He named it a WANTER.

Then He took the glowing light of happiness, combined it with emotion, placed it in a body of activity and imbued it with honesty. He gave it the ability to achieve and the magnetism that draws friends. He blessed it with strong character, integrity and loyalty, instilled it with the power of development and intellectual progress endowed it with the viewpoint of an optimist and called it a WORKER.

To celebrate the completion of "What Next," his second Universal picture under the direction of Hy Mayer, George K. Arthur drove to Santa Barbara for the week end. He was accompanied by Mrs. Arthur, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Brest and Mrs. Arthur's sister, Miss Lloyd, all from London, who are his house guests. On his return, Mr. Arthur will start his third film, as yet unnamed.

Fred Jackman, who directed Hal Roach's latest feature production, "Rex, King of Wild Horses," is standing by while his film is being assembled in continuity. The story is the first of its kind ever filmed. A wild stallion plays one of the principal roles. In the cast are Marie Mosquini, Leon Bary, Edna Murphy, Frank Butler, Sidney d'Albrook, Louise Fazenda, Charles Chase, Patsy Hartigan and Sidney de Grey.

Dot Farley is going to make her eyes behave.

"No more cross-eyed parts for me!" says the erstwhile Mack Sennett actress whose kitter-corner optics have appeared on the screen opposite Ben Turpin's with such regularity that picture fans have become inclined to believe Dot's eyes were born that way.

Fact is Miss Farley is the possessor of a pair of very beautiful brown eyes and they are straight as a die—except when she chooses to cross them for professional purposes.

Years ago she learned the trick of crossing her eyes at will. "But it gave me such a headache and the strain has somewhat weakened them," she says. "I'm afraid if I keep it up any longer they might 'freeze' that way."

From the Sennett comedy lot she has turned to serious drama and will soon be seen in "Misunderstood," a screen play based on Booth Tarkington's human interest drama. This picture is now being produced by J. K. McDonald for First National. William Beaudine is directing and the cast includes: Henry B. Walthall, Irene Rich, Rockliffe Fellowes, Ben Alexander, Dot Farley and Lawrence Licalzi.

Miss Farley's work as the cross-eyed "Maid Marion" in "Rob 'em Good" and "Where is My Wandering Boy This Evening" will long be remembered by lovers of screen comedy.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS, it is rumored, will return to the screen after several months absence, the early part of next year.

Milton Sills and Wallace MacDonald, now appearing in "Angel Face Molly," Viola Dana's new Metro release, seem to be emulating Damon and Pythias. They have appeared together in their last three consecutive pictures, although each was filmed at a different studio.

REAVES "BREEZY" EASON is shooting spectacular buffalo hunt scenes in Canada for a forthcoming Thomas H. Ince special of the early West.

Hunchback of Notre Dame," the new spectacle production. Now he has entered the ranks of directors and his first picture will "tell the tale." It was written by himself, continuity by Raymond L. Schrock.

Sheehan has been given what studio officials say is the most complete staff ever assigned to a unit. Jack Sullivan, the crack assistant director of the studio, who handled the crowds in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "Merry-Go-Round," is his assistant. Ralph Dietrick, one of the best known cutters, has been assigned to cut the picture, and is sitting through production as script secretary by day and cutting at night, armed with his own intimate knowledge of every "shot." The picture is being cut as it progresses, so that when the last scene is taken the whole picture will be complete ready to show, this being one of several innovations in Sheehan's method of production.

The famous novelist is rehearsing the players just as they are rehearsed for a stage play; then entire sequences are "shot" without pause. The saving of time is incredible. A notable cast is playing in the new Sheehan vehicle, including Howard Truesdell, Gladys Hulette, Edgar Kennedy and others.

Even boards and plaster must at some time pay their farewell tribute to art.

After three years of gracing one of the green canyons of Universay City the famous Italian Villa built during the summer of 1920 for "Foolish Wives," was burned to the ground for a big scene in "Hook and Ladder," Hoot Gibson's latest starring feature.

The Villa is one of the largest individual building sets ever constructed for a motion picture and its classic beauty has made it a landmark on the Universal lot. Universal technical men unfortunate enough to have a streak of sentiment were sad as the flames ate thru the wooden framework and the stucco finish crumbled to ashes.

Its burning finished one of the most spectacular night scenes filmed at Universal City in many a month. For a sheer thrilling spectacle it even eclipsed the night shots of the mammoth sets of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

The scenes came as a dramatic climax to the story, which is built around the thrilling life of a fireman and a dozen cameras ground out their action as Hoot in the role of the fireman climbed to the balcony of the burning building and rescued the tiny Mildred June and leaped with her from the balcony to the fireman net below.

"Hook and Ladder" is an original story by Edward Sedgwick, who is directing the filming of the picture.

Others in the cast are Edwards Davis, famous preacher-actor, Philo McCullough and Frank Beal.

With four car loads of equipment including two mammoth electric generators, dozens of Winfield lights, giant sun arcs and spot lights, and a full-sized collapsible "signal tower," the Clarence L. Brown special pulled out of the Southern Pacific station for Fort Bragg, 150 miles north of San Francisco, where many of the scenes for "The Signal Tower" will be filmed under his direction.

Brown is accompanied by a cast of seven persons and a production unit of more than twenty workmen, including electricians, technical men and carpenters. Charlie Dorian, Brown's veteran assistant who has "second Megaphoned" all of the Brown productions, will be in charge of the crew. Ernst Laemmle is second assistant.

"The Signal Tower," Wadsworth Camp's prize short story, will be produced by Universal with Virginia Valli and an all-star cast.

"The Signal Tower" is probably the greatest tribute to the self-sacrifice and devotion to duty of railroad men that was ever written. It is a drama of life in the raw, of people with their feet on the ground, a graphic story of how the threads of civilization's destiny pass thru the fingers of skilled men who glimpse that civilization only thru the clicking of telegraph instruments and the passing of "thru trains."

Brown was entrusted with the making of the picture shortly after Universal heads had seen the completed film of "The Acquittal," which he recently directed. This screen version of the famous stage play by Rita Weiman will undoubtedly be classed as one of the finest pictures of the coming year. Other big productions which have stamped Brown's work as of exceptional merit are "The Great Redeemer" and "The Last of the Mohicans" which he made jointly with Maurice Tourneur.

"The Signal Tower" which is to be released as a multiple reel feature, will require nine or ten weeks in the making.

Herbert Rawlinson has abandoned the athletic swing of his natural walk, now patrolling a set at Universal City in the measured, flat-footed gait of a uniformed policeman.

He has begun work on his latest Universal starring vehicle, "The Jack O' Clubs" an adaptation from the famous magazine story of the same name by Gerald Beaumont. In this picture Rawlinson slips out of the groove of jaunty roles for which he is so well known for the most difficult bit of characterization that he has essayed in a long time.

His role is that of an easy natured Irish cop who is transformed into a whirlwind fighting machine when he is crowded on the beat by a hard boiled street gang, led by a tough gentleman who used to be a prize fighter. This gentleman and the Irish cop stage a sensational encounter and the cop wins the fight, promotion in rank and the regard of the boys.

Since Eddie Gribbon is cast for the "ex-pug," the screen fight should prove exceptionally realistic. Both Rawlinson and Gribbon are clever boxers and husky lads.

Robert Hill, who guided the filming of Rawlinson's last picture, "His Mystery Girl," will direct the new vehicle.

Others in the supporting cast are Ruth Dwyer, Johnny Fox, Jr., and Joe Singleton.

An old time tandem bicycle—the kind the song "A Bicycle Built for Two" was written around two decades and more ago, is one of the queer sights of the old Bowery, seen in "Morality," Owen Kildare's famous story "My Mamie Rose," being filmed at Universal City with Mary Philbin as the star. The Bowery is reproduced complete in every detail at Universal City for the picture, even to the elevated tracks and queer old-time steam trains that were used before electricity came into popular use. The old fashioned bicycle bloomers seen in the early Charles Dana Gibson, is revived with the bike itself. Gladys Johnson appears as the bloomer girl, in queer little hat and wide bloomers embellished by brass buttons. She rides over the cobbles on the odd "safety" then the very last word in modern conveyance. The story is laid in the immediate "pre-auto mobile" period,, when the bicycle was the rage and the "horseless carriage" a rumored invention in France. Later in the story the first automobile to appear in the streets of New York is shown; a queer buggy like affair steered by a lever and propelled by a "one lunger" motor much like a modern pumping engine.

Irving Cummings, picture director, has a fine eye for brewery trucks. Incidentally the hardest task, almost, that he faced in putting the picture on the screen, was the quest of the obsolete and interesting vehicle.

Cummings' order for a brewery truck brought to Universal City a modern motor truck. It rejected it, and a horse-drawn truck was substituted but this too was modern. Finally, after a long search, he found an old time brewery truck in a livery stable. The wagons were simply rows of heavy pipe, arranged to hold the barrels, mounted on truck wheels. The quaint old vehicle is one of many interesting bits of antique transportation on the Bowery as reproduced at the studio.

Albert J. Smith, actor and inventor, proved a "pinch hitter" when the oldest automobile in America broke down during the production.

The ancient contraption, first automobile to be seen on the streets of New York, and a one cylindered affair, immediately proceeded to break down.

Mechanics from the transportation tinkered with the obsolete engine, but couldn't get a wheeze out of it. Finally Smith, who plays the young engineer in "The Fast Express," William Duncan's railroad chapterplay happened by.

"Let me try," he volunteered. He manipulated a pair of pliers for a while, gave the crank a twist, and the relic of the automobile's infancy coughed and came to life.

"You see, when I was a kid my father had one, and I used to keep it in order," he explained. "Whenever they jolt around the dry battery that gives them their spark gets shorted. I just pried the wires away from the engine and wrapped some tire-taps around 'em."

Anyhow, he saved the Bowery scene.

—Just what makes a funny thing funny?

Psychologists have tried to answer the question;—but either frankly gave it up, or produced some formula rivalling Einstein's theory of relativity for complication.

Cartoonists and comedians went at it in a more practical way. They made things that made folks laugh;—they knew what would make people snicker even if they couldn't just analyze the why of it; much as today we will use electricity, but none of us know just what it is.

And now comes Hy Myer, world-celebrated cartoonist, and paradox of the pen, with a procedure that perhaps will do more to answer the question than anyone else. Hy Mayer, for the last quarter century a famous artist;—a humorist of pictures, has turned his art to the screen in a manner startling in its originality. He makes his cartoons live on the screen;—not by animated drawings, but by "fading" his cartoons into real actors and actresses, in a new brand of comedy he calls the "May Cartoon Comedy" for want of a more descriptive title. The famous humorist has arrived at Universal City, has completed the first of his unique offerings and is engaged on more. They are the talk of the studio—and they will probably be the talk of psychologists studying the mystery of the whyfore of a laugh when they are released. His first film creation, in one reel, was "The Travelaughs,"—Rothafel calls it the best one-reel creation, and they were run as a feature at the Capitol Theater in New York.

But—and this is the principal thing the public is interested in—their great importance lies in that they have brought a new, but none the less hilarious brand of comedy to light.

Hy Mayer is a cosmopolite. His cartoons have appeared in every paper in the United States. They are equally well-known in London's "Punch," in Paris' "Le Rire," in Germany's "Fliegende Blaetter," "The New York Times," and in "Puck," of which he was art editor for years, and the countless American syndicates have broadcasted Hy Mayer pictorial humor for years. Now he's in Hollywood, drawing and directing his own pictures.

They are odd—these pictures. Hy Mayer's hand appears in his wonderful flowing style and sketches a figure in pen and ink—then it dissolves into a human being—the idea of the cartoon is carried out in action—then again the hand draws another picture and again it comes to life. His drawings, while grotesque are always decorative. His types never repeat themselves.

But even more interesting than his pictures is the man himself. Hy Mayer has drawn cartoons for years but has always been known as the cartoonist whose arrows were never dipped in poison. Never has the unpleasant flavored his huge output. He never attacks;—even the political celebrities he has lampooned were always able to laugh with him. On the New York Times, for instance, for years he lampooned Theodore Roosevelt. Finally he was brought to the White House. Roosevelt greeted him with a smile and outstretched hand. He kept the cartoonist with him for hours, introduced him to dozens of famous national leaders, and exultantly retailed this or that point in Mayer's cartoons—all printed in a paper opposed to him, but never a one with aught but a wholesome laugh in it;—not acting. Hy Myer is essentially an inventor; Rupert Hughes years ago lauded him as the most versatile man in the history of carricature.

Hy Mayer was the first man to draw under the camera—twelve years ago he started drawing political cartoons for the screen. Later came his "animated weekly," and all the time in the cartoonist's brain was hatching and evolving his present comedies as he is making them for Universal. Once he happened to tell his old friend Carl Laemmle about his idea, and the picture magnate hailed it with interest. Since then he has been adding more and more to the idea. Laemmle waited and let him evolve the plan. Finally it was announced as ready—and Hy Myer came to Universal City to start his new series.

Your Question------ and its answer

QUESTION—"In acute diseases, such as fevers, colds, inflammations, etc., can you always locate nerve pressure as the cause of the disease?"

ANSWER—Yes, and much more readily than in chronic cases. And desired results are more quickly realized. The human body is a living mechanical nerve machine, liable to become injured by accidents, shocks, jars, falls and twists, which may displace some vertebrae in the spine. In all acute ailments, the displaced vertebrae has existed but a short time and degeneration of tissue and depletion of nerve strength has not taken effect, therefore, the causative condition requires less adjusting to correct than in the chronic ailments. The longer we practice Chiropractic the more convinced we become that if we could get all the acute, bed-side cases, there would be no chronics to need our aid.

THOSE WITHOUT FAITH

". . . No matter what happens to you, no matter who flatters you or who abuses you, never look at another flag, never let a night pass but you pray God to bless that flag. Remember, boy, that behind all these men you have to do with, behind officers and government, and people even, there is the Country Herself, your Country, and that you belong to her as you belong to your own mother. Stand by Her, boy. . . ."

Thus, through the pen of Edward Everrett Hale, spoke "The Man Without a Country." Many years previous in a fit of rage and while in a drunken stupor he had expressed the desire that he might never again hear of his country, nor read about it or have contact with it in any way, and his wish was granted. Finally, after years of miserable exile, toward the sunset of his life, he gave vent to his feelings, and the above excerpt from his oration showed what time and experience had done to restore his right thought in matters pertaining to patriotism. He started out as a "knocker;" he belittled his country before a group of aliens, only to eventually realize the utter folly of his declarations. Time and exile had mercifully tempered his spirit, and at last his stubborn will broke down and he expressed his true devotion for his native land.

There are many similar to "The Man Without a Country" in motion pictures. We know them as pessimists and grouches. They stand on the corners and wildly exclaim that the movies are headed for eternal damnation because so-and-so didn't have jobs for them that day. They are proud enough to accept the motion picture industry as a place to earn their livelihood, yet they go forth into the world and denounce all the high ideals and principles cherished by the people of the profession. And when a studio does close down for a time, or when they encounter hard luck along the film road they immediately sally out to their friends and jeer and hoot at the movies as a substantial, worth-while enterprise. They are confident enough that the coal strike in Pennsylvania will break up, or that the railroad strike in some other place will be settled satisfactorily but they don't hold out any hopes whatsoever for motion pictures. They are people without faith in their own work. In belittling motion pictures and the people who make them they are simply belittling themselves. Have they no self-respect? Possibly not, but it is more probable that they are without faith in their chosen profession; that to them pictures are but their meal tickets and no further useful. To them we would say; remember that behind all these men you have to do with, behind producers and studios, behind the people even, there is the Motion Picture Art Itself, and that you belong to it as you belong to your own mother. Stand by it; give it the best you've got in you, boost it, defend it, apply all your talents and energies to further its great work. Maintain your faith in motion pictures, and instill respect for it and for you in your fellow men.

Lyle Rucker, prominent Hollywood corporation attorney who for some time past has specialized in motion picture law work, has entered the film field in the capacity of producer, and as the active head of Radiograms, Inc., he is now producing and releasing a series of weekly news-reels giving a comic slant on the world's news. These productions consist, for the greater part, of titles alone and pictures are not brought into use to any great extent.

Mr. Rucker has been established here for the past eight years and is today representing some of the foremost figures in the motion picture world in a legal and advisory capacity. That he has the fullest confidence in the film business is brought out by this investment on his part. He has just released his first production and it has been accorded the plaudits of famous folk in every branch of the industry.

This Week's Theatre Notes

George Bernard Shaw's presentation of "Androcles and the Lion" opens the new Fine Arts Theater this week.

Mable Norman remains another week to entertain Mission Theater audiences, "The Acquittal," which was scheduled to start this week will open November 12th.

This week is destined to be a big week in local theatrical history for several reasons.

One is that it will present to Los Angeles the world premiere of Emmett Flynn's magnificent spectacle, "In the Palace of the King," a picturization of F. Marion Crawfords historical romance at the California Theater.

Another is that is marks the return to the screen of Blanche Sweet, one of the most popular of all screen celebrities in the role of Delores Mendoza, heroine of this delightful romance, and a part very similar to that of Judith in Griffith's "Judith of Bethulia," the first spectacular production ever filmed.

A third reason is the fact that Edmund Lowe is seen in the heroic role of DonJohn. . Mr. Loew's former stock engagements here marked him as the most popular matinee idol of his day.

The final reason is that this is the fourth of Emmett Elynn's productions to have its world premiere here. The other three were "A Connecticut Yankee," "Monte Cristo" and "A Fool There was." All the members of the cast as well as a large part of the cinema stars, directors and authors of the film world will be present at performances throughout the week.

He went to bed a wealthy nobleman, he woke up a beggar.

He owned a gorgeous palace and a suit of pajamas, or to be exact, a night shirt, and owed many debts.

Antonio Moreno, who plays the role of Don Caesar de Bazan, in Pola Negri's new picture, "The Spanish Dancer," experienced this predicament and while the palace was an ancestral building and the night robe of finest silk with the crest of his house embroidered on the font, it must be admitted these articles were hardly sufficient for a nobleman's existence.

While Antonio sleeps following a gay dinner with his friends, his creditors enter his palace and carry off everything it contains just because, in his merriment, he had neglected to pay his bills. Life was certainly difficult during those gay old days of King Philip IV's reign in Spain. Of course, Tony takes it in the same carefree manner in which he met all the weighty problems and doesn't care a bit and gives the part a debonnir, dashing and delightful portrayal.

"The Spanish Dancer," now showing at Grauman's Rialto, is a picturesque costume drama with a very strong story of love, intrigue and human interest that builds to a suprise climax, turning a tragic episode into a clever bit of comedy.

Pola Negri, as the spirited Gypsy maid, Maritana, offers a remarkable performance, giving freely of her great art.

Others in the cast to distinguish themselves are Wallace Berry as King Philip, with an eye to the beauty of his girlish subjects, Kathlyn Williams, his queenly consort, Adolphe Menjou as the scheming Salluste, and Gareth Hughes in the role of the pathetic lad, Lazarillo. All four roles are important and give ample scope for the actors.

Comedy in its numerous and forms will feature this week's bill at the Hillstreet Theatre. Heading the aggregation of funsters will be the celebrated equestrian comedian, "Poodles" Hannaford. For years the famous Hannaford family have been the premier riders in circuses and "Poodles" himself was the feature attraction with one of America's greatest shows for simetime. Although being considered the finest trick rider of his kind in America, "Poodles" manages to use a clown make-up and give the children a thrill along with his entertainment for the older folks. He is using two horses in his act which are the envy of every circus man in the world, they are his own and have been trained by him ever since their infancy.

Flo Lewis, the original redheaded flapper, will split headline honors with Hannaford. Flo who is a singer and story teller with a vivacious and captivating personality will offer her act "From Bernhardt to Heartburn" with the assistance of Jesse Greer at the piano.

Frank Dixon will appear in a humorous sketch by Paul Gerard Smith called "Lonesome Manor."

Maurice Diamond, premier eccentric dancer of America, with Edythe Handman, singer and Irene Smith, dancer, will offer his latest, "The Snapshots of 1923."

Russell Carr, the famous English ventriloquist, and his comical assistant "Orace" will present a military ventriloquial act.

Completing the vaudeville will be Polly and Oz two youthful musicians and singers in their act, "Syncopated Melody."

The feature photoplay will be Shirley Mason in "Lovebound." Other features on the program will be Allan Hall and the Tiny Symphony, "The Steel Trail" a William Duncan chapter-play, a 'Snub"' Pollard comedy, Hillstreet International News and Aesop's Fables.

Edward Everett Horton who has been a big favorite in stock and on the screen here opens this week at the Orpheum Theater in a playlet written for him by Joseph Jackson, "A Play With a Punch." With him are Marie Walcamp a local screen star and Richard Stilling.

Woman Power Behind Rellimeo

Among the people who are coming to the front of the picture world by leaps and bounds these days, is Grace Sanderson Michie, head of the scenario department of the Rellimeo Films. For she holds the unique distinction of being largely responsible for the making of three big pictures in six months.

The Rellimeo Films are a San Francisco organization, but all three of their pictures have been made in Hollywood, the first at the Universal Studio, and the other two at the Principal Pictures studio now under lease by the Rellimeo company.

Grace Sanderson Michie is a real Californian, her grandfather having been Mayor of San Francisco for several terms, and her family long leading citizens of the state. Mrs. Michie has written all her life, in fact she says she can't remember when she didn't write, and she was just nine years old when she sold her first story to St. Nickolaus for the huge sum of five dollars. Her earliest adventure into the picture world was several years ago as the author of "The Finger Of Justice," with which film she also made personal appearances in all the larger cities of America for almost two years.

It is only a little over six months since the Rellimeo Films were organized and Grace and her husband Gordon Michie, business manager of the company came to Hollywood to start production. Their first picture, "Defying Destiny," was made from an original story by Mrs. Michie, for which she also did the continuity, and on which she acted as co-director. The picture was given to the world in September under the Selznick banner. It was promptly followed by "Eight Bucks" made from a story by Fred Windamere, its director, but on which Mrs. Michie did the continuity, the casting and again co-directed. The latest picture just completed, and the most pretentious production of the company is "The Yellow Stigma". Again the whole story and continuity came from Grace Sanderson Michie's busy brain, and from all accounts it bids fair to be one of the big outstanding pictures of the year. So by hard work and real accomplishment Grace Michie is winning for herself a niche of her own in the hall of cinema fame.

The Universal Megaphone

By Arthur Q. Hagerman

Under King Baggot's supervision Thomas Pratt is completing the final editing of "Blackmail," the all star Universal production which Baggot directed recently. "Blackmail" was adapted from "The Co-Respondent," Rita Weiman's play, and will present a cast including Ruth Clifford, Niles Welsh, John Merkyl, Charles Clary, William E. Lawrence, Herbert Fortier, Arthur Howard, Hayden Stevenson, Mary Mersch, Joseph North, Emily Fitzroy, Jane Starr and Carl Stockdale.

"Hook and Ladder," Hoot Gibson's newest Universal starring vehicle, directed by Edward Sedgwick from his own story, has been edited at Universal City and is receiving its final set of titles. According to studio executives this is the best Gibson feature up to date. It is a story of the thrills, human interest experiences and general activities in a fireman's life. Mildred June played opposite Gibson.

Jack Hoxie says that the wide open spaces are friendly, that he feels like a stranger in the white light of the Winfields.

He declares he can emote better to the barking of coyotes than to the tune of studio organs.

The Universal western star has been on location so much of late that he is having to get acquainted all over again at the studio where he is now doing interior scenes for his latest picture, "The Phantom Rider."

Hoxie spent many weeks on the edge of Death Valley and in the Sierra Nevada mountains near Lone Pine during the making of "Wyoming" and recently returned to the studio from Keen's camp where exterior scenes of the present production were filmed.

Robert North Bradbury is directing "The Phantom Rider," a story of a northwest lumber war, written by Isadore Bernstein of the scenario staff.

Supporting the star are Lillian Rich, Neil McKinnon and Wade Boteler and Billy McCall.

Gladys Hulette, praised in preview comments for her work in the adult feminine lead with Baby Peggy in "The Burglar's Kid," is playing at Universal City again. This time she is in an all star production that will be remembered in the history of the Universal Pictures corporation—and of filmland for that matter—for it is the first directorial effort of Perley Poore Sheehan, novelist and screen writer. Sheehan, who adapted "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" to the screen, is directing his own original story, scenarized by Raymond L. Schrock. It is temporarily titled "Innocent."

Besides Miss Hulette, who is playing the role of a mountaineer girl in the psychological backwoods drama, Howard Truesdell, Robert Gordon, Ed Kennedy, Margaret Seddon, Lon Poff, Charles Cruz and Norman Kankon have principal roles.

Several prominent members of the American Legion, enroute home from the fifth annual convention at San Francisco, visited Universal City, production center of the Universal Pictures corporation, a day or two ago. Included in the party were Russell G. Greviston, assistant national adjutant, Garland W. Powell, director of the national Americanism committee, Peyton Hogue, member of the same committee, and C. Willard Cooper, associate editor of the Legion Weekly. Ross Watson, Los Angeles real estate man and prominent in Legion activities, conducted them to Universal City where William Koenig, business manager, and Irving Cummings and King Baggot, directors, acted as their hosts.

Among the week's prominent visitors at Universal City, center of production of the Universal corporation, was Chester Wright, aide to Samuel Gompers and head of the publicity department of the American Federation of Labor. He was formerly editor of the New York Call. He was shown the Universal studios by William Koenig, business manager.

Many years ago Carl Laemmle, now president of the Universal Pictures corporation, gave a watch and chain to a man who played a vaudeville act in one of Mr. Laemmle's earliest theaters. The Laemmle theater was showing the new moving pictures and was one step ahead of other theaters it hat it had a combined bill instead of the usual "nickelodeon" policy of straight pictures.

Recently this man visited Universal City and talked with Mr. Laemmle about the changes that have taken place in the film industry and the theatrical business, since those early days. In the midst of the conversation the visitor, playing the Orpheum circuit as "Senator Murphy" drew something out of his pocket and said:

"Mr. Laemmle, did you ever see this before,"

"Mr. Murphy, I'd recognize that watch if it was hanging among a hundred others on a pawnshop wall," said Mr. Laemmle. "It recalls a great many things that were happening in those days."

Naturally enough the conversation hung closely around the period of the gift and old days were discussed at great length.

Special songs for special sets are the thing at Universal City.

Edward Sedgwick has one, written by himself, for Hoot Gigson, "My Mamie Rose" is sung on the Irving Cummings set—and now the inspirational orchestra has launched one on the set where Perley Poore Sheehan, the famous novelist, is directing his own story "Innocent."

Jack Sullivan, the man who handled the Condelaurier Ball scenes in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and the great crowd scenes in the Hugo picture and in "Merry-Go--Round" is Sheehan's first assistant. The two were consulting on the set when the orchestra started up a tilting air, and an actor's quartet warbled "Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Sheehan"—a filmized version of the Gallagher and Shean melody. There are a million or so verses—one for every trial and tribulation the company has been beset with. Here's a sample:

"Oh Mr. Sullivan—Oh Mr. Sullivan—
Here's another gag I want to pull on you;
We've a scene upon this set—one I bet you'll ne'er forget;
And it's bound to thrill Carl Laemmle through and through!
Oh Mr. Sheehan—Oh Mr. Sheehan—
I believe I can recall the scene you mean;—
The hero saves the girl from harm
And then falls down and breaks an arm—
Who? Ed Kennedy, Mr. Sullivan?
No—His double, Mr. Sheehan!"

King Baggot, director of the recently completed all star feature for Universal, "Blackmail," a newspaper life story, and who has made some of the best known pictures in Universal's history, will direct the next Universal-Jewel starring vehicle of Mary Philbin's the "Merry-Go-Round" girl.

The first Philbin starring vehicle to follow up her success in "Merry-Go--Round" is just being completed. It is "My Mamie Rose" a story of the New York Bowery of 1895, adapted from Owen Kildare's Novel. Irving cummings is shooting the final scenes with Pat O'Malley, William Collier, Jr., Max Davidson, Charlie Murray, Kate Price, Edwin Brady, Lincoln Plumer, and other noted players in support of the new star.

The Baggot-directed feature will be based on "The Inheritors," a novel by I. A. R. Wylie. The story is laid in England of today, and will be the first effort of Mary Philbin in a role that is not in back-period "costume" atmosphere. Bernard McConville, supervising editor of Jewel productions, made the adaptation, and Frank Beresford, well known continuity writer, prepared the scenario.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

Dr. Orlando E. Miller, President of the Rellimeo Films of this city, spent Thursday and Friday of last week in Hollywood looking over the recent work of the organization in the South, where they have just completed the cutting of their latest feature picture "The Yellow Stigma". The film will be ready for release the middle of November when Gordon Michie, business manager of the company, will leave for New York with it.

The Belasco Films of this city are making good progress in the South with their preparations for the filming of their big coming picture "Welcome Stranger." James Young, who will direct for them has just returned from New York, where he has been in conference with Aaron Hoffman, the author, in regard to the screen version of his famous stage success. The all star cast for the picture will be announced within a few days.

Max Graf, of the Graf Films will leave for New York this week with the film of their recently completed picture, "Half-a-Dollar Bill," to complete arrangements for its release.

The Gerson Films Corporation has just finished work on the third of their series of five reel melodramas starring Ora Carew. The title of the picture is "One Hour To Live," Tom Gibson is directing with George Crocker at the camera, and Jay Morley, Hal Stevens, Tiny Standford, and a capable cast are appearing in support of Miss Carew.

Los Angeles isn't the only place that develops extra good business managers, for a San Francisco man holds the rather unique record of having completed in the last six months three pictures at a Southern studio, and all three under the estimate time and cost. The clever chap is Gordon Michie of the Rellimeo Films.

A special preview was given last Thursday before the officers and men of the American Legion of "Eight Bucks" sodier picture just finished at the Southern leased studio of the Rellimeo Films under the direction of Fred Windamere. The picture met with a rousing reception from the Legion men, both for the splendid cast headed by Raymond McKee, and the real human appeal of the story. The story is one of a returned soldier trying to fit himself again to the ways of peace, and makes you laugh if you can hold back the tears. The picture was produced by the Granada Film Corporation, and the master print rushed up to San Francisco for this showing was the first to be seen by anyone outside the studio.

Louis Graf, president of the Graf Films will go to Los Angeles in a day or two to spend a week on business for the organization.

PUBLIC OPINION

New York City,
October 26th, 1923.

Editor "Camera!",
Hollywood, Cal.
Dear Sir:

Looking over the "Camera!" I came across an article — "Globe-Trotting Cameraman On Ben Hur." Allow me to correct a great error, that had it not been for "Otto G. Brautigam," a well-known cameraman of "New York City," the "Queen of Sheba" would never have gotten the photography it did. John Boyle started the picture and for fully three weeks his work was no good. You can write to Betty Blythe and verify what I am saying. Of course, John Boyle's name appears on the screen, but had it not been for this other cameraman the picture would never have been what it is today. I also happened to be one of the actresses in this picture and know it from beginning to the end.

Otto Brautigam is a New York man and has been in the camera game since it first started.

Yours truly,
A Constant Reader of "Camera!"

P. S.—Correct this erroneous mistake.

EDITOR'S NOTE—This letter is published here merely for your perusal, and it does not necessarily mean that we subscribe to the sentiments or arguments as expressed therein. We have this much to say about this letter, however; we believe that any one who is sincere in their desire to secure an editorial correction such as is urgently requested here would be interested enough to the extent of signing their name and defending their arguments if called upon to do so. An anonymous letter does not carry much weight any place.

We would be glad to her from one who knows the facts and details of the case to advise us what the whole truth is so we may make due mention and solve the apparent riddle. By all means, sign your name, too. If you don't want it published, alright, but be courteous enough to let us know who we're talking to, so we may forward any message addressed to you coming from other readers. "Public Opinion" is a forum for open discussion, not anonymous notes.

Have you a little recipe in your home? If so, tell Doris May about it. She seems puzzled here. Some folks would like to have her recipe for film success. Here it is . . . hard work and sincerity!

Poetry and Prose

A my beloved, fill the cup that clears,
T day of past regrets and future fears;
T norrow!—Mhy, tomorrow I may be
M self with yesterday's sev'n thousand years.
—Omar Khayam.

DRIFTING

My soul to-day
Is far away,
Sailing the Vesuvian Bay;
My winged boat,
A bird afloat,
Swings 'round the purple peaks remote—

Round purple peaks
It sails, and seeks Blue inlets and their crystal creeks,
Where high rocks throw,
Through deep below,
A duplicate golden glow.

Far, vague and dim,
The mountains swim;
While on Vesuvius' misty brim,
With outstretched hands,
The gray smoke stands
Oerlooking the volcanic lands.

Under the walls
Where swells and falls
The Bay's deep breast at intervals
At peace I lie,
Blow softly by,
A cloud upon this liquid sky.
The day, so mild,
Is Heaven's own child,
With Earth and Ocean reconciled;
The airs I feel
Are murmuring to the murmuring keel.

With dreamful eyes
My spirit lies
Where Summer sings and never dies—
O'erveiled with vines
She glows and shines
Among her future oils and wines.

Yon deep bark goes
Where traffic blows,
From lands of sun to lands of snows;
This happier one—
Its course is run
From lands of snows to lands of sun.

O happy ship
To rise and dip,
With the blue crystal at your lip.
O happy crew
My heart with you
Sails, and sails, and sings anew

No more, no more
The worldly shore
Upbraids me with its loud uproad:
With dreamful eyes
My spirit lies
Under the walls of Paradise.
—Thomas Buchanan Read.

MIST

Low-anchored cloud,
Newfoundland air,
Fountain head and source of rivers,
Dew-cloth, dream-drapery,
And napkins spread by fays;
Drifting meadow of the air,
Where bloom the daisied banks and violets,
And in whose fenny labyrinth
The bittern booms and heron wades;
Spirit of lakes and seas and rivers,—
Bear only perfumes and the scent
Of healing herbs to just men's fields.
—Henry David Thoreau.

SONG

The splendor falls on castle walls
And snowy summits old in story;
The long light shakes across the lakes
And the wild cataract leaps in glory.
Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes Ɣying;
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying,
dying.

O hark, O hear! how thin and clear,
And thinner, clearer, farther going!
O sweet and far from cliff and scar
The horns of Elfland faintly blowing!
Blow, let us hear the purple glens replying:
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying,
dying.

O love, they die in yon rich sky,
They faint on hill or field or river,
Our echoes roll from soul to soul,
And grow for ever and for ever.
Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes Ɣying,
And answer, echoes, answer, dying, dying,
dying.

Give me a cottage in some Cambrian wild,
Where far from cities I may spend my days,
And, by the beauties of the scene beguiled,
May Pity man's pursuits and shun his ways.
—Henry Kirke White.

EDITOR'S NOTE—"Camera!" takes great pleasure in presenting herewith the first of a new series of articles which will be written exclusively for this publication by Mr. Eric Mayne, distinguished stage and screen actor. Each one will have a message of vital import for all which will be given in an easy and simple style.

Mr. Mayne and his work are too well known for any lengthy comment here but it is of interest to know that he began his theatrical career at the old Drury Lane Theater in London, under the management of Sir Augustus Harris. While there he took part in "The Christian," "The Manxman" and many other notable Drury Lane melodramas. At the end of seven years he joined the Lyceum Theater in the same city, remaining with them for four years following which he went with Charles Frohman's London enterprises. Three years later he came to New York with William A. Brady and it was under his management that Mr. Mayne first entered pictures. Among the more prominent films in which Mr. Mayne has played are "The Conquering Power," "Suzanna," "Dr. Jack," "Human Wreckage," "Her Reputation," "Cameo Kirby" and "The Light That Failed."

THE ETERNAL LAW

By Eric Mayne

Law is the foundation of life.

Good men make good laws; and good laws make good men.

Law is a development of right living of which the primitive mind was incapable.

Moses, the first great lawgiver, was elaborate and explicit in the proverb, "Do not do unto him as you would not wish him to do unto you." Splendid, but negative.

Christ gave us the fullest application of that law—"Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

It is the Law that not only prevents us doing wrong but that makes us do good.

The laws of a nation mark the progress of that nation in the path of civilization.

The observance of Law is the true test of the people's loyalty.

The good nationalist does not break a law to which he objects; he fights for the repeal of that law.

Religion is the moral Law touched with emotion.

Emotions are variable, the Law is steadfast.

Law is the science which teaches duty and the reason for doing it.

There are many religions; there is but one comprehensive law, "Do unto others as you would they should do unto you."

Because man is able to understand and to apply this law, he is the greatest in the Kingdom of Life.

To keep the letter of the law is a duty; to fulfill the spirit of the law should be our greatest happiness.

THE MILLENIUM:

When the duty of doing unto others as we would they should do unto us becomes, to every man, a joy.

A VISIT TO HOLLYWOOD

By Agnes Kerr Crawford

So this is Hollywood! After trying for months to get time we at last dashed down from San Francisco the other day to give Hollywood the "double O." Of course we had seen it before some two or three years ago, but meanwhile it had grown so that we would never have known it for the same place. So as everyone asks us what we think of Hollywood, we will here and now put ourselves on record. First of all let us mention that our city-raised soul got an awful "kick" out of being awakened in the morning by a loud-voiced rooster somewhere up the Canyon, for roosters were not one of the things that we had expected in America's film center. Hollywood, the place with the most sporty reputation in the world, struck us as being like a beautiful country town, but a country town with a kick.

Its outstanding features seem to be a collection of some of the most beautiful and varied homes in America, and the finest line of manly beards anywhere in the world. In one walk down Hollywood Boulevard the other day we counted twelve varieties of fancy facial ornaments on as many picture actors. However, we found Hollywood both beautiful and kind, and first, last and all the time we like it, sunshine, studios, homes, roosters, beards and everything.

Battling Siki, the Senegalese fighter, is training at his New York headquarters for his bout with Kid Norfolk at Madison Square Gardens on November 20th.

Floyd Johnson, the Iowa heavyweight who was slated to meet Jack Renault, the French-Canadian, at New York last Friday, is in fine form at the present time. Johnson was a recent visitor at the Hollywood Stadium at which time hopes were expressed that he might be signed to meet Jack Dempsey in an exhibition match for one of the local charitable institutions. Unfortunately he was called east to prepare for this bout. Both Johnson and Renault were sparring partners for Dempsey while the champion was training for his Firpo battle.

Carl Tremaine is the next one to meet Pancho Villa. They will fight at 118 pounds at Madison Square Garden in New York some time in November. At present the odds are with Pancho.

Georges Carpentier, renowned French battler, will sail for America on Armistice Day preparatory to his bout with Tommy Gibbons, the St. Paul mauler, in New York some time in December or January. This looks like a Gibbons victory to the majority.

Charley Paddock is reported to have consented to compete in the 100-yard relay in the carnival to be held by the University of Washington at Seattle next May 13th. The folks staging the affair are now seeking contenders of equal repute.

The Tulare Golf Club at Tulare, Calif., will open their new links the first part of November.

Dick Ferris, promoter of the Culver City race track, is jubilant these days! He has a promise from Admiral Cary T. Grayson of Washington, D. C., that My Own, great 3-year-old, will appear at the Ferris concession this winter. My Own is scheduled to meet Zev, the Rancocas colt in the Latonia, Ky., stakes this Saturday and Grayson has suggested another meet between the two at the Culver City track on Christmas Day. The purse would be $50,000 and attendance would be around the 40,000 mark. With the new Tanforan track at San Francisco and the Ferris turf here, horse-racing will be given added impetus in this section of the country and will attain prominence that will well warrant the appearance of Zev, My Own, and other champs. It is also interesting to note in this regard that Exterminator, Willis Kilmer's famous horse, will race at T juana this winter. Exterminator will also co pete in the Coffroth Handicap.

Nine bouts have been arranged for the L Angeles Athletic Club for Thursday evenin They are as follows:

Julius Jessick vs. Sailor Upton.
Sailor Batuyong vs. Fidel LaBarba.
Sailor Huffman vs. Ad Allegrini.
Sailor Basa vs. Aly Leonard.
Joe Sarles vs. A—?—Q
Joe Comby vs. Joe St. George.
Engene Henry vs. Johnny Barry.
Jack Fields vs. Joe Piela.
Joe McLaughlin vs. Bernard Henry.

Erich Hagenlacher, German billiard char pion, has defeated Roger Conti of France in t world's 18.2 balk-line tournament at New Yor The score was 500 to 131. This was the se ond defeat for the Frenchman.

There is a report current to the effect th Walter Miller, L. A. A. C. wrestler, may so meet Miyake, the Japanese jui-jitsu artist, a catch-as-catch-can mixup at the club. T tentative date is November 15th.

Speaking of Walking Papers

We were wondering, as were his many friends, what had become of Otto Matiesen. Shortly after finishing his role as Lord Chief Justice Jeqreys in "The Dangerous Maid" with Constance Talmadge, he suddenly and mysteriously disappeared.

Yesterday we met him on the Boulevard, his skin tanned to the hue of a ripe olive. Upon inquiry as to whether he had been in the tropics on location he stated, "No sir, I was shanghaied and put on board Morgan Adam's beautiful yacht 'Henrietta' by some mutual friends who wanted to give me a taste of real adventure, as contrasted with my make-believe adventures in pictures.

"We cruised the Pacific and visited many nearby isles. What a wonderful life! Just that little bit of running around on the ocean seemed to arouse an inherent Viking spirit in me. This, however, was quickly smothered on my return to city life. Maybe, after all, imagination is the spice of life.

"Strange to say, however, our queerest adventure was not at sea, but on the Catalina isthmus. Confucius, who has been credited with saying many 'confucing' things, said: 'Dogs bite the ragged; fools bow to the rich,' and he certainly was right there. Deeming it unnecessary to shave, or dress in anything but the gayest and most convenient rags, we arrived one day last week at the Catalina isthmus and nearly caused a riot in that respectable place. Walking blissfully along the shore, liberated from traffic regulations and all other 'verbotens' of modern civilization, we were rudely awakened by the good people of the hotel, which is the seat of government there, who demanded permits of us.

"'Permits for what?' we blandly inquired, and were informed that we must have permission to walk on this sacred ground, or we would be granted only the usual fifteen minutes of grace accorded tourists from the boat 'Avalon.'

"We were followed over the place by the jeers and hoots of the kitchen help, until martial law was declared, and we made our retreat to our yacht unmolested. As a consequence my advice is, don't use your imagination and trust that your noble person will ever shine through a beard and soiled raiment there, for it is certainly evident that the powers that be there have neither a sense of humor or an appreciation of imagination."

Autos and Folks

"Don't wait until your motor develops knock before you have your car examined ar don't wait until you get a "kink" in your bac to have your spine examined," is the advic of Dr. W. I. Schuster, well known Hollywoo chiropractor.

"The man who has the smoothest runnin car is the man who has it 'tuned up" periodica ly by an expert mechanic, and the man who ha the best health is the man who keeps his bod in condition," Schuster says.

Schuster has been in Hollywood for sever years, giving up a position as instrurctor in th Palmer School of Chiropractic at Davenpor Iowa, a few years ago to take up the study c chiropractic. He expresses the belief that mo than three fourths of the things which caus illness could be easily prevented if people woul just pause to consider them. He says that h is much more interested in helping keep pe ple well than to help cure them when they be come ill.

His maxims are "An ounce of prevention i worth a pound of cure" and "An adjustmen in time saves nine."

"Sounds like I'm trying to talk myself ou of a lot of dollars—or that I'm trying to ki you, but nothing of the sort. I mean it," h said. "It's sound reasoning, too. A 'club' i the back is better than two spades in th ground," he added.

"Just as I think that people should visit thei dentist occasionally to have their teeth looke after to correct present and prevent future trou ble, I think that they would profit by visitin a chiropractor once in a while to have thei spines examined.

"Many people do not realize it, but the spin is a perfect mirror of one's physical conditio to a man who is trained to read its 'signs Often the adjustment of a misplaced vertabra which is a simple matter to a skilled chiroprac tor, will prevent a lot of grief to a perso who has been walking idly down a path lead ing straight to trouble of a serious nature."

ALLEN HOLUBAR HAS PASSED CRISIS!

VEST COAST THEATRE INTERESTS CLOSE BIG DEAL

ocal Theaters Contract with Warners

The trade circles will be intered to know of the stamp of apval which has been placed upon product known as the Warner thers' Classics of the Screen by cutives of West Coast Theatres, . David Bershon, booking man- of this noted chain of motion ture houses, has just signed a ntract with Joseph Goldberg, nager of the Los Angeles exnge for Geo. Oppenheimer, Inc., tributors of the Warner Broth- Classics of the Screen, where- the entire southern division of West Coast theaters will play nineteen Screen Classics anunced from the Warner Brothers' dios. Many of these productions ll be given their first run showg at Loew's State Theatre in Los ngeles and the list is given its st impetus with the premiere of he Gold Diggers" on Saturday, vember 3rd, at Loew's State. At present time the stage produc- n is showing at the Morosco heatre in Los Angeles in its sixth eek and with the picture going for a one week stand at Loew's ate, no more than half a block way from the legitimate house, an teresting situation will bear close rutiny. The West Coast is givg the David Belasco play a ecial exploitation emphasizing e fact that the screen play outlines the stage production in illiancy and subtlety.

The nineteen pictures which are oked solidly into practically sevty-five West Coast houses in the uthern division are: "Little hnnie Jones," "The Gold Digrs," "The Country Kid," "Lovess Marriages," "How to Educate Wife," "Cornered," "The Tie hat Binds," "The Tenth Woman," "Conductor 1492," (Camels ack), "The Printer's Devil," Broadway After Dark," "Daddies," "Tiger Rose," "An Unloved Wife," "Geo. Washington, Jr.," Being Respectable," "The Age of nocense," "Babbitt," "Beau rummel."

William V. Mong is finishing his ole in "Thy Name Is Woman," a red Niblo production adopted rom the stage play of the same itle.

KUSSE SEEKS EXHIBITOR AID

The public is to get what it most desires in the matter of screen entertainment if a plan just introduced by Creative Productions, one of Hollywood's leading producing concerns is carried through to a successful conclusion.

Fred Kusse, president of the company fostering the idea, is invisting representative exhibitors throughout the United States to pass upon all stories submitted to the company for picturization and through this method he hopes to meet the popular desires of the theater going public in the matter of screen entertainment. Before Creative Productions will film a story it must be okayed by at least 75 per cent of the number of exhibitors reviewing it.

"It is our aim to meet the demand of the public in the matter of screen entertainment and we feel we can best do this by soliciting the co-operation of representative exhibitorrs of this country," said Kusse in his announcement.

"Before deciding to picturize a story whether it be an original or a published writing, we will submit copies of it to our board members in hte various key cities and towns for their approval. Unless 75 per cent or more of the reviewers sanction the story, we will not produce it.

"We feel that this is a practical scheme as we experimented with it on the story "Superstition" which we recently filmed. Forty-seven out of a total of fifty reviewers agreed that the narrative was excellent screen material and it has since proven so. The finished picture is conceded by critics to be one of the best independent productions ever turned out of Hollywood and we appreciate that the opinions of many experienced showmen in the matter is largely responsible for our success with our initial effort."

Creative Productions will not strive to make any stipulated number of pictures during a year according to W. H. Carr, general manager. The new company will produce only as many films as can be turned out by a corps of careful, experienced persons working under orders to sacrifice neither time nor money in their efforts to give the public something a little bigger and better in the way of cinema entertainment.

Report Heavy West Travel

Not only is travel west exceptionally heavy but more than 70 per cent of the tickets sold from Chicago to Los Angeles in a single day were one way. This is the word brought back to Hollywood by E. G. Patterson, business manager of the Standard Film Laboratories, who has just returned from a business trip to New York City where he opened branch offices at 2111 Fisk Building, Columbus Circle.

The exodus to Los Angeles was discovered by Patterson when he reached Chicago a day after his wire asking for a lower berth to Los Angeles. He didn't get it and decided there must be a convention on or something of the sort. Telling them to hold his upper for him, Patterson called on the general passenger agent who happened to be a close personal friend.

He got his lower berth all right and also learned that travel to Los Angeles was breaking records for this time of year and that of the tickets sold on that special day, more than 70 per cent were one way, indicating permanent residents.

S. M. Hompkins, president of the Standard, is still in New York but expects to start West in a few days. He plans to stop off in his old home town, Louisville, on his way to the coast, for a short visit with his friends.

To Tibet?

Tibet or not Tibet.

That is the question, with Oscar Apfel who has been propositioned to go to this snow clad region of Northern Asia to make a photoplay using the picturesque natives of that clime, based on weird religous rites and ceremonies.

W. F. Alder, noted author and explorer, is to sail February 15 with Tibet as his destination and instead of making a travel picture he plans to build a real drama around the Tibetans. He has asked Apfel, who just completed his contract with Metro to go with him and direct the photoplay.

Director Is On Road To Recovery

Allen Holubar, well-known director, has passed the crisis! This was the gist of a statement issued late Friday afternoon by Dr. Elliott Alden at St. Vincent's Hospital in this city where Holubar is confined.

Upon returning from Nashville, Tenn., where he had been filming scenes for Metro's "The Human Mill," he immediately went to the hospital. He knew of his illness but was determined to finish his production. For a while he hovered at death's edge but the latest statement is replete with optimism for his quick recovery.

"Film Foolish" Satirizes

Goldwyn had its "Souls For Sale"—

Lasky's had its "Hollywood"—

Al Christie had his "Hazel From Hollywood," and Mack Sennett has his "The Extra Girl"—

But Jack White has his "Film Foolish," which, coming at the end of a series of "Hollywood" pictures, epitomizes the fun and foibles of filmdom in one joyous, satirical reel.

Norman Taurog is directing, and Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance head the cast.

C. O. Seessel, general manager art director and technical director of the Belasco Productions, representing mostly San Francisco money, has taken offices and leased plant facilities at the Hollywood Studios and will start production in a week or ten days on the screen version of the stage play, "Welcome, Stranger." James Young, whose latest screen effort was "Trilby," has just returned from New York and will direct. Aaron Hoffman wrote the play.

Percy Marmont, portraying the title role in "The Man Life Passed By," Victor Schertzinger's all-star Metro special, has recently purchased a new home in the Hollywood foothills.

A babbling brook in a wooded glen . . . sun-dappled shadows on a long white country road . . . the twitter of robins intermingled with the melody of nightingales . . . moonlight on a broad expanse of peaceful water . . . the swaying of palm trees in a tropic breeze . . . the scent of roses . . . dusk in the Vale of Cashmere.

These are the impressions that unconsciously come to one while watching little Muriel MacCormac busy herself about life and all of its weighty problems. She paid us a visit in our editorial sanctum the other day and while she vainly endeavored to pound out an affectionate letter to her granny on one of our well-worn typewriters we were afforded an excellent opportunity to study her expression and demeanor. She is the essence of life at its best, at the dawning years when joy and hope run high. Without a care in the world, and with an everlasting smile on her sweet face, to her the world is just one big playground. And the happiness which she radiates to those around her bring thoughts of all that has been beautiful, all that is cherished in memory's treasure-box, to us. She seemed to instill new life into us with her delightful baby chatter and we suddenly came to the realization that this little lady knew one thing about life that we have yet to learn, namely, that our short existence on this terra firma, the fleeting years that we spend here, should be more replete with sunny hours and happy thoughts. How we foolishly load ourselves with useless worry, hustle and bustle!

What a wonderful gift Muriel possesses; a marvelous disposition and a sunny attitude toward life that is priced beyond all things. Would we were that fortunate!

Yet in her four or five years of life this little lady has accomplished much. She has attained fame as one of the most captivating children on the shadow stage and has established popularity with scores, yes hundreds, of famous motion picture folk, and with countless numbers of those fans who pay their dimes and quarters at the theatre around the corner to see her on the silversheet and learn her lesson of happy-go-lucky existence. They, too, claim that her capers on the screen bring grins to their faces and joy in their hearts. Yes, she's the Rejuvenating Kid of Filmland!

Her work in the two-score-odd pictures that she has been in is too well known for any comment here. "Poor Men's Wives" brought her into the limelight and undoubtedly "The Man Who Won" will go far to aid and abet the position she enjoys. Her current engagement is under the direction of Edward J. Le Saint at the Waldorf studios where Harry Cohn is producing a film entitled "Discontented Husbands" with a cast including James Kirkwood, Grace Darmond and others. Other recent productions in which she played were "The Street of Painted Women" and "The Vital Question." In addition to her motion picture work Muriel finds time to help in many worthy benefits and charitable affairs and thus in her daily practice of her doctrine of sunshine and laughter she is doing much to solidify her place on the screen in her unique capacity. She practices what she preaches and she's preaching life at its finest to the world. What worthier mission could she be performing as she enters the threshold of life?

Carl Miller, male lead in a Ben Wilson production with Mildred Davis, has now completed his engagement in the production which promises further laurels for him. He plays a wealthy philanthropist.

Lesser Says Film Pay O. K.

Sol Lesser, whose activities in the motion picture field qualify him to speak with authority on practically all subjects pertaining to that industry, comes to the front with the statement that stories of gigantic salaries paid motion picture stars are entirely untrue.

"The motion picture business," says Lesser, "is like any other legitimate business. It must be conductetd on a sound basis at all times, and fabulous amounts paid to the stars would not make for soundness, in view of the other money outlays incident to picture making. Picture players are paid exactly what they are worth, and their value is determined by the law of supply and demand. This makes their salaries entirely legitimate.

"The report that Baby Peggy signed a contract with me for Principal Pictures Corporation at a yearly salary exceeding one million dollars, is entirely unfounded. No company could afford to pay such an amount to any one star—if it wanted to remain in business."

Lesser stated that the production Baby Peggy would make for Principal Pictures Corporation would be shown in all theatres at popular prices. If she were to be paid any such sums as have been rumored, her pictures at popular admission prices could never pay for themselves. And both Lessor and J. T. Montgomery, Baby Peggy's father, realize the importance of keeping her pictures within reach of the popular-price audiences.

"These reports of unheard-of salaries being paid the stars are doing the motion picture business no good, and in fact are destroying the popularity of the players themselves. Stars making their own productions receive great returns in money, but it must be remembered these amounts do not represent salary, but earnings on their own money invested in the pictures."

Hal Roach is having a saloon built for his personal use at the Roach studios in Culver City. It's not a very nice saloon. It is supposed to have been typical of a pioneer Kansas town just before Lincoln was President. The saloon is one of the important sets built for "Somewhere in Kansas," which Roach is directing from one of his own original stories. The picture will be a comedy drama of feature length.

Ralph Lewis is going to San Francisco for a few days to make a personal appearance at the opening of his latest commercial-hero production, "The Mail Man." Ralph received a wire from a number of postal organizations in San Francisco, inviting him to be their guest during the showing of the film.

Mervyn LeRoy, screen juvenile, has acquired a land site in Beverly.

Jean Hersholt spent the fir twenty-nine years of his life i Copenhagen but he never use snuff until the other day, when h took his first pinch as "Grand Du Boris," in "Torment" which Ma rice Tourneur is making at Unite Studios.

Chester Bennett was forced relinquish his work of supervisin the editing and titling of his late production, "The Lullaby," for tw weeks, while recovering from breakdown caused by overwor His manager, Douglas Dawso states that he will be back on th job this week.

Caldwell Set

Fred Caldwell and staff has completed the continuity for the forthcoming production. Assiste by gag men, Mr. Caldwell ha whipped the J. Stewart Woodhous story into a series of gags. Assis ed by Raymond Rounsaville, M Caldwell will start turning th crank in a few days.

Apfel Declaims Costs Cut

"Don't cut costs too much. I you do you will cut America ou of its unquestioned world leader ship in the making of motion pic tures."

The above contribution to th whirl of talk on costs that has fol lowed the shutting down of one o the big studios, was made b Harold Shaw, motion picture di rector who has just finished mak ing "The Living Past," for Metr He has made pictures in mor countries than any other one di rector, making him particularl qualified to speak on difference between conditions that obtain her and abroad.

"Until this time," said Shaw "the English producers have cre ated two results. America has ha lavishness, and in some instance enormous waste. It has had shake ups and some financial trouble But it has gained the leadershi of the owrld in the making of pic tures.

"The British have pursued th typically British way. They hav been most painstaking. They hav watched their work with what might call a British rather than world eye. And as a result the have had a steady business, with out shakeups, turmoil or waste, bu they have definitely dropped int a role second to the United State

"The makers of pictures her should cut out enormous waste They should do it with an iro hand. But they should not go to far, for as against the extreme o lavishness and waste, there is a extreme of thrift. If pursued i would undoubtedly steady th boat, but if pursued too far, i might so retard progress tha America might conceivably b passed in the making of pictures.

PREPARING "SEA HAWK"

With "Black Oxen" featuring Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle, in the process of editing and titling, Frank Lloyd, independent producer, has announced that he will shortly begin work of picturizing "The Sea Hawk" by Rafael Sabatini, author of "Scaramouche."

"The Sea Hawk" has been giving "Black Oxen" a close run for honors among the best selling novels of 1923 and the visualization of the brilliant adventurer of the Barbary corsairs, and, in particular of Sakr-el-Bahr, formerly Sir Oliver Tressilian, an English knight, calls for the expenditure of many dollars and months of research and filming.

Mr. Lloyd has made no selections for the cast of the new play and because the leading characters of the play must be men of gigantic stature it seems quite possible that "The Sea Hawk" may contain a number of new screen faces.

"The Sea Hawk" will be a First National picture, and is expected to become one of the most gigantic and spectacular dramas yet filmed.

HALE WITH GREAT DIRECTORS

Creighton Hale, who has just completed a ten weeks' engagement in "The Marriage Circle" directed by Ernest Lubitsch, had the bulk of his first scenes with Florence Vidor and the remaining ones with Monte Blue, with the exception of the final fadeout with Marie Prevost. In this vivacious picture of Viennese life, Mr. Hale and Mr. Blue are young surgeons, friendly professionally but rivals since the former imagines that the latter's wife is in love with him which leads to all sorts of amusing complications. This picture brings the two together for the first time in Hollywood after a friendship formed at the Griffith Studios where they had leading roles in "The Two Orphans."

With his work under Mr. Lubitsch, Mr. Hale who first began his career in London, has had the good fortune to receive direction from the greatest artists in the world. Another important engagement completed before he began work at the Warner Brothers was at Goldwyn's in "Name the Man" directed by Victor Seastrom.

OUTLINES UTOPIAN FILM

Alan Crosland, Goldwyn director now filming Elinor Glyn's famous story, "Three Weeks," announces the completion of an exhaustive investigation into the future of motion pictures.

After six months of research, in which he studied carefully statements in the public prints from actors, directors, producers and chief electricians, Crosland has compiled this report:

That the star system will be abolished.

That all-star casts will be dropped and more attention paid to individual actors.

That less attention will be paid to directors.

That directors will become the all-important personality.

That the writer will take the place of the star.

That the story is of minor consequence.

That pictures will be filmed on a more lavish scale and will be much longer.

That simplicity is the need of the screen and that the long features of today will be supplanted by shorter films.

That the screen will remain just as it is.

Mickey McBan will be prominent on the reception committee for Harry Lauder when the famous comedian arrives this week.

Charles "Buck" Jones will finish work in a Fox feature as yet untitled, this week. Following a brief rest he will begin work on the production of what will doubtless prove to be his greatest starring film.

Little Farina, the dusky pickaninny of Hal Roach's "Gang" remarked one day to Mark Goldain, "Nobuddy ken hit me wid a big 'tick but you!" The little chocolate baby has implicit faith in Goldaine who directed the last picture for "Our Gang" while Bob McGowan was on a short vacation.

Human Interest Story Wins

There is only one type of picture which is of universal appeal.

That is the human interest picture.

All others appeal only to certain classes or certain types of individuals.

Many great film productions have been financial failures because too few people appreciated them.

These statements represent the conclusion of J. K. McDonald, production of "Penrod and Sam," who is now producing another Booth Tarkington story, "Misunderstood."

"The picture having the most general appeal naturally has the most box office drawing power," says this producer.

"Because human interest appeals to everybody regardless of class distinction a picture based on that quality has by far the greatest chance to gain favor of the average picture-goer.

"Psychological analysis of the situation proves that human interest is inherent if not instinctive. Man is gregarious — that is the reason felons are confined apart from the rest of mankind. The separation from his fellow man is the real punishment of a prisoner— not the penal work he is forced to perform.

"Human interest is what makes people wave their hands to utter strangers as they pass by on a train; that makes them speak with passing strangers in rural districts. It is only traditional conventions and the menace of mixing with utter strangers which causes people to pass strangers unnoticed in large cities. Every human heart has one soft, clean spot beneath its surface. And that spot is the quality we call 'human interest.'

"Because it is full of human interest 'Misunderstood' will be a big success."

John F. Seitz, cameraman for all Rex Ingram productions, is making preparations for his trip to Egypt where he will photograph Rex Ingram's production of "The Arab" for Metro.

Robert Ober, celebrated actor who has temporarily interrupted his screen work to produce and play the leading role in Maud Fulton's latest stage play "Punchinello" which is now running in San Francisco, starred in "Brewster's Millions, for three years. After seven seasons in leading parts on Broadway he turned his attention to the screen.

Victor Seastrom, the distinguished Swedish director, who has recently completed his first American picture for Goldwyn, "Name the Man!" adapted from Sir Hall Caine's "Master of Man," is busy at work on his next story to be made at the Goldwyn studio.

Lloyd Talman drops us a note from Sonora to let us know he is on location there with the William S. Hart company filming "Singer Jim McKee." He says the weather there is snappy and makes him feel like a new person. According to present plans he will be back in town about the time you are reading this.

Louise Fazenda's talent as vaudeville headliner in "The Galloping Fish," also include a diving act, for which the comedy queen faithfully prepared herself by taking a daily lesson at a famous plunge before leaving for the Yuma, Ariz., location where she is working with the company. Her "plunge" is now the Colorado River!

Sammy Brooks, who has played in all Harold Lloyd comedies made under the Hal Roach banner, who now appears in Stan Laurel comedies, is one of the original Katzenjammer Kids."

She Had Reform Aspirations

Like most young intellectuals, Winifred Dunn, now scenario editor of Metro, started out to reform the world. Shortly after she went into the field of scenario writing, she wrote and collaborated on the production of three reform films; "And the Children Pay," which marked incidentally the screen debut of Garreth Hughes, was a plea for the unmarried mother; "The Red Viper," and "The Menace of a Nation" were disclosures of the inner workings of the Bolshevist movement in this country. After she produced these three reform films, Miss Dunn came to the decision that the world needed entertainment more than direct reform, and accordingly she has confined her activities since then to the authorship and adaptation of a long list of films, which have attained considerable popular success.

At the present time she is in the East confering with J. Hartley Manners, the author, and Laurette Taylor, the star of "Happiness."

Victor Potel has accompanied Barker to Catalina. The island will be utilized for location scenes by the "Cape Cod Folks" company.

Al Ray, who flits easily from acting to directing, and thence to scenario writing, will direct a comedy. Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance head the cast.

Mr. Ray remains in his post of scenario editor for Jack White productions.

CHARACTERS FIRST, SAYS VON

"I think the public would rather see a particular character played by an actor than a character giving a performance of a familiar actor."

Such was the statement made by Erich von Stroheim, who has made a literal film version of Frank Norris' "McTeague" to be released under the title of "Greed" by Goldwyn, and which is now in the process of editing and cutting, in discussing the much mooted topic of whether or not the public is losing interest in "familiar faces."

"It is not so much a question of whether motion picture goers are eager for fresh faces," continued von Stroheim, "than it is a question of whether they are tired of seeing a number of roles played by the same person appear more or less alike instead of making them into separate and distinct human beings absolutely fitting the exposition of the story."

In answer to a question concerning his penchant for entrusting important roles to actors whose names do not raise the theaters' electric light bills, von Stroheim said:

"Before I start producing a picture I have a definite idea of how I wish each character portrayed, down to the minutest details. Familiar players in many instances mean actors who will not or can not submerge themselves in the character. They have peculiarities that stamp them as So-and So and they remain as such, instead of the human being I wish them to represent. They, in all justice because of long experience, get a preconceived notion of the character, and frequently it is opposite to mine. Then I have to tear down their ideas before I can start on mine. With a so-called newcomer I can mould right from the beginning.

Wallace MacDonald is one of our consistent workers, going from picture to picture. Recent productions of his include "Maytime," "The Day of Faith," "Angel Face Molly" and "Thy Name Is Woman."

One of the early dramatic undertakings of Mervyn LeRoy, prominent screen juvenile, was the waving of a flag in "Barbara Fritchie." The old standby was being given in a San Francisco theatre next which LeRoy ordinarily sold newspapers.

Neeley Edwards enacts, in a Jack White comedy, the part of a young man who has to spend a certain large sum of money within a specified time.

Just a few years ago, he had an important role in support of a certain rotund comedian, who had the same thing to do in "Brewster's Millions!"

Spottiswoode Aitken, as the blind professor in Hunt Stromberg's production, "The Fire Patrol," has a role very similar to his characterization of the blind uncle in D. W. Griffith's "The Avenging Conscience."

Aitken was a member of Griffith's stock company for several years, first with the Biograph and later with Mutual.

Mabel Van Buren is working in Lloyd Hamilton's current comedy directed by Gil Pratt.

Eugene Besserer, who will soon be seen in "The Rendexvous," was the only actress to appear in both screen versions of "The Rosary."

"Wide Open" is the title given to the seventh comedy, produced by Jack White. The title refers to the speed of a runaway street car which furnishes the comedy thrill.

Virginia Brown Faire, president of "The Regulars" announces two new members of the clnub Dorothy McKail, New York, who has just arrived in filmland after playing opposite Richard Barthelmess in "The Fighting Blade" and Dorothy Devore. Claire Windsor, Pauline Garon and Mary Philbin joined recently, so that the present membership is now twelve girls. A bracelet—a narrow band of platinum with the name in black enamel—is now the club emblem, the earings, originally planned, not being becoming to all.

One of the most important roles, that of Sheriff Dan McKee in William S. Hart's second production for Paramount, "Singer Jim McKee," falls to the lot of Bert Sprotte, veteran character actor of the screen.

Sound without sight; sight without sound.

These are the two alternatives of Frank and Louis Yacanelli, since they quit vaudeville to play music and parts in Lloyd Hamilton comedies. In the movies, the audiences see them play without hearing them.

When they played the accordion and banjo and sang at Los Angeles' most powerful broadcasting station, one recent night, they entertained the largest audience of their career—sight unseen!

Draws Plans for Own Home

His versatility on the screen and stage proven by the playing of scores of roles widely different from each other, William V. Mong has displayed a new and hitherto not generally known ability by drawing the complete set of plans for the new home he is to erect in Beverly Hills.

After Mong's plans were completed he took them to his architect-contractor who found them perfect in principle and needing only a few alterations and additions of a technical nature to be made the base for working drawings.

Mong made the plans at intervals during his playing of the role of Pedro in "Thy Name Is Woman." His work in that production will be completed in ten days or two weeks. Mong's new home is of Spanish type but the inspiration for it was not from his Spanish smuggler part. It was from the other beautiful Spanish type homes he has seen in Southern California.

Eulalie Jensen is enjoying a short vacation at a California mountain resort, having just finished work in a Douglas MacLean production.

MAID NOW HAS INNING

At last the movie maid servant comes into her own.

Since the beginning of movie time she has walked into the scene, said "No'm" or "Yes'm" and walked out.

Now comes a production with the maid playing the feminine lead.

In Maurice Tourneur's new First National film, "Torment," Bessie Love plays the part of the maid. Not a "bit" part but the leading feminine role calling for much highly emotional acting.

Supporting Owen Moore, Miss Love appears in most of the scenes attired in the conventional maid costume with its small apron, black dress and white collar.

By coincidence, the role expected to prove her most dramatic characterizations to date, is a physical likeness of the part in which she made her debut on the screen for D. W. Griffith.

Back in 1915 Mr. Griffith gave theclever little actress her first motion picture work—as a maid in "The Flying Torpedo." Not for eight years has she doned the servant costume. However, there's a vast difference in the servant character she played for Griffith and her present portrayal.

In "Torment," she is the sweet heart of a notorious crook, played by Owen Moore, and figures in international events.

SEA-SICK PLUG HALTS FILM

A sea-sick horse postponed the ride of Paul Revere from Boston to Lexington and Concord last week, while D. W. Griffith was there taking scenes for his historical film "America."

A committee of Lexington and Boston historians had agreed upon the color of the horse Revere rode, one that contradicts most of the paintings. When the color was decided, the horse was ordered from New York and arrived by boat through a stormy voyage. The streets were filled with spectators to watch the reproduction of the historic ride, but when the horse appeared, it still had the illusion of being on the deck of a tossing ship.

Lexington has entered so heartily into the making of the picture that all the male descendents of the Minute Men have been conscripted from their work by summons from the Lexington Historical Society to appear as their forefathers did in the fight on Lexington Common. They were dressed in exact replicas of the costumes their ancestors wore, many of them armed with guns that were heirlooms in their families.

The same drum that William Diamond beat on the morning the British soldiers entered the village was beaten again to marshall them into action.

When the scenes of the hanging of the lanterns in the Old North Church were taken, the narrow streets in the district were crowded with people who started singing "America." The filming has started a patriotic revival there.

Harold Shaw has just completed the direction of "The Living Past," an adaptation of William J. Locke's noval, "The Tale of Triona," for Metro. He will announce a new affiliation in the near future.

MAYO GLOBE-TROTTING HERO

Frank Mayo, playing the leading le in George Archainbaud's pro- iction, "The Shadow of the ast," now being made at the Fox udios, has hero-ed in every large y in the world. Frank started Broadway as a leading actor the legit. His biggest success as in "The Squaw Man," in hich play he went to London. ears later, when pictures snapped m up, his hero-ing continued on more pretentious geographical ale. He fell in love—cinematic- ly speaking—with fair damsels in Paris, Vienna, Moscow, Washington, New York, Chicago, cities both large and small. He emoted and acted his way through five and more reels of tense romantic and dramatic action. In his latest released picture, "Six Days," Frank sped romantically through London and Paris and Rheims. In his new picture, "The Shadow of the East," Frank starts in India, goes to England, thence to northern Africa. He's the record globe trotting hero of the movies.

BEN MAY BLOW GLASS

If Ben Lyon, popular motion pic- re actor, should decide to give the screen he could become a lass blower.

He has a job awaiting him in a ernon, California, glass factory, hich he can take any time he ees fit.

He was offered the position re- ently while working in "The wamp Angel," several scenes of hich were taken in a bottle blow- ng factory.

In the picture Ben plays the part of a young man who goes to the city to become an author but who is forced through circumstances to earn his bread and butter at the glass factory.

After instruction from the factory's star blower, he handled a glass blower so well that he drew compliments from the manager of the works who told the actor that he could have a job at the factory any time he saw fit to give up acting.

PICTURES RUSSIA'S WOE

Is Russia, the world's impene- rable mystery since 1917, finally be revealed through the agency f the pictures?

Several persons who point to the act that "The Birth of a Nation',' nd "The Covered Wagon," tell he stories of post-Civil War re- onstruction and the winning of he West, better than any written olumes, thing the world will re- ain in ignorance of Russia until ts great story is told on the sil- er sheet.

And when all is in readiness to nake the series of pictures, Harold Shaw, director who has just com- leted "The Living Past," for Metro, it is pointed out, is the logi- al man to do the work. He has lready made one post-revolution- ry picture. Its title was "The Land of Mystery." Its location was Kovno in Lithuania, formerly part of great Russia which was split off after the war. When "The Land of Mystery" was com- leted in 1920 interest in England was so great that it was discussed n the House of Commons.

The central figure in Shaw's picture was Denoff, who without difficulty could be recognized as Lenine. The story had Lenine conducting the revolution because his sweetheart was stolen by a man of noble blood. That was the personal element and was generally admitted to be a departure from the facts. But in the telling of the story a vast amount of true Russia history was told. The terrific repressions of the Czarist system, the knoutings, the jailing and the hangings were shown with brutal frankness. Brutalities of the Communist regime were also shown. A wealth of revolutionary detail such as the marching of armies, the storming of buildings and the execution of prisoners was presented. And they were shown against a true Russian background. In motif and in actual scenes portrayed the picture told a substantial part of Russian history. Shaw, the critics believe, with the experience of the one picture behind him, could tell a vivid Russian history in another venture.

COLLEEN SHAKES MEAN BAT

Call it psychology; call it confidence; call it luck; call it anything you want, but here are the facts:

It was during the taking of scenes for "The Swamp Angel." Coleen Moore, who plays the part of a small town tom-boy and the best baseball player in the neighborhood, is supposed to knock a home run in the game between "The Swamp Angels" and "The Sand Fleas."

Time and again the scene was rehearsed but Miss Moore was unable to connect with the ball. finally Clarence Badger, the director, suggested that the scene be taken, trusting to luck that perhaps the vivacious young star would hit the ball.

The camera began to grind; the ball was pitched and Miss Moore swung the bat with all her might and to the surprise of everyone, including herself, she hit the ball, sending it twirling through space.

At the second and third taking of the scene she also hit the pill on the first pitch but later, at lunch time, playing in a scrub game with the other players she could not come "within a mile" of the ball.

As Miss Moore expressed it: "The grinding of the camera sometimes works miracles."

W. H. Carr, general manager of Creative Productons, announces that his company's big production "Superstition," will be shown in preview shortly when definite distribution plans for the special will be revealed.

Charlotte DuPuis, who is enroute to Peru, South America, via Cuba and Panama, where she will be featured in the Productions of South America's first super-feature, "The White Queen."

James Morrison, well known Hollywood leading man now in the East, has decided to desert the pictures temporarily for a fling at the footlights. He will remain in New York indefinitely.

Theodore von Eltz was a critical member of a most enthusiastic audience at Pasadena last week when a preview was held of Warner Brothers "Tiger Rose" in which the actor in the role of the young engineer plays opposite Lenore Ulric in highly dramatic scenes. This was the first time the picture which was directed by Sidney Franklin has been shown. Mr. von Eltz whose engagement lasted nearly three months with location work near the Yosemite, considers the role his best work. In "Lights Out" as the scenario writer he also does some most brilliant work. This picture is now released.

Wallace Worsley will shortly announce his plans of a new affiliation and the production of a big special which will be filmed on a scale equal to his last achievement, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Frederick Reel, Jr., has taken offices at the Hollywood Studios and plans to make a five reel picture featuring his sled dog, Kyak, whose forebears include Ipsu, the leader of the dog team used by Perry in his North Pole dash, and whose mother was the lead dog on Amundsen's South Pole discovery trip.

EMINENT FRENCHMAN HERE

Valentin Mandelstamm, famous French author, stage director and film producer, has returned to Hollywood after an absence of three years to make an intensive study of American film production methods.

Connected with the French foreign office during the World War Mandelstamm is still in touch with the bureau of information of that office and was recently sent to America as the French delegate to the Congress of Authors and the First International Film Convention.

For fifteen years he was assistant stage director of the Theater Odeon, the dramatic home which enjoys the subsidy of the French government. At present he is writing his twenty-seventh novel. To France he has already given twenty-six best sellers, among them being "The Empire of Diamonds," "Dear New York," and "The Cossack," a World War story which is now appearing in English. While in Los Angeles he will write a novel with Hollywood as its locale.

"France readily admits the superiority of the American film," says the distinguished visitor, "but French audiences do not like the ten and twelve-reel films which are being produced. French exhibitors are forced to cut them by several reels and often the story is badly damaged. Another fault the French find with the American film having French backgrounds is the lack of true atmosphere and coloring. This, however, I believe, is being corrected to a certain degree by directors seeking the advice of authorities on French history and drama."

"Doug, Mary and Charlie are still the French favorites," he says.

Jobyna Ralston's reception was so cordial in her first picture, "Why Worry," as Harold Lloyd's leading woman, that the great comedian as signed her to a three year contract... She will next be seen with Lloyd in "The Girl Expert," now in production at the Hollywood Studios.

Jean Hersholt has been engaged by M. C. Leeve to play the part of Grand Duke Boris in "Torment" which Maurice Tourneaur is making at the United Studios. Boris, in the photoplay, is a Christlike figure similar to that which Hersholt portrayed in "The Servant in the House."

Oscar Apfel, who recently finished the direction of a series of three pictures for Metro release is resting at his new Hollywood home pending the completion of a new script for him.

MALE SEX IS BLAMED

Divorce statistics compiled in several states show that four-fifths of the divorce decrees issued go to women.

This would lead one to believe that men are to blame for the so-called divorce evil. Most women suing for divorce, make a simple charge of desertion, which is often a compromise charge to which the husband has consented.

At any rate the man leaves home, the wife sues, obtains her decree and the general public rarely knows why he left.

John M. Stahl, who is a student of phychology and a very close observer of human nature, is directing a picture which may throw some light on the present day divorce epidemic. It is called "Why Men Leave Home" and is adapted from Avery Hopwood's stage play of the same name but it has the Stahl treatment which it never received on Broadway.

In his film explanation of why men leave home Stahl does not champion his own sex. His natural chivalry towards women and his belief that men really are responsible for most matrimonial wrecks forbids his placing the burden upon the shoulders of the gentlier sex.

"Most marital difficulties have a very small beginning," says Stahl. "In this picture I am trying to point out these things without delivering a sermon in celluloid."

Film Magnate Received By Notables

Sol Lesser extended the circle of his acquaintances by three notables during his recent brief jaunt to and from Europe. He returned with his head on straight even after having been the guest of the great Lord Beaverbrook, the even more celebrated Maeterlinck and the still more notable Lloyd George. The latter he met less than a week prior to the former premier's departure for America.

To each of these three celebrities Mr. Lesser presented a print of the three finished subjects of his "Secrets of Life" series, including "The Bee," "The Ant" and "The Spider." Beaverbrook assured the president of Principal Pictures Corporation that he was so impressed with the educational and entertaining value of these pictures made by Louis H. Tolhurst that he proposed to see that they were shown throughout London in all the schools. Maeterlinck was so pleased with the microscopic photoplays of insect life that he presented Mr. Lesser with a special and autographed copy of his wonderful work, "The Life of the Bee." Lloyd George expressed his belief that this series would introduce Mr. Lesser and his enterprises to the entire world in the light of a distinguished benefactor.

But these celebrities were only a few of the many whom Mr. Lesser met in connection with the business and social aspects of his tour. He and Mrs. Lesser spent an evening at the home of Sir Henry Fielding Dickens, son of the great Charles Dickens and whose interest in Lesser's enterprises was increased by the fact that he had recently seen Lesser's presentation of little Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist."

King Baggot will direct Mary Philbin i na Universal-Jewel production starring Mary Philbin immediately upon the conclusion of the filming of "My Mamie Rose" in which she is featured.

Will Open New Legitimate Theatre

Final plans and rehearsals are being rushed for the grand opening of Los Angeles' new Fine Arts Theatre, which will be a temple of the finest legitimate dramas.

The formal opening is Monday night, November 5th, when a cast of celebrities headed by Helen Jerome Eddy and Franklin Pangborn will present George Bernard Shaw's play "Androcles and the Lion."

The splendid new cushioned seats are now being installed and everything is being completed with an eye to the utmost comfort for the patrons and their thorough enjoyment of the finished dramas which are to be presented in the new playhouse.

Directors Willamene Wilkes and Dickson are bending every effort towards polishing up the first performance and the players are said to be showing untiring energy and enthusiasm in the perfection of their various roles.

He Had to Step Some

Lloyd Hughes arises to remark that the person who howls "fake" whenever a thrilling feat is accomplished on the screen, should be compelled to play certain scenes in "The Heritage of the Desert" recently staged at Flagstaff, Arizona.

Lloyd took particularly active part in these scenes in which a number of "heavies" turn guns on him and shoot at his feet to hasten his departure.

"They will shoot real bullets at you so the camera can pick up the spurts of dirt at your feet when the six-shooters become active," said Irving Willat to Hughes.

And real bullets they were.

The camera registered the quickest exit ever made by Lloyd Hughes out of a scene.

Sennett Adds to Units

Just as the news, regarding the closing down of various large moving picture studios for economic or reorganization reasons begins to break, announcement comes from the big Mack Sennett plant in Los Angeles that new companies are being added to those already working to complete the production schedule existing between Sennett and Pathe Exchanges.

Dick Jones, supervising director and production manager for the big comedy company, is very busy with Mr. Sennett, choosing story material and locales, passing on wardrobe and picking casts for forthcoming picture plays. In fact the well known lot is a veritable hive of industry, with every department taxed to capacity and functioning 100%.

"Despite the fact that an economic wave, justly expected and indeed overdue, is sweeping the picture producing end of the industry," said Sennett, "my productions will in no way be cheapened nor do I intend to suspend operations for a single day. On the contrary, my intentions are to invest even more time and capital in future expenditures. The big success of my feature productions starring Mabel Normand, and the increased popularity attending the release of each Ben Turpin comedy special and Mack Sennett comedy, has given me reason to believe that every exhibitor in the country approves of the Sennett method of producing, i.e., to spend as much money as is necessary to unfold a good story, with a good cast, ably directed, amid beautiful surroundings and proper atmosphere, with attractive, though not necessarily pretentious sets."

At present, Roy Del Ruth is bringing to completion a two-reel comedy featuring Harry Langdon, Alberta Vaughn and Jack Cooper, and will begin immediately on another story with the same cast.

Del Lord and Erle Kenton, who have only recently completed a two reeler each, have again started on two new comedy productions in which Billy Bevan, Harry Gribbon, Madeleine Hurlock, Kalla Pasha and other of the known Sennett comiques are playing the important parts.

While these three units are in production, Dick Jones is holding daily rehearsals with new companies and interviewing prospective directors. He is making test scenes with several screen and stage celebrities to interpret nationally known comedy characters with whom it is intended to create a new series of comedies, distinctive from anything previously attempted by Sennett.

Mack Sennett also made announcement that the erstwhile feminine charmer, internationally known as the Sennett Bathing Girl, would soon reappear on the silver sheet. In fact, he is already assembling a new chorus of beauties who will overwhelm the popularity of the previous famous aggregation of sea-nymphs.

Wanted: Some Choice Oil Wells

Richard Walton Tully is anxious to get in touch with some philantropic soul who is willing to donate a few producing oil wells as a sacrifice to art, or at least, who is willing to permit the cremation of several gushers for an important sequence in his screen version of the Rex Beach story "Flowing Gold."

It is necessary that several sturdy oil wells be fed to the flames during the course of the production, and unless some of Mr. Tully's benevolent friends in the oil business come to the rescue, he contemplates with horror the possibility of being forced to purchase a few for the conflagrations.

"Flowing Gold" Progresses

Richard Walton Tully has completed the scenario for "Flowing Gold," his next First National production, which is to be an adaptation of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold" and with Joseph de Grasse who is to direct the picture, is now busily engaged in rounding out the cast. Actual production will be under way in about two weeks.

It is true that most of the producers of motion pictures are constantly on the lookout for new faces of promise for the screen. Occasionally a good bet is discovered. Harold Lloyd, a highly successful discoverer, is given credit for finding another new one. She is Peggy Montgomery, who will be seen quite prominently in his next feature comedy. Douglas Fairbanks heard about her and was sufficiently impressed to give the young actress additional opportunity in "The Thief of Bagdad," in which production she is working at the present time. Already Miss Montgomery has been engaged for another picture in which she will have an even more important part. Thus, it may be assumed, if Harold and Doug are judges, another future-star seems well on her way via the much discussed discovery route. It is at least a flying start to have Douglas Fairbanks second the "motion" o fHarold Lloyd.

There's an oil boom on in Hollywood! Carpenters are busily reproducing the entire main street of Ranger, Texas, during the days of the oil boom, for the Richard Walton Tully production of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold."

In closing, it is remarkable to note that Mack Sennett is one of the very few producers who, starting in the pioneering days, has continued to produce short reel and feature length pictures, despite all the idle talk of poor business and the many other calamities which some people seem to think overtakes the picture making inductry at regular intervals.

NEW DISTRIBUTOR HERE

An announcement which will be first importance to every inde-ndent producer on the coast has st been issued from the New rk office of Merrick & Cohen to effect that a coast office for the ecial benefit of producers has en established at 840 South Olive reet, Los Angeles, with W. C. ompson in charge.

Merrick & Cohen as is well own, have to their credit the ccessful distribution of more an one hundred twenty-six fea-res and it will be Mr. Thomp-n's duty to offer the services of errick & Cohen to all producers ho are now making pictures or ho have pictures on the shelf hich they are anxious to market.

Merrick & Cohen have connec-ons with the biggest and best in-pendent exchanges in every ter-tory, assuring the sales of all oduct without the delays which ve in the past proved to be such hindrance to independent produc-n organizations.

Another feature which in the ght of past experience is of the most importance to the producer the arrangement made by Mr. lax Cohen of Merrick & Cohen ith the firm of Stein & Bilchik, rtified public accountants, where-all funds will be handled and spersed under their direction as cal agents, the producer receiv-g his share of all income, im-ediately upon its receipt.

Mr. Cohen states, contrary to the eneral opinion, that the state right market is in as healthy a condition as it has been for years, and that there is a ready market for all types of pictures.

Mr. George Merrick who is associated with Mr. Cohen, is one of the most celebrated picture editors in the United States. He has to his credit a score of productions which he has changed from what is known in the trade as "weak sisters" into productions which enjoy success.

In addition to commanding an immediate outlet throughout the entire American market, Merrick & Cohen have concluded arrangements with Reginald Warde of Guaranty Pictures, for the sale of foreign rights. This organization which is affiliated with Merrick & Cohen have offices in New York, London, Paris and Berlin, and upon Mr. Warde's arrival in Europe, offices in other centers of the continent will be established.

Mr. W. C. Thompson who is one of the best known picture men on the West coast will be very happy to welcome any producer having productions all ready made, and also will be available at all times to give his advice and opinion to those who are contemplating production in the near future. Mr. Thompson just arrived from New York where he held several conferences with the headquarters staff of Merrick & Cohen. On his return to the coast from New York he made a very extensive study of the independent field and has all the facts and figures relating to successful marketing of pictures on his finger tips.

J. C. "Jack" Fowler, who recently finished his character role of John Greenleaf Whittier in "Maude Muller" at the Hollywood studios, desires to enter complaint, to wit: That while playing recently at the Metro he received four calls from as many studies in one day, and, why the sam-hill can't the companies regulate their productions to jibe with his time.

Few actors or few followers of any other line of endeavor have a record equal to that of Noble Johnson for uninterrupted activity. For seven consecutive years he has worked every work-day excepting eleven in various motion picture productions. A considerable portion of this time he devoted to the pursuit of his profession at Universal City, where he was under a long-term contract, but for about two years he has been freelancing, which means it has been necessary to find new "jobs" frequently. However, fortunately, he has not been called upon to do much seeking for the reason that his services have been very much in demand and he has gone from one big production to another without the loss of much time between. Mr. Johnson is at present playing the important role of the East Indian prince in support of Douglas Fairbanks in "The Thief of Bagdad" and among his forthcoming appearances will be in Cecil B. DeMille's "The Ten Commandments," Goldwyn's "In the Palace of the King" and the William Fox production of "Cameo Kirby." Moreover, Mr. Johnson is already being sought by thre different producrs to start with them as soon as he completes his engagement with Mr. Fairbanks.

Kenneth Gibson is again carving a niche in the illustrious old Hall of Fame in his portrayal of the part of Bobby Lamhorn in Hobart Henley's "The Turmoil" at the Universal, featuring George Hackathorne and Elenoar Boardman. It is a tame-cat role similar to his recent success in "Daytime Wives" in which his character role of Larry Valentine was so excellently handled that it was thoroughly depised by the audience, but the portrayal by Kenneth has received the plaudits of both press and public.

Newcomer is Composite of Famed Stars

Fantine Larrymore, whose recent arrival to the screen marks another splendid contribution by the legitimate theatre to the shadow stage. Her friends are predicting a brilliant career for her in the motion picture world. In addition to being an exceptionally good delineator of society roles she possesses marked ability as a classical dancer. It is interesting to note that she resembles Gloria Swanson, Pola Negri, Madamme Nazimova and Nita Naldi, in her physical appearance. She has the Swanson nose and mouth, the Negri eyes, Madamme Nazimova coiffure, and possesses a Naldi-like expression. Just what this resemblance will gain for her is a matter for conjecture but it is safe to assume that if she continues in the same manner in which she has made her debut her ultimate success is assured.

"Torment" Has Cosmopolitan Cast

Hollywood is cosmopolitan. Everyone knows that. But few realize that every picture made there brings together people from all over the world.

As a typical—not an exceptional or outstanding—instance the cast of "Torment," which Maurice Tourneur is making at United Studios for First National release, was questioned this week.

Mr. Tourneur was born in France and spent the first 35 years of his life there, with the exception of a couple of years spent in Africa and in a world tour with Mme. Rejan.

Owen Moore, who has the male lead, spent the first 17 years of his life in Ireland. Bessie Love, who has the leading feminine part, was born and brought up in Texas. Jean Harshlot lived in Copenhagen, Denmark, until he was thirty. Joseph Kilgour was born in Canada and spent his early years in England. Maude George, a cousin of Grace George, was born in Riverside, Cal., and has lived her entire theatrical career in Los Angeles—first at the old Burbank, in stock, and since in pictures. George Cooper was born in Newark, N. J., and Morgan Wallace in Santa Barbara.

Film Star Was Renowned As Organist

Most of the stars of the screen have had some experience on the speaking stage either in the legitimate theatre or vaudeville; but Wanda Hawley—as far as we know—is the first organist to attain cinematic celebrity.

Originally Miss Hawley's ambition was to be a concert and opertic singer, but recurrent spells of laryngitis diverted her to the study of the pipe organ. As an organist she attained considerable repute in the Northwest, and later went East where she played in one of Brooklyn's most famous churches, and also gave concert solos at the Rialto Theatre in New York City. In fact, it was Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, famous musician-exhibitor, who first suggested to her that she enter the films.

A couple of years later the fruit of Riesenfeld's suggestion was visible in the electric lights over the Rialto Theatre in Times Square where he played practically every one of Miss Hawley's stellar pictures. Incidentally the blonde star recently finished her work in the leading feminine role of Vitagraph's picturization of "The Man From Brodney's."

"Strangers of the Night" a Louis B. Mayer production which is at the Alhambra this week is one of Fred Niblo's matserpieces which scored tremendously upon its recent showing here. Prominent in the cast are Enid Bennett, Mat Moore, Barbara LaMarr and Robert McKim.

Your Question— and its Answer

QUESTION—"I have awful aches and pains in my back, especially when I stoop to lift anything. Have had this trouble now for a year, and with it have headaches, and feel dull and tired all over. Please tell me what you can do for me."

ANSWER—Evidently something is radically wrong with your kidneys and you should lose no time in correcting it. The kidneys, you know, are constantly filtering poisons from the blood. But weak kidneys allow these poisons to accumulate. The effect is soon felt in backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and often bladder trouble. You feel nervous and depressed, tired, stiff and achy. Don't risk some serious kidney sickness, but have the cause of your present condition corrected with Spinal Adjustments. Results are excellent in cases like yours, because we are able to search out and correct the causative condition. A thorough Spinal Analysis will reveal this cause.

This department is conducted and edited to spread the knowledge of Chiropractic for the cause and correction of diseased conditions.

THE HEROIC YEARS

". . . that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave their last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."—ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

On the eleventh hour . . . of the eleventh day . . . of the eleventh month, five years ago, finis was written to the greatest holocaust this world has ever known. On that day came the cessation of the terrific upheaval that had so unpretentiously begun four or five years previous in a quiet little city of Bosnia-Herzegovina when a visiting Austrian nobleman was shot to death on the streets by a patriot of the oppressed country, igniting the smoldering hatreds and jealousies of a score or more of Old World dynasties into a flame of fury and rampant bloodshed that scorched the entire continent, eventually engulfing the world itself. Not since the days of Caesar of Hannibal had there been seen such an array of military forces, marching to conquest and defense. Soon the flower of European manhood was face to face behind far-flung trenches in Flanders and Russia, and on the stretches of the seven seas. High-seas depredations began and continued unabated until the Lusitania sank to a watery grave, carrying with it hundreds of American citizens. This was the defy. Not long after the forty-eight states and their colonies had entered the conflict and the struggle became the war of Right against Might.

Two million men answered the call. There were great parades, big celebrations as the fighting forces embarked for foreign shores. The martial spirit was everywhere, it pervaded the very atmosphere. Fine speeches were made. Appreciation of the warriors was evidenced at all places. Many colorful promises were made of the reward that awaited these men when they returned to the homeland. They were the nation's heroes, and El Dorado itself would be theirs when they returned after the victory. The Marne, St. Mihiel, the Argonne emblazoned the name of the American soldiers on historic annals. Loud and prolonged were the praises and laudations. Through the weary months they fought for home and country, on the shell-swept, muddy battlefields of foreign lands. The Armistice came, peace had been won. They returned to their native lands, only to find that they were ignored; to find the bursting bubbles of war-time promises. Truly they had been betrayed; they kept faith but others did not. 'Twas easy enough to treat them as heroes in the heroic years, the years when America first entered the struggle, but how about now? We find them neglected, the wounded and maimed that have come back. Public sentiment has not been with them. We have not been faithful to them. They gave their manhood, their youth, their all, and what have we given them in return. Only cynical glances and sarcastic comment that is heart-rending to say the least. The least we could do would be to give them a helping hand, a word of good-cheer and fraternity. Surely we cannot deny them this on this memorable occasion. Yet we must look further; they deserve their just rewar din whatever form it may be asked, as monetary bonus or otherwise. Public opinion will decide this. Your opinion and that of your neighbor. What shall it be?

"The Isle of Vanishing Men"

This Week's Theatre Notes

"The Waning Sex," by Frederic and Fanny Batton at the Egan Theatre has proven one of the most important theatrical events of the new season.

"The Waning Sex" is along entirely different lines than anything these talented playwrights have as yet given to the American stage and is a comedy of crisp dialogue rather than spirited action. There are times when the interchange fairly crackles and the interest is well sustained throughout.

Frank Egan has gone the limit in providing a cast that would do credit to Broadway including as it does Edmund Lowe and Bertha Mann, both names to conjure with. The remainder of the cast is none the less notable enlisting the services of Bessie Eyton, Hazel Lowry, Lilyan Tealman, Frederick Truesde, Hugh Huntley, Max Montesole, Brady Kline and Elwyn Eaton. The settings are excellent and Fred J. Butler has done a good job in the staging of the play.

After a record breaking run of eighteen weeks in San Francisco the musical comedy, "Topsy and Eva," which had its inception in the northern city, opens at the Majestic theatre this week with the White Sisters featured.

Of course, the book of "Topsy and Eva" was suggested by the famous story of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and the adaptation for stage purposes was done by Catherine Chisholm Cushing. It is said to be the first time the Harriet Beecher Stowe story has ever been put into a musical play.

In the title roles will be seen the White Sisters who were here last year in the Fred Stone show, "Tip-Top" and were the feature hit of that splendid production.

In support of the youthful artists Producer Thomas Wilkes has gathered together a company of sixty that includes several names high in theatrical circles and a chorus of California girls that would make Flo Ziegfeld turn green with envy.

This week at the Hillstreet theatre marks the first appearance in vaudeville of the famous screen comedian Clyde Cook, possessor of the celebrated Jelly Legs.

Another feature on the bill is Los Angeles' favorite team George Whiting and Sadie Burt, with an entirely new outlay of songs and fun.

Bothwell Browne and his Peacock Revue are also on the bill.

The Dixie Four, a quartette of colored entertainers whose dancing and singing is what is usually called "a riot" everywhere are also present.

The Lime Trio are comedy acrobats who have gained an enviable reputation. Completing the vaudeville will be Willie Schenck and Miss Margarite in "A Eurepean Surprise."

The feature photoplay will be Herbert Rawlinson in "The Clean Up."

"The Dangerous Maid" which is showing at Loew's State Theatre is entirely different from any photoplay Constance Talmadge has ever made in that it gives her her first big opportunity for straight dramatic work.

Constance Talmadge has the role of a madcap little rebel who dons a cavalier's sword and costume and engages in a thrilling series of adventures. In the cast are Conway Tearle, Morgan Wallace, Tully Marshall, Marjorie Daw, Charles Gerrard, Lou Morrison, Otto Mathiesen, Kenneth Gibson, Ann May, Kate Price, and many others of note.

This production was directed by Victor Heerman and is released as a First National picture.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., makes his bow as a screen star this week at Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre, in his first picture, "Stephen Steps Out."

The picture is an adaptation of Richard Harding Davis' famous story, "The Grand Cross of the Crescent," which is a wholesome, adventurous story of American Boyhood, with drama, humor, pathos and a seasoning dash of melodrama. Theodore Roberts plays a featured role and Noah Beery, Harry Myers, Frank Currier, and other noted character talent are in support.

The musical attractions includes U. S. C.'s popular "Eleven Trojans" the college orchestra who appear in football regalia and promise to bring musical fame to their alma mater; the singing Dennis Sisters, Herman Heller and the Metropolitan Orchestra and Henry Murtagh at the Wurlitzer.

This will positively be the last week of Harold Lloyd at Grauman's Million Dollar theatre, for a contract signed by Sid Grauman and Mary Pickford sets the date for the latter's production of "Rosita" the week following starting November 19th. On that date Harold Lloyd's "Why Worry?" is scheduled to move to Grauman's Rialto for those who missed this comedy which is acclaimed Lloyd's biggest and funniest production.

It is the story of a rich youth who imagines he has many ills, but forgets them all when he is hurled into the midst of a South American revolution. Dainty Jobyna Ralston and huge John Aasen, a nine foot giant, aid Lloyd in his fun-making.

A Doughboy and a Pedestal

The boys who saw the major offensives on the French battle line seldom have much to say about them and it is probable that only a few of Kenneth Gibson's most intimate friends know that as a part of the Third Division he was in the Chateau Thierry, San Mihiel and Argonne drives.

Once in a while, however, young Gibson opens up and tells some of the very interesting adventures that he had abroad during the World War.

It was because of one of these adventures that he is the possessor of the unique and symbolic picture shown on this page.

It was during the onslaught at Chateau Thierry that Gibson, who was a lieutenant, was stationed at an outpost to "observe fire"—was ordered to cross the Marne to determine if the Germans or the Americans occupied a certain small village. The American artillery, it seems, could not fire on this village until they were certain that their own troops had left it reached it.

Lieutenant Dolan and Gibson crossed the Marne on a bridge which the French had thrown across earlier in the day. It was made of wooden house-doors nailed together, that had been taken from the peasant cottages near the shore. At each step of the way, the doors sank down knee-deep in the water.

It was just growing dark as they reached the other side. Here the young men found a French sergeant, and between they they made him understand what information they wanted.

This man was almost crazed by the fact that out of two hundred and fifty of his regiment that had met the Germans that morning, there were only fourteen alive, and these were busy trying to separate the wounded from the dead. He took the two Americans through a shell burned wheat-field filled with barbed-wire entanglements to the stone bowl of a large fountain in and seated cross-legged inside this fountain base they found five French officers.

Kenneth says that during the entire war he never again saw such despair as was depicted on their faces. From them they obtained the information that the Germans not only occupied the town but that they also held the ridge just beyond where they were seated. As soon enough to verify the information the German machine guns began raking the wheatfield and the river beyond.

The two Americans knowing that they must return with this information, started back only to find that a few well placed shells had carried away the temporary bridge. There was nothing to do but swim the stream.

This they did under fire but fortunately reached the other side in safety.

One day Gibson's mother heard this story from Kenneth's pals and insisted upon going from Paris where her son had been studying at Sorbornne university, to the place where he had been in this great danger.

On the way out they stopped at Rheims for luncheon and of course made a pilgrimage to the ruined Cathedral. While standing in front of the shell shattered doors, they came nearer and nearer to the pedestal on which the statue of Jeanne D'Arc had stood for many years. As yet it had not been replaced, having been carried away for safety during the bombardment of the Cathedral.

"Jump up there, son, and I'll take your picture."

Mrs. Gibson always smiles when she tells the rest of this story.

"Kenneth rather prides himself on his poise," she says, "but as we came nearer and nearer to our destination he began to grow more and more excited."

"Finally, just as we were passing a given point he said: 'Here it is, mother!'

"The driver pulled up beside the river. Kenneth suddenly stood up in the car. His breath came sharp. Then for a moment he looked somewhat bewildered.

"'Yes, this is the place, mother, this is the place,' he reiterated, and then involuntarily the words came:

"'Why, how narrow it is!'

"Even though my heart almost stopped beating at the thought of that terrible journey back across the Marne under the fire of German guns, I could not help smiling a little," said Mrs. Gibson, "as Kenneth, realizing the confession he had made, said:

"'I don't care if it is narrow, mother. On that night it seemed as wide as the Atlantic Ocean.'"

When they had returned to Paris and the pictures were developed, what was their surprise to find this wonderful symbolical picture.

The cocky American soldier, smiling victoriously on the top of the historic pedestal, while at the base was a worn and wounded poilu, whose whole attitude expressed a longing for rest.

This picture is symbolic of the American and French armies at that time.

Then Mr. Gibson had no thought of becoming an actor in moving pictures as he was studying for a diplomatic career. But he often says, with a sly smile, that both the army training and the diplomatic instruction he received has peculiarly fitted him for his present occupation.

Kenneth will soon be seen with Norma Talmadge in "Ashes of Vengeance," and he is at present one of the all-star cast under the direction of Mr. Hobart Henley which is filming Booth Tarkington's famous book, "The Turmoil," at Universal City.

By Arthur Q. Hagerman

Hayden Stevenson, playing the whimsical, human role of the prizefight manager in "The Leather Pushers," a part that has endeared him to fans throughout the world, and who recently played a principal role in King Baggot's all star production of "Blackmail" for Universal, was a stock company leading man before he went into pictures. His total experience as an actor covers nearly twenty years.

It is an interesting feature of Stevenson's work that although he plays this likable role in "The Leather Pushers" to perfection, he can play a "heavy" equally well. He has such a role in "Blackmail."

Stock companies in forty chief American cities featured him as a leading man. He was in the road for two years with Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead." His acting before the camera bears the unmistakable stamp of a veteran.

A feeling of good cheer prevades Universal City. Two of its famous ones, tied to their beds with accident or illness, are reported rapidly recovering.

They are Reginald Denny, star of "The Leather Pushers" and "The Spice of Life," who was seriously injured in an automobile accident three weeks ago, and Edward Sedgwick, director of Hoot Gibson, who started a picture called "Courtin' Calamity" and went to the hospital with a case of poisoning from dental trouble.

Denny will be in bed for several weeks but Sedgwick is reported improving so rapidly that he probably will be at work within a few days.

"That Kid From Madrid—Michigan," the newest of "The Leather Pushers," starring Billy Sullivan, has been completed at Universal City by Edward Laemmle. The prize ring classics have been one of the series of box office attractions in screen history. Billy Sullivan, a former champion himself and related to the famous Sullivan, takes the place of Reginald Denny, who has been raised to big feature rank in 'The Spice of Life" and other pictures.

Clarence L. Brown, director of "The Acquittal," the all star Universal-Super-Jewel production which has received excellent reviews as a mystery melodrama, is deep in the primitive wilds around Fort Bragg, California, filming scenes for "The Signal Tower," a Jewel picturization of Wadsworth Camp's story.

Virginia Valli is the star of "The Signal Tower" and the supporting cast includes Rockcliffe Fellows, Wallace Beery, J. Farrell McDonald and other players of note. James O. Spearing prepared the scenario under Bernard McDonald's supervision.

Perley Poore Sheehan, the novelist, who has just completed directing his own story, "Innocent" at Universal City, is at work on one of his novels, which may also be seen shortly as

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 5th, 1923.

Charlie Chaplin spent the week-end in San Francisco, coming north to be among those present at the opening of the racing season at the new Tanforan Track, last Saturday.

Buster Keaton, famous comedian, arrived in San Francisco last Saturday to attend the world's premier of his latest picture, "Hospitality," at the Warfield Theatre, and also to buy a ship, and make arrangements for the filming here of part of his next picture. Immediately upon the arrival the Keaton party, composed of Lou Anger, business manager; Jack Blystone, director, and Jean Haves, Clyde Bruckman and Joseph Mitchell, scenarists, they left for the Oakland estuary, where it is planned to look over the "graveyard of dead ships" with the object in view of purchasing the biggest one for the next Keaton picture. According to the present plans considerable of the picture will be shot here in the bay, and filming will start at an early date. Besides the regular company which will be brought from the south local extra people will be used.

Dr. Orlando E. Miller, head of the Rellimeo Films, went to Hollywood on Friday to see the first showing of "The Yellow Stigma," the latest picture made by the organization, with an all-star cast under the direction of Colin Campbell. While in the South Dr. Miller was also guest of honor at a big dinner given in his honor Saturday night by Gordon and Grace Michie, business manager and scenarist of the company.

The recently organized Mandarin Photoplays of this city will begin production on their first picture, "Young China," within ten days. The enterprise is being backed almost entirely by Chinese capital.

The Fisher Productions have moved their San Francisco offices from the Commercial National Building to the Russ Building, also on Montgomery Street.

The Gerson Pictures Corporation have just begun work on the fourth picture of their series of six-reelers, starring Ora Carew. The new picture is from the pen of Tom Gibson, who also directs it, and is a mining story. The whole company will leave on Wednesday for an abandoned mine in the mountains back on La Honda, where they will be on location for some time. The company supporting Miss Carew includes Jay Morley as leading man, Hal Stephens, Ted Oliver, Helen Howell, Eddie O'Brien, Fernando Galvez, and others.

David M. Chapman, until recently business manager of the Fisher Productions, has severed his connection with that organization, and recently returned from a trip to the East. He expects at an early date to go to Hollywood to begin the filming of some comedies of his own, backed by Eastern capital.

An interesting flotilla set sail from here a few days ago with the departure of the seven ships bought here at a cost of $45,000.00 for the Frank Lloyd Productions next picture "Black Hawk." Perhaps no stranger outfit ever set sail on the Pacific, for there were seven shi of all sorts and kinds towed by a torpedo d stroyer. Besides their own equipment the boa carried full crews and cargoes of ropes, li boats, sails, winches, and all sorts of sea- g ing supplies. The destroyer also carried cook, and a fully equipped galley where all t food was cooked and hauled out via cables the other ships like a large sea going caf teria. Most of the picture will be filmed som where in southern waters, with some locati work near Burlingame.

Herman Luftin, president of the Golden Ga Films went to Los Angeles on Thursday nigh The company are making their plans to sta production in a southern studio almost at onc

Frank Burt and Earl Sibley, heads of t Exhibitors Exchange, have completed a wor ing agreement with a casting bureau of Holl wood, to co-operate with them in the furnis ing of all extras, and people for bits for visiting companies working in San Francisc They are also prepared to furnish any and supplies needed by outfits here on location.

Wayne Mack will begin production of a pi ture about the middle of November. It w be a six reel comedy-drama, with an all-st cast and a working title of "Jimsy." The pi ture will be shot in and near San Francisco.

Fatty Arbuckle was a week-end guest in S Francisco.

Armistice Day Verse

THE RENDEZVOUS

ave a rendezvous with Death
some disputed barricade;
en Spring comes back with rustling shade d apple blossoms fill the air—
ave a rendezvous with Death
en Spring brings back blue days and fair.
may be he shall take my hand
d lead me into his dark land, d close my eyes and quench my breath—may be I shall pass him still.
ave a rendezvous with Death
some scarred slope of battered hill, en Spring comes 'round again this year
d the first meadow flowers appear.

d knows 'twere better to be deep lowed on silk and scented down, here Love throbs out in blissful sleep,
lse nigh to pulse, and breath to breath, here hushed awakenings are dear—
t I've a rendezvous with Death, midnight in some flaming town,
en Spring trips north again this year,
d I to my pledged word am true, shall not fail that rendezvous.

—Alan Seeger.

COMRADES

Comrades, pour the wine tonight,
For the parting is with dawn!
Oh, the clink of cups together,
With the daylight coming on!
Greet the morn
With a double horn,
When strong men drink together!

Comrades, gird your swords tonight,
For the battle is with dawn!
Oh, the clash of shields together,
With the triumph coming on!
Greet the foe
And lay hi mlow,
When strong men fight together!

Comrades, watch the tides tonight,
For the sailing is with dawn!
Oh, to face the spray together,
With the tempest coming on!
Greet the sea
With a shout of glee,
When strong men roam together!

Comrades, give a cheer tonight,
For the dying is with dawn!
Oh, to meet the stars together,
With the silence coming on!
Greet the end
As a friend, a friend,
When strong men die together!

IN FLANDER'S FIELDS

In Flanders fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark our place; and in the sky
The larks, still bravely singing, fly
Scarce heard amid the guns below.

We are the Dead. Short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved, and were loved, and we lie
In Flanders fields.

Take up our quarrel with the foe:
To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields.

Lieutenant John McCrae.

ELEGIACS

Low flowing breezes are roaming the broad valley dimm'd in the gloaming:
Thro' the black-stemm'd pines only the far river shines.
Creeping thro' blossomy rushes and bowers of rose-blowing bushes,
Down by the poplar tall rivulets babble and fall.
Barketh the shepherd-dog cheerily; the grasshopper carolleth clearly;
Deeply the turtle coos; shrilly the owlet halloos;
Winds creep; dews fall chilly; in her first sleep earth breathes stilly:
Over the pools in the burn watergnats murmur and mourn.
Sadly the far kine loweth; the glimmering water outfloweth:
Twin peaks shadowed with pine slope to the dark hyaline.
Lowthroned Hesper is stayed between the two peaks; but the Naiad Throbbing in mild unrest holds him beneath in her breast.

—Tennyson.

Yet Ah, that Spring should vanish with the Rose!
That Youth's sweet-scented manuscript should close!
The Nightingale that in the branches sang,
Ah whence, and whither flown again, who knows!

—Omar Khayam.

For you our dead, beyond the sea,
Who gave your lives to hold us free,
By us, who keep your memory,
What can be said?

We cannot sing your praises right,
Lost heroes of the endless fight;
Whose souls into the lonely night,
Too soon have fled.

We can but honor, cherish, bless,
Your sacred names; no words express
The measure of our thankfulness,
To you, our dead.

—Sidney Low.

Come, fill the cup, and in the fire of Spring
Your Winter-garment of Repentance fling:
The Bird of Time has but a little way
To flutter—and the Bird is on the Wing.

—Omar Khayam.

WAR

By Eric Mayne

There are those who say, "The war is over, let us forget it."

The war is not over. Even if it was, we could not forget it.

The war brought out all the most beautiful traits of civilized humanity. We cannot forget that.

The war let loose the vilest passions of which man is capable. We should not forget that.

If the Nations remembered more about war, the fantastic tricks of well meaning, but incompetent politicians, would not be approved or applauded.

If the people did not want war they would insist upon their competent statesmen preventing war.

A Nation is never so enthusiastic as it is when it is going to war.

We are told that the great war was a Capitalist War. At the close of 1918 there were more millionaires in the world than ever before.

More Nations in bankruptcy,—More individuals millionaires.

It is also well to remember that the people in some cities wrecked the Embassys of the Countries they were going to fight, even before the paid fighting men started work.

While some of the Nations have begun to pay their debts, others have kept on fighting, and others are spending all their energy and money in preparing for another war.

Abraham Lincoln, when accounting for the Civil War, said: "Both parties deprecated war, but one of them would make war rather than let the Nation survive, and the other would accept war rather than let it perish. And the war came."

A great and comprehensive statement that accounts for many wars.

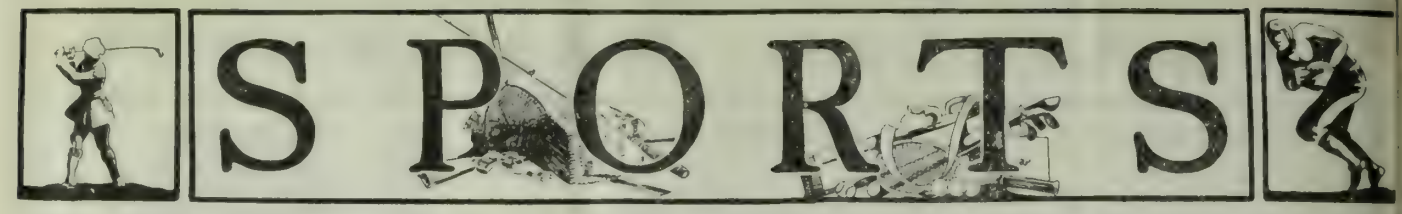
Is a thing as ruthless and terrible as war, essential to the World's development?

"Why do the heather rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?"

The poetic question of the illustrious Psalmist is still unanswered.

We know that heathens, and Christians, do rage, and that people do imagine vain things.

We also know that there is a great patriotism, a noble heroism, a loving service, and a spirit of great righteousness, that is never revealed except by war.



Jack Taylor, Canadian heavyweight wrestler defeated Vladek Zbyszko of New York at Winnipeg in a recent match. Zbyszko suffered an injured knee.

Harry Morrissey, old-time starter, has been signed by Dick Ferris to act as starter at the new Culver City horse race track which is slated to open up Christmas. Nags from Tanforan and other speed points will be present. Horse race interest is centered largely around Belmont Park, Latonia, Tijuana, Tanforan and Churchill Downs, and the new Culver City track will practically complete the circle of pony bases throughout the country.

Bert Colima, Coast middleweight champ, and Jimmy Delaney, light heavyweight from St. Paul, will mix at Jack Doyle's Vernon arena Tuesday night. This ought to be a very interesting match as both these boys are top-notch in their respective classes.

Jack Renault, the Canadian heavyweight boxer who recently knocked out Floyd Johnson at New York is being mentioned for either a Harry Wills, Tommy Gibbons, or Luis Angel Firpo bout next. The rating tangle will be straightened out somewhat by the coming fight between Georges Carpentier of France and Tommy Gibbons, and then the battlers propose to get down to business and eliminate the duds, with the possibility of sending the victor against Jack Dempsey in the near future. The champ will probably ask a million or so for such an elimination bout. It is certain it would bring tremendous crowds.

K. O. Bobby Dyson, popular New Bedford, Mass., boy who fought Dandy Dick Griffin at Hollywood Stadium several times, is returning to the Coast after visiting his home. These two boys compose one of the most popular punching personnel in pugilictic circles here at this time and whenever they're matched interest runs high.

A date has been set for the wrestling match between Walter Miller of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, and Taro Miyake, the jiu-jitsu expert. The catch-as-catch-can struggle will be held November 15th and is expected to draw a good crowd.

Reports emanating from Indiana are to the effect Notre Dame University is willing to take on any representative California football team provided the clash will be of real importance, and destined to draw a good crowd. In other words, Knute Reckne wants to be sure that before he sends his boys out here that they're going up against some first-class players, in an event something like the Pasadena Tournament of Roses on New Year's Day. He argues that his aggregation has made a record in eastern football circles that doesn't warrant them coming out here and taking on some prep school. That sounds reasonable, yet there ought to be some school here that can mingle with the Hoosiers.

Welker Cochran of Hollywood will pl Willie Hoppe for the world's 18-2 balk-line b liard championship at Chicago next mon These two recently tied in a series of sensation plays at the New York games, Hoppe winni 4 and losing 1; Cochran doing the same.

Jess Willard, former heavyweight champ, h bought a $40,000 home near Glendale. He h sold his spacious home on Crenshaw Bouleva in this city. With James J. Jeffries living Burbank, with Willard at Glendale, and wi Dempsey here this region will, without a dou be recognized as the foremost center of fig homes.

Editor "Camera!"

In only 24 issues, starting May 26th and to November 3rd, you state (in the Pulse of The Studios) that "The Boomerang," at the Mayer Studio, is preparing. How very interesting; same old yarn for past 24 weeks. Try something new and more reliable.

Disgusted Reader.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Behold, once again the annonymous pen flourishes! Once more the ravings of the disguised quill come to our desk; tinged with a touch of smart-elecness that is amusing. It is evidently written by some member of the fair sex, to judge by the handwriting. If our correspondent had spent half as much time communicating with Mr. Mayer's production office to verify our statement as she spent inscribing this phoney note, she would have secured far greater satisfaction. For her information we wish to state here that the Louis B. Mayer production of "The Boomerang" is still in preparation, and verification of this can be obtained from his offices. This picture has been held in abeyance for some time, due to the fact Mr. Mayer most graciously consented to loan Victor Schertzinger, who will direct it, to another company for a production or two, and just as soon as Mr. Schertzinger has completed his work there actual filming of "The Boomerang" will begin. Evidently Mr. Mayer desires that this task be performed by Schertzinger, else he certain would not have delayed production for t period of time he has. Furthermore we b lieve it isn't the place of our anonymous co respondent our ourselves to advise any pr ducer as to when and where he shall ma his pictures. "Camera!" is always delighted receive letters and will publish as many as po sible. The accompanying missive will eviden that we publish them whether they're compl mentary or not, for we make no discriminatio believing that everyone is entitled to expre their own sentiments... One thing we do ask the name of courtesy, however, is that you ma yourselves known and refrain from appendi meaningless signatures to your letters.

ACTORS SUED BY BOOKING AGENCY!

DEMILLE SIGNS BIG CONTRACT WITH FAMOUS PLAYERS

The signing of a new agreement between the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Cecil B. DeMille covering "all future products" of the producer of "The Ten Commandments" and other screen triumphs and calling for his active resumption of his executive duties as director-general of the corporation has been announced by Adolph Zukor, president, and Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production.

"No period of time is mentioned in the new agreement," said Mr. Lasky as he left on his annual Fall trip to the New York home offices of the organization, "yet never was an agreement entered into with a more definite understanding. The fact that this agreement is not restricted to time indicates as nothing else could, the great mutual respect and regard existing between Mr. Zukor, Mr. DeMille and myself.

"All future products of Mr. DeMille will be made for this organization, thereby assuring a continuation far into the future of our association in the making of Paramount Pictures.

"Mr. DeMille will continue to make productions of the same standard as he has made in the past. The first of these to be made under the new agreement will be 'Triumph,' on which he will start work immediately after the reopening of our studios following the shut-down period recently announced.

"In addition to continuing the production of his own pictures, Mr. DeMille will resume the executive duties of director-general of which he asked that he be relieved three years ago to permit him to give all his time to his own productions.

"At that time the corporation insisted that he retain the title of director-general even though he was relieved of the active duties attendant upon that position. This title he has retained, and I am happy that at once again he is to actively take over that position and be associated with me in supervising production.

"During my association with Mr. DeMille there has grown a strong personal friendship quite aside from my admiration and high regard for his capabilities. Mr. DeMille and I started our motion picture business careers together, and I feel we will be together until we bring those careers to a close."

DE MILLE SAYS:

"Years of close personal and business friendship between Mr. Adolph Zukor, Mr. Jesse L. Lasky and myself have brought unbreakable ties which we are now perpetuating in a new contract which leaves out the question of time. That my two friends and associates should have seen fit to contract for all my future film productions without any limitations of years, months and days is a consummation towards which we have been working for many years. Under it I will be able to proceed with plans not merely one or two years ahead but a decade in the future, if I so desire. It can be seen that this permits planning productions with unusual care and attention to details. It will permit me to make pictures above and beyond even the standard I have always tried to adhere to in the past.

"As Director-General, sharing with Mr. Lasky the executive headship of the Lasky Studio, I will resume active duties which I laid down three years ago. With Mr. Zukor and Mr. Lasky, I intend to work hand in hand to perpetuate for all Paramount pictures, including my own products, the values that can accrue from such a long-continued combination of personal and business friendship. It has been in years past a matter of pride to us that as the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has advanced so have we three progressed, hand in hand, our interests united, and it is deeply gratifying to me personally that our new agreement continues thit condition for all time. And I am very happy that the offices at the Lasky Studio, which have been my business home for so many years, will remain the seat of all my future film endeavors."

Writer Claims Royal Lineage

A number of stars of the stage and screen are descendants of titled personages or have themselves achieved this distinction but Winifred Dunn is the only scenario writer in filmdom who can point to a royal ancestor. One of her forefathers was King Malcolm of Scotland who was assassinated at Glamis in 1034 and who was succeeded by King Duncan—the same Duncan who appears in Shakespeare's "Macbeth," and who was murdered by him. Another interesting ancestor was Lord John Russell, one of Britain's Chief Justices; and Sir Johnston Forbes Robertson, the famous actor, is also related to her. Her father was Geo. Malcolm Dunn, an English barrister, who served as secretary to Gladstone and Labouchere, famous British statesmen.

In view of this background, it is an interesting fact that not one of the hundred or more original stories and adaptations which Miss Dunn has written for the screen has been laid in England. At the present time Winifred Dunn is scenario editor for Metro, and is now in the East collaborating with J. Hartley Manners, the author, and Laurette Taylor, the star, of "Happiness."

Hal Roach has taken out a life insurance policy of $200,000, making the comedy producing organization of which he is the head, the beneficiary. He started motion picture production a few years ago making one-reel comedies with Harold Lloyd. Now he has one of the largest studios in the industry devoted exclusively to comedies, with seven units going steadily.

"What good is a vacation between pictures," plaintively asks Lloyd Hamilton, "if one has to spend it working on the next story instead of going hunting?"

"Or going to the dentist," wails Ruth Hiatt, leading woman, "instead of shopping?"

"Or having tonsilitis and losing nine pounds," gulps Frank Yacanelli, comedian, "instead of going to Tia Juana!"

Commissions Alleged Due

Suit has been entered in the court of Judge John J. Fleming by Robertson & Webb, motion picture booking agency, now known as Clifford Robertson, Inc., against a group of motion picture actors including Jack Mulhall, Adolphe Menjou, Elliott Dexter, House Peters and King Baggot, for commissions covering past services. The defendants, through their attorney, Phil Cohen, aver that no services were rendered by the complainant, and that they are ready to contest same.

The first hearing has been set for January 28th. Great interest has been manifested in the proceedings as there have been several recent misunderstandings between film people and booking agencies, and this particular case, because of the folk involved, is expected to throw some light on the dilemma when it comes up for consideration.

Shaw May Film Shaw

George Bernard Shaw is to be made an immortal of the screen. And Harold Shaw may be called upon to put the works of the eminent British author on the celluloid coil.

Harold Shaw, while abroad, worked for several years for an English motion picture syndicate that now is planning an elaborate series of George Bernard Shaw photoplays, adapted from his stage successes, and the noted director has been offered the chance to supervise the productions. And, although he is no relation of the Britisher, the American Shaw says he is likely to accept the post of directing the Shavian pictures.

Some of George Bernard's plays have been filmed before, but the new series would be done in collaboration with the author himself and, therefore, would be more truly representative of the famous writer's ideas.

Harold Shaw recently concluded a feature contract with Metro and has declined to accept other offers here until he has decided whether or not he will return to England.

TAKES ISSUE WITH EDITOR

Wallace Worsley takes decided and absolute issue with William Allen White, when the Emporia sage, in an editorial declared that the movies "attract as habitues only cripplewits, lamebrains and half heads."

"I guess Mr. White has been sticking too close to his own home town to know what is going on," said Worsley, whose picture, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," is now enjoying as great a prestige as a picture has ever had.

"He doesn't seem to realize that the screen is telling American history to millions of Americans, that it has become one of the, if not the most substantial factor in world education. If Mr. White would drop into any Los Angeles theatre at any time and make a check of the audience he would find that it would assay very high in the most successful and brainiest type of men and women in American life."

TOURNEUR FINISHING 50TH

"Jealous Husbands," to be shown publicly beginning the middle of this month, marks Maurice Tourneur's fiftieth picture since his arrival in this country from France in 1914.

Before that, he had directed many pictures for the famous French producing pioneer, "Eclair." He picked up the megaphone after dropping the make-up, for he was a movie actor before becoming a director and before that an actor on the legitimate stage with Rejane and other famous French actresses.

His first American picture was "Mother," with Emma Dunn. This was followed by "The Man of the Hour," "The Wishing Ring," and "The Pit." Among others, he directed Mary Pickford in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," and Elsie Ferguson and Petrova made their most successful screen appearances under his direction. "Blue Bird," "Prunella," and "Treasure Island" are the pictures he directed which he likes most. "The Christian," "The Isle of Lost Ships" and "The Brass Bottle" are his most recent releases.

The finishing touches on "Jealous Husbands," his fiftieth production in the U. S. are now completed. It will be released by First National.

UPSETS DIGNITY OF GOBS

The dignity of the United States navy was seriously imperiled recently when officers of the Flagship California of the Pacific Fleet were receiving a group of distinguished visitors who had come to pay their respect to a new rear admiral.

"Say, Mister, how do I get out of here," came a voice from about knee high.

The officer turned and beheld with amazement a half-pint size reincarnation of Long John Silver —with a patch over the eye, peg leg, pirate clothes, cutlass and all.

Meanwhile on another deck Bob McGowan and Mark Goldaine, Hal Roach directors, were searching fore and aft for fat little Joe Frank Cobe, who with other members of "Our Gang" had boarded the big warship for scenes in a new Pathe comedy Hal Roach is making.

The official reception was halted while a gold-branded officer led portly little pirate back where he belonged.

Canines Are Cashing In

The pay-checks at the Christie studio last week were dog-biscuits. Thirty-one canine actors, varying from the kind that chase cats to the kind that get chased, are driving director Scott Sidney crazy because they refuse to pay any attention to the scenes as they are written in the script. Sidney claims that if he ever makes another animal picture he will insist upon clams—they never bark nor do they run out of a scene when they hear some kid's whistle.

Ralph Lewis has secured two stories for the first of his new series of Ralph Lewis Productions, the first being a dramatic narrative of small town life, in which Lewis plays the starring role of a judge. Charles Kenyon made the adaptation, the title of which has not yet been decided upon.

Script Team Keeps on Jump

The present slump does not seem to have effected Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin, the well-known collaborators on original stories, screen adaptations and titles. Within ten days they did the complete titling of "The Wanters," John M. Stahl's forthcoming picture; and also "Pleasure Mad," which Reginald Barker recently completed. This week they are working on the titles for "The Man Whom Life Passed By," which Victor Schertzinger has just finished directing from his own story for Metro.

Incidentally, Cowan-Higgin recently sold Metro their original story entitled "Woman's Intuition." Upon the completion of the titling now in hand, this busy firm will commence on the adaptations of two novels that will go into production within a month.

It looks like a very busy winter for this superlative team of writers.

SHOW STYLES

A number of the famous screen beauties of the Hollywood colony enjoyed a thrilling time at Priscilla Dean's beautiful Beverly home the other evening when Baroness d'Estreilles, American representative for Boue Eoeurs of Paris showed them the latest in Parisian fashions. Among those present were Norma Talmadge, May Allison, Theda Bara, Blanche Sweet, Florence Vidor, Eileen Percy, Enid Bennett, Lois Weber, Winifred Kingston, Mrs. Douglas MacLean and Anna Q. Nilsson.

Lois Zellner, the versatile writer who is now engaged upon an original photodrama entitled "My Life's My Own," has declined an offer to head the scenario department of a British producing company. Hollywood seems to be the reason.

ACCUSED AS TRAFFIC PEST

The traffic officers in the heart of the shopping district of Los Angeles know that Harold Lloyd is filming his next picture at the Hollywood Studios. Lloyd has tested their patience with his rattletrap wagon and two old plugs, blocking traffic and occasionally waking the team to a dash at runaway speed, which the officers contemplate terming reckless driving. The officers think "The Girl Expert" a bum title and suggest that is should be called "The Traffic Pest."

Mervyn LeRoy, who has just completed a principal role in Lasky's "The Call of the Canyon," has an excellent technical knowledge of picture production based upon experience as a cameraman and assistant director.

Duane Thompson has returned to the Christie fold to play opposite Jimmie Adams in a story that was written by Miss Thompson. Harold Beaudine is directing. .....

Victor Potel writes from Catalina that the fish are flying and biting, as of yore. Potel is locating on the island with Reginald Barker's "Cape Cod Folks" company.

Jap Bank in Scene

M. C. Levee's "Torment now being directed by Maur Tourneur at the United Studi will offer something in the way a novelty in that nearly half of t story is laid in the American Ba of Yokohama.

A sensational wrecking scene which the characters become tombed in the lower regions of t bank offer one of the big momen of the play. The sequence wh follows portrays the most drama elements of the plot and finds band of international crooks, th victims and a fortune in jewel removed from all communicati with the outside world. The su sequent scenes are said to disclo a highly dramatic theme and a expected to offer one of the m unusual themes yet attempted f the screen.

A massive reproduction of t lower vaults and adjoining roo of the bank in Japan have be built at the United Studios whe the sets occupy practically all the floor space of one of the lar stages. Exterior scenes and oth "atmospheric shots" will be phot graphed in Japan amidst the a tual locale of the plot and used conjunction with the situati filmed at the studio.

Small boys who visit the Fai banks studio keep Doug busy thin ing up answers to their questio The other day when a lad fro Iowa was introduced to the st he pointed to a house on a corn of the lot and said, "Say, Dou jump over that for me, will ya.

"Sure," replied Doug, "but there a man working on the roof a I'm afraid I might knock his h off."

Marie Mosquini, educated in Los Angeles convent, is roundi out her mental development wi a course in roping under the pe sonal tutelage of Will Rogers. Mi Mosquini is the leading lady in t Hal Roach new series of comedi starring the cowboy humorist.

BRILLIANT CAST IN MAYER FILM

A brilliant array of stars will shine in Louise B. Mayer's next Reginald Barker production, "Cape Cod Folks," a screen adaptation of the famous Old New England classic.

Frank Keenan, just returned from a successful stage engagement in New York in "Peter Weston," heads the list. Keenan made his debut in pictures under Barker's direction. Among the other players who will appear are Renee Adoree, who recently leaped into stellar prominence through her performance in "The Eternal Struggle"; Robert Frazer, former stage star, who came out to the Coast a year ago as Mae Murray's leading man; Barbara Bedford, Joseph Dowling, Edward Phillip Billy Eugene, Victor Potel ar Joan Standing, two of the cleve est character comedians in the pi tures.

Realism will mark the produ tion of the story. Robert Fraz and Percy Hilburn, camerama have been working in the East du ing the past three months, filmin scenes on board the fishing smac off the Massachusetts coast and t Grand Banks.

H. M. Walker, title editor at t Hal Roach Studios, has gone New York for a month's inspe tion of new theatrical offerin there.

KID WILL BE FEATURED

ne of the most interesting anncements of the past few days is the organization of the new proion unit to be known as the Priscilla Moran Production Com-
y. A charter was granted to the corporation bearing that name by the State Corporation Commiser last Friday.
he Corporation is formed for the purpose of producing feature ys starring little Priscilla Mo-

. Priscilla will be remembered s the little five year old girl who ed with Jackie Coogan for sev-ll months and became nationally wn as his adopted sister, although she was never really adopted by the Coogan family.

Millarde Webb is the president and general manager of the corporation, Ollie Mae Baker, secretary and Mr. Moran, Priscilla's father, is vice-president.

Mr. Webb has been Production Manager for Sidney A. Franklin for the past five years and has been closely identified with such notable successes as "East is West," starring Constance Talmadge; "Tiger Rose," "Brass," "Dulcy," etc. His broad experience and undoubted ability makes him a valuable executive.

Miss Baker, secretary of the corporation, was for two years financial secretary to Charles Chaplin and for two years financial secretary of Jackie Coogan Productions.

A year's lease has been taken by the new company at the Hollywood Studios and production will start on the first story as soon as Priscilla finishes work in "Daddies," a Warner Brothers production now being made by Wm. Seiter.

The enterprise is being financed by local bankers. In view of the ability connected with the new organization the outlook is indeed bright.

DRAMA HOLDS VON ELTZ

Theodor von Eltz names the rld war as the plus sign in his
eer. He was reading the lead-male role in "Tiger Rose" for speaking stage, the same role ich he completed a few months on the screen with Lenore Ul-when he registered with Uncle
n. He came back from overs to find the theater in the midst a struggle. Several said "give p." Others said "try a business eer."

He went down in the oil fields d learned there that there is such hing as a dominant and persua-e calling. So he came to Holwood. This was three years ago t fall when he secured the male d with May Allison.
His excellent stage training—his portunities on Broadway and in stock in various places—made him a most acceptable member of a cast in screen productions. He has played a variety of roles in these three years and is both a type and an excellent actor. When the Community theater was in progress he was one of the reliables, being able to take a role at a minute's notice and negotiating it in a masterful way.

"The screen lures and holds fast," says the actor who recently confessed that had there been no war he would undoubtedly have stayed on Broadway. "But like all the others who have felt the thrill of the foot-lights, I want to go back some day for a big production. In the meanwhile and for the bulk of the future—the screen and Hollywood."

MRS. HAYAKAWA IS HERE

Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa returned town last week, having left her mous husband in London where is to make films for the next two ars, she says.
In the meantime Mrs. Hayakawa d a staff of servants are making e dust fly at their well known me on Argyle avenue, which has en one of the show places of Holwood, and which Mrs. Hayakawa ates that she is going to sell be-use of the expected absence of e star from Los Angeles for the xt few years.
Mr. Hayakawa has just finished
o pictures in which he was star-d, made in Paris, and has signed contract to star in two producns with Stoll Films, Ltd. of Lon-
n. The first of these pictures is be started at once, and that is hy Mrs. Hayakawa returned alone to look after the family affairs. She will sail for London to rejoin her husband next month, but in the meantime she is greeting many old Hollywood friends who have not seen the popular couple for some time.

Mr. Hayakawa's plans also include starring in two new stage plays which are waiting for him in this country after he finishes his European film engagement, so it is unlikely that Los Angeles will be his home for some time to come except for short visits after his American stage engagement begins.

Stan Laurel has finished a new two reel comedy at the Hal Roach Studios under Ralph Cedar's direction. Tte recent race between Zev and Papyrus is the occasion for some riotous burlesque.

Matinee Idol Now Pillar

Carmel Myers, as Lady Penrhyn-Stanhope, for the past week has been draping herself all over John Barrymore, as Beau Brummel in the Clyde Fitch play now in course of production at Warner Brothers Studio.

She told a friend of her admiration of Barrymore as an actor and was informed that "Mr. Barrymore is a pillar of the stage."

So, of course Carmel has to reply, "And of the screen, too. Haven't I been resting my head on him all week?"

NEW ANGLE ON OVERHEAD

Here's another angle on "overhead expenses," of which we hear so much in the films.

A fleet of our aeroplanes constituted probably the largest "overhead" ever carried by a two-reel comedy, when they worked in the thrill scenes of "Air Pockets," produced by Jack White.

A major part of the equipment of one of Los Angeles' big flying fields was chartered for several days by Director Fred Hibbard, who rode with Cameraman Francis Corby in one plane, as they made scenes of Lige Conley, Peg O'Neill, Olive Borden and Earl Montgomery in the other ships.

"Buck" Jones on Duck Hunt

Charles "Buck" Jones, Fox film star, is going to drop his "six guns" for a while and try his hand with a fowling piece, otherwise an ordinary breech-loading shotgun.

Jones, who recently completed "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl" and whose next picture will be a screen adaptation of Ben Ames Williams' "Not a Drum Was Heard," is going to try his skill at duck shooting. With a party of friends, he has left his Hollywood home for the Big Bear Valley, where he plans to spend several days in the ducking blinds about Big Bear lake.

Due to the protection afforded by Federal laws in recent years, ducks are reported to be very plentiful this year and Jones expects to bag the lawful limit before returning to the Fox Studio.

"Don't be in a hurry about signing for a picture. Wait until "The Marriage Circle" comes out. It will do much for you.

This from Ernst Lubitsch, directing the picture, to Creighton Hale, who has just finished in a leading role.

Director Victor Fleming and Lucien Hubbard, production editor, have completed their task of cutting and titling the Zane Grey production "The Call of the Canyon," which is now ready for release.

Wanda Will Stay Here

One experience in foreign pictures is enough according to Wanda Hawley, popular film star, recently returned from a six months' stay in Europe during which time she starred in two foreign-made productions for the Gaumont Film Company of London. At the time, she was invited to stay over to make another picture, but she refused because she was anxious to get back to Hollywood and its superior methods of film production.

Miss Hawley has just refused another offer from a European firm which came the day after the local newspapers carried the announcement of the temporary closing of some studios for a period of weeks. This news was cabled abroad and immediately foreign film makers proceeded to renew their proffered engagement to Miss Hawley. Fortunately, however, she has already been engaged for a prominent role, concerning which announcement will be made in about a week, so that she could resist the tempting offer of the foreign office.

Comedy Changes to Tragedy

"Last time I played with her we laughed and this time we cry," small Bruce Guerin summed up his experiences acting with Viola Dana, which began a year or so ago when he played with her in "Love in the Dark." So remarkable has been the 4-year-old youngster's progress during the past year that, when lookouts were posted at the Metro studio for a child clever enough for the big dramatic work in "Revelation," Bruce was immediately decided upon and "borrowed" from Warner Brothers, who have him under contract. In their first film together, they had wonderful times sliding down banisters and romping around, but in "Revelation" their scenes are of tragic import, hence Bruce's remark that "last time we laughed and this time we cry."

DOUBLES TABOO

Jack O'Brien, who directed "Superstition" for the Creative Productions, does not believe in doubles, as members of the all-star cast who worked in this sea masterpiece will tell you. There was a great deal of real danger in many of the scenes and OBrien insisted on his principals doing it all. It gave the Hollywood Film folk who have seen the rough continuity a real thrill to see Marguerite De La Motte kicking around in a dangerous sea, awash from the schooner wrecked on the Catalina Island coast. Louis Weadock, journalist and fiction writer of national repute, is titling this sea thriller which is fast rounding into shape in the Hollywood Studios cutting room.

CHOCOLATE BABE ACTS NATURAL

"An' you-all call 'at work!'"

Little three year old Farina, the precocious pickaninny of Hal Roach's "Our Gang" comedies, was entertaining some relatives at the studio recently. Bob McGowan, the director, had a scene in which Farina, sleeping soundly, is reluctantly awakened. To make it natural McGowan spent nearly an hour getting the little tot to sleep in a big wide four-poster bed. Carpenters kept on hammering, the pitiless glare of "spots" and "arcs" shone full in the child's face but he slept on.

With cameras all set, McGowan called him. He called again. A property man crawled under the bed and shook the springs. Someone finally pounded an iron skillet with a hammer, but Sonny Boy still slept. It had been a strenuous day for the little black baby.

Finally the director led the company away to another set.

"Let him sleep, he's all tired out," McGowan said. For three hours everybody walked on tip-toe past the set where Farina slept. His round little ebony face and kinky pig-tails in that vast expanse of snowy bed-linen stood out like a candle in the dark. It was dusk when he was tenderly gathered up and taken home.

"Lor' Mister, an' you pay Sonny Boy for that?" asked an incredulous relative.

Farina was paid for that day all right. McGowan, too, is paid for just such sympathetic understanding. That's why Hal Roach's rascals, as he affectionately calls them, are ready and unafraid in whatever situation their director places them.

CALIFORNIA TOP FOR WOMEN

California tops for automobiles have come into use through the country.

Next comes the "California top for women. It protects the head from sunburn. Blanche Sweet devised it and the fad is rapidly spreading through the Southland. By next summer returning tourists will have spread it throughout the East, it is predicted.

The hair is frizzed with a curling iron and piled high on the head. The effect, on Miss Sweet at least, is most charming and unique.

Miss Sweet will next be seen on the screen in the title role of "Anna Christie."

"RENO" IS DIVORCE TREATISE

"Reno."

This is the new name selected by Rupert Hughes to supplant the old working title of his latest Goldwyn picture, "Law Against Law", which he has just finished cutting.

"Reno" was considered a better title in view of the fact that the word is considered synonymous with divorce in this country. The story deals with the conflicting divorce laws of the various states of the United States. "Reno" is an original story written and directed by Rupert Hughes.

The famous author-director engaged an all-star cast to interpret the various roles. Helen Chadwick, Lew Cody, George Walsh, Carmel Myers, Hedda Hopper, Dale Fuller, Kathleen Key and Rush Hughes have principal roles.

Bebe Fetes Newlyweds

Work on a series of night scenes in the Irvin Willat production of Zane Grey's "The Heritage of the Desert" was interrupted for a few hours last night in order that Bebe Daniels might entertain Director Willat and his bride, formerly Billie Dove, at a belated wedding dinner.

Mr. and Mrs. Willat were married a few days ago but were forced to forego a wedding celebration at the time of the ceremony because of Willat's directorial duties. The guests at the dinner given by Bebe Daniels included the other featured players — Ernest Torrence, Noah Beery and Lloyd Hughes—and all the members of the cast and of Willat's staff engaged in the filming of this Paramount Picture.

"Superstition" Edited by Expert

Louis Weadock, one of Hollywood's best known film editors and title writers, has just completed the editing and titling of "Superstition," a photodrama of the sea made by Creative Productions. The picture is nearly ready for release.

Weadock is reported to have accomplished some of the best work of his career in "Superstition," which is expected to prove one of the maritime sensations of the cinema year. It was made as one of the better films planned by Creative Productions in its aspiration to become one of the most popular independent concerns in the motion picture world.

Lasky Goes to New York

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of the production of Paramount Pictures, has left for New York on his annual Fall trip to the Eastern headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, where he will confer with Adolph Zuker, president of the organization, on the next group of productions which will re-open the organization following the shut-down period recently announced.

Five Paramount Pictures are now in production at the Hollywood Studio, according to an announcement made by Mr. Lasky on the eve of his departure. They are "Shadows of Paris," a Herbert Brenon production starring Pola Negri with Adolph Menjou, Charles de Roche and Huntly Gordon featured in support, from the play "Mon Homme" by Andre Picard and adapted by Eve Unsell; "The Next Corner," a Sam Wood production with Conway Tearle, Lon Chaney and Dorothy Mackaill adapted by Monte Katterjohn from Kate Jordan's novel; "The Heritage of the Desert," an Irvin Willat production of Zane Grey's story with Bebe Daniels, Ernest Torrence, Noah Beery and Lloyd Hughes; "The Stranger," a Joseph Henabery production adapted by Edfrid Bingham from John Galsworthy's "The first and the Last," with Betty Compson, Richard Dix, Lewis Stone and Tully Marshall; and "Singer Jim McKee," a William S. Hart production starring the famous two-gun man, from an original story by Hart written for the screen by J. G. Hawks.

Two pictures are in the making at the Long Island Studio. These are "The Humming Bird," starring Gloria Swanson, and "Pied Piper Malone," starring Thomas Meighan.

Virginia Brown Faire, First National featured player, has been loaned by that organization for one of the featured roles in "Welcome Stranger," a Belasco production which James Young will direct. Miss Faire will play "Esther," a Jewish maid, role of interesting proportions which she will begin in about a week. This will be her third appearance with Mr. Young who directed her in her first success "Without Benefit of Clergy" and "Omar the Tentmaker."

LOCAL GIRL RETURNS FROM NEW YORK

Peggy Browne, who recently portrayed the role of Trixie Andrews in "The Gold Diggers," has finished a four weeks engagement at the Lyric Theatre, New York, with the prologue for Charles Chaplin's "A Woman of Paris," featuring Edna Purviance.

While in New York Peggy also finished a course of acrobatic dancing at the Creo School, consequently the local film colony will quite naturally expect to see some high-stepping from that vivacious young lady on her return to the fold next week.

EDIT INITIAL HUNTER FILM

Director Rollin Sturgeon a production editor Lucien Hubba are now engaged in cutting, ed ing and titling "West of the Wat Tower," Glenn Hunter's first sta ring picture for Paramount whi was produced at the Long Isla studio but is being edited at t West Coast production headqua ters. Ernest Torrence, May M Avoy and George Fawcett are fe tured.

FORT BUSY

The widely-advertised slu means nothing in the life of Ga rett Elsden Fort, who came from the east a little while ago do free lance continuity work. H has just completed the script "The Fire Patrol" for Hunt Stro berg and sold an original sto "The Dance of the Unchain Slave" to F. B. O. In addition this, he is hard at work whippi "Moonlight," the one-act play th occasioned such favorable comme when presented at the Screen Wr ers' Club last June, into shape f vaudeville.

"Shadows of Paris" has been ficially selected as the title of t next Herbert Brenon producti starring Pola Negri, from And Picard's "Mon Homme."

Faints as Pistol Aims

Maude George was overcome by the heat generated by sun-arcs on the set of Maurice Tourneaur's "Torment" early Tuesday afternoon and fainted just as Owen Moore, in one of the most dramatic moments of the photoplay, pointed a gun at her.

The scene was in the vault of a big Yokohama bank. Millions of dollars worth of the Russian crown jewels were on a table when Moore, as an American crook, pulled a pistol from his pocket. Miss George, instructed to back away with fear in her eyes, started back a step and slowly crumbled to the floor.

"Fine! Fine!" exclaimed Mr. Tourneur. But Miss George did not rise nor did she acknowledge the praise.

Though she recovered from her fainting spell in a few moments and declared that she was able to go on with the day's work, Mr. Tourneur insisted that she go home to rest and dismissed Owen Moore, Bessie Love, Jean Hersholt and the other players taking part in the scene for the rest of the day.

Hal Roach's "Spat Family" have completed their latest two reel comedy, "Joys of Motoring," under Fred Guiol's direction, and have started a mountain climbing story with Percy Pembroke directing. They will be on location at Chatsworth for a week.

"Monarca"—Spanish for Monarch—has been chosen as the release title for Hal Conklin's story of Rex, King of Wild Horses." This unusual feature production, in which a wild stallion has the principal role, is now receiving final editorial touches at the Hal Roach Studios.

BRUCE WITH VIOLA AGAIN

Two friends who understand each other and get along just wonderfully together are playing in the same film again, namely Viola Dana and small Bruce Guerin, the clever kiddie whose work with the Metro star in "Love in the Dark" attracted so much attention. Working together for weeks, the four-year-old boy taking the role of an abandoned waif adopted by the star, the two romped through many enjoyable scenes and became firm friends. So it's no wonder Bruce voiced his joy in excitable terms when informed the other day by Warner Brothers, who have his services under long-term contract, that he had been loaned to Metro to appear with Miss Dana in "Revelation."

Claire MacDowell, who played Agnes Trevor in Frank Lloyd's production of "Black Oxen," a First National Picture, has been cast for a prominent part in support of Norma Talmadge in her newest production, "Secrets."

MATTRESS FACTORY?—NO!

Hal Roach has issued a formal denial of rumore that he is starting a mattress factory as an adjunct to his hilarity hatchery at Culver City. The report was thought to have started when Roy Clements, who is co-directing with Roach in the production "Somewhere in Kansas," assembled the most spectacular assortment of beards ever seen in a motion picture studio or a family album.

The occasion was a meeting in the town hall of a pioneer Kansas village for the election of a mayor. The ranks of filmdom's extra talent were combed for unique designs in whiskers. There were some beards present that were mere stubble when Lincoln was President. Others showed a futile willingness of their owners. John Gavin, playing a domineering blacksmith, showed a barechin counterbalanced by pectoral foliage. Glenn Tryon and Blanche Mehaffey, the juvenile leads in the story, were about the only ones on the set who came out in the open. Clyde Hopkins, assistant director, watched carefully to suppress any outbreaks of beaver playing.

"The beaver game is played out as a publicity measure," he declared. "We're serious about these beards. We didn't hire 'em for our own amusement."

BAGGOT RECALLS PATENT WARS

Back in the early days of the cinema, when war raged between the Edison interests and the independents, motion pictures sometimes were made under the greatest handicaps. In fact, courts had to be defied and ruses indulged in if the opponents of the patented camera interests were to get a picture filmed.

Carl Laemmle, head of the old Imp interests, was an active figure in the camera war and one of his thespian standbys was King Baggot, now one of Universal's famous directors.

Baggot, whenever he has time, likes to reminisce over the bygone days when the anti-patent folk were hard put to it in dodging the court decrees that upheld the Edison rights.

While planning for his new picture, "The Inheritors," in which Mary Philbin will be the star, Baggot told some friends about the old days when the cameramen had to carry their machine around in sacks.

"We used Bristol board to build a camouflage," he said. "The cameraman would be accompanied everywhere by an assistant whose duty it was to slip the Bristol board hood over him when he started filming a picture. The only opening was a hole for the lens to project through and I want to tell you that the camera men literally earned their bread by the sweat of their brow.

"Detectives for the patents interests were everywhere and all they had to do was see the number on a camera in order to put the user out of business. Deputy sheriffs thronged about to seize an instrument that was found to be an infringement and there were times when bloodshed was narrowly averted.

"The war finally got so hot that the independents had to get out of the country and it was then Mary Pickford and myself were sent to Cuba with a company that spent several months on the island before the hostilities were settled by a compromise between the Edison company and the independents. This armistice gave us a chance to return to God's country and we were glad to get out of Havana. It might be different now, however," the famous director concluded with a whimsical smile.

First Guardian; Now Hubby

Syd Chaplin has gone and done it. While they were in Russia, Syd acted as protector and guardian to young Lucille Ricksen, and now he has gone off and married her.

Fortunately for the moral status of the film industry these occurrences have taken place just in the stories of the pictures in which these people are playing. The Russian locale was in "The Rendezvous," produced by Marshall Neilan, in which Syd Chaplin played the bluff British "Tommy" along the lines of Bairnesfather's famous "Old Bill" character. Now, Syd is working in the Thos. H. Ince production of "The Galloping Fish," and it is in this story that he enacts the excessively bashful husband of the gushing bride, played by Miss Ricksen.

Emma Tanzey, one of the most popular "mothers of the screen," is playing a maternal role in the Hal Roach comedy-drama, "Somewhere in Kansas," which Hal Roach and Roy Clements are directing. Miss Tanzey is a recent arrival in Los Angeles, having been working in Eastern studios for several years.

Harry Langdon, erstwhile vaudeville favorite now making two-reel comedies for Principal Pictures of the first picture in the series, Corporation, has changed the title from "The Skyscraper" to "The Greenhorn."

Three of the series are now complete, "The Greenhorn," "A Perfect Nuisance" and "A Tough Tenderfoot." The fourth will go into production this week with June Marlove playing opposite the comedian.

After the series of two-reelers has been completed, Langdon will make a five reel feature comedy for Principal.

Goes on Frisco Jaunt

Virginia Valli, who is playing the stellar role in the Universal production, "The Signal Tower," directed by Clarence Brown, left for San Francisco to join the company on location near Fort Bragg. Her sister, Vivian Holmes, accompanied her on the trip north. This is Miss Valli's first picture since completing work in King Vidor's Goldwyn production, "Wild Oranges." She expects to return to Hollywood within a week.

IS ADEPT REFEREE

Louis Lorraine, the charming leading woman in the "Fighting Blood" stories, has had so much experience in watching prize fights from the vantage of a ringside seat in the film version of these stories of the prize ring, that when she had to jump into the ring and referee a bout between George O'Hara and Joe Rivers she was right at home. Miss Lorraine cautioned the fighters about their movements, separated them when they were in a clinch and went through the scenes with all the ease and skill of a professional referee.

Sketching is the chief side-line of Stuart Holmes, noted motion picture "heavy" now playing a prominent role in "Three Weeks." Holmes is now making a number of sketches of Elinor Glyn, Alan Crosland, director, Conrad Nagel, Aileen Prigle and a number of the other celebrities on the set.

To J. G. Hawks, veteran scenarie writer and screen author, will go the honor of preparing the script for Frank Lloyd's second independent production, "The Sea Hawk."

Mr. Hawks has been selected by Mr. Lloyd because of his unusual technical knowledge and his ability to build dramatic continuities. Among the most recent screen adaptations for which Mr. Hawks is responsible, are "Tiger Rose" with Lenore Ulric, John M. Stahl's productions "The Wanters" and "The Dangerous Age," William S. Hart's first two productions under his new contract "Wild Bill Hickok" and Singer Jim McKee," "The Eternal Struggle", "Hearts Aflame" and "The Storm" which Reginald Barker has directed, "The Blind Bargain" for Lon Chaney and "Love in the Dark" for Viola Dana.

Maurice Tourneur was taking a still picture of Owen Moore, Bessie Love and Morgan Wallace depicting a scene in "Torment," his new First National production.

Just as the director had finished posing the players and the cameraman was about to press the bulb, a prop boy dropped a vase with a thundering crash.

"SH-H-H-H! This is a STILL picture," yelled Morgan Wallace. Curtain.

To Vacation in Hawaii

According to her present plans, Pola Negri will sail for Honolulu on a short vacation trip immediately after the completion of her current Paramount Picture "Shadows of Paris," the Herbert Brenon production now nearing completion.

The star has made sailing reservations for January 10, subject to change if it should be necessary for her to remain at Paramount's West Coast Studios after that date.

Dabbles in Legit Plays

DeWitt Jennings keeps receiving insistent calls to vaudeville and now the most recent is a most liberal one for he is privileged to select his own sketch. So now the actor is adapting one of his former stagesuccesse s and should he accept the liberal terms offered for a short tour, another notable character actor will appear with him One evening recently at Mr. Jennings' home was given over to rehearsals from several plays before he concentrated on the one he is adapting.

WILL MAKE "RECOIL" ABROAD

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has entered into an arrangement with J. Parker Read, Jr., by which he will produce in Europe, a film version of Rex Beach's story, "The Recoil". Mr. Read has engaged T. Hayes Hunter to direct the production. Mr. Hunter sailed this week to prepare for the filming of the story.

Betty Blythe has been engaged for the leading role in the production and Mahlon Hamilton has been assigned to play opposite her.

The picture is going to be produced on a great scale and will be done entirely abroad. Sequences will be photographed in London, Paris, Rome and Monte Carlo. Arrangements have been made by Mr. Reed, by which the famous gambling casino in Monte Carlo will be invaded by the company making "The Recoil," and scenes shot there.

O'BRIEN SPORTING SIDEBURNS

Eugene O'Brien, chaperoning a pair of luxurious side-burns of the 1865 English design, has returned to Los Angeles to resume the role of leading man to Norma Talmadge, an association terminated when O'Brien deserted films for the stage.

The side-burns, O'Brien explains, are being cultivated for his part in "Secrets," the screen adaptation of the stage drama which will bring the popular combination together for the first time after an interval of a year. "Secrets" is one of those unusual stories, the action of which spans a period from 1865 to 1923, with the scene of action shifting between England and America.

"The script, which I have been studying, says that part of the time I have to appear 77 years old. A man must do something to look his age, hence the side-burns. I saw "Secrets" played on the stage in New York. Really, I think the screen portrayals are going to be difficult. Because of the ferret eye of the camera, it will be no simple matter to look a convincing 77 one minute and then jump to 40 and continue further backward along the course of time to 20. On the stage almost any kind of a make-up will do, but on the screen the slightest imperfection will spoil the whole effect."

NEW COMEDIAN ON SCENE

Baby Buster Keaton got his first actor's salary last week.

Buster's fourteen-month-old hopeful was carried to the cashier's barred window at the Keaton studios where he was formally handed a good sized check. The check represented five days work which Baby Buster did in "Hospitality," Buster's second feature length comedy.

Natalie Talmadge Keaton has had her son's first check framed and the cash has been put in the bank to draw interest.

Baby Buster doubles for his daddy in "Hospitality," very realistically showing how daddy looked as a boy in his role in the prologue of the picture.

The baby has the big brown eyes of his daddy and mother, but he cries harder and laughs more than either of his parents. In one sequence Baby Buster welcomes his cinema father home after a hard day's work in the man-killing section of the Kentucky feud country.

In another scene he bids goodbye to the Blue Ridge mountain home where he was born. In this scene Baby Buster shows his teeth and does the most realistical crying ever done by a moving picture baby.

Mothers of other infant actors must not have the impression, however, that Baby Buster was overpaid for his work. Papa Buster Keaton paid him only usual union wage scale for infant actors.

Spottiswoode Aitken will play one of the important roles in the Finis Fox production, "The Woman Who Sinned," if he finishes the role of the blind professor in Hunt Stromberg's "The Fire Patrol" in sufficient time.

"If the public does not give 'Greed' the enthusiastic support I expect I will never make another motion picture," said Erich von Stroheim, the famous Goldwyn director, to a reporter yesterday.

"This is no threat, egotistically calculated to break the heart of the world," continued von Stroheim. "It would simply mean that I cannot guage what the public wants, and that it is useless for me to attempt to give it what I think it wants.

"There has been such wide consideration given, in the press and in conversation regarding the mutilation of literature in process of filming that I decided to make an absolutely literal film transposition of a novel that has been accepted as a classic of American literature for twenty years.

"Its popularity with the masses may be judged by an attempt to get the book from any public library. The masses make use of libraries. You cannot get the novel without being placed on a long waiting list for one of the numerous copies in every library.

"The book which I photograph in the actual locations described the author, is Frank Norris' mortal story 'McTeague.' I g it to the public without a sin important change, except that the title. I made it so that it be said: 'As Norris wrote it, so Stroheim produced it.'

"It is a great, powerful sto and acclaimed as such. The pu lic will see it enacted word word in its essential details a interpretation of theme. In vi of the fact that it is shouted fr the housetops — motion pictur newspaper and private housetops that the public wants books film as written, I determined to gi them the first example of such proceedure in the history of m tion pictures.

"I am under the belief the pu lic really wants authenticity. If does not, after all has been sa then I give up."

RAMON HAS DESIRED ROLE

Ramon Novarro who is playing the part of the young lover, Juan Ricardo in the Louis B. Mayer production "Thy Name Is Woman" which Fred Niblo is directing, is having the new experience of depicting one of his own countrymen on the screen. Mr. Novarro is a Spaniard and this latest Niblo offering is laid in a Spanish setting in the heart of the Pyrenees.

"I was born in Mexico," Mr. Novarro says. "My parents had come from Spain just a short time before my birth. Until I was sixteen years old I could speak nothing but the Spanish language. I was practically fed on Spanish literature and Spanish art and of course with a foundation like th some of those very things becam especially dear to me. When first determined to get into p tures I had the keen desire eventually give an interpretatio of one of the parts I had read, the screen. French characterizations have come my way; Rom nian parts and I have played South Sea Islander, but heretofo never a Spaniard. That is why was overjoyed when Mr. Niblo e gaged me for the part in "Th Name Is Woman'. I am a Spani officer and I can well remember th time when I was a little boy an hoped some time I might becom an officer in the king's army."

MIRTHQUAKE AT YUMA

Louise Fazenda is having her second location trip this year and now, featured in "The Galloping Fish" is immortalizing her unique brand of humor against the back ground of Yuma, Ariz. For the first time in its history, the inoffensive Colorado River will be tributary to such a mirth quake warranted to stir it to its depths. Miss Fazenda will give much to the Colorado, but planned to take away nothing of it.

"I have this time in "The Galloping Fish'," says Louise "a land and water wardrobe. There is to be water—quite a lot of water in this piece—and so my water outfit was made entirely without pockets. Otherwise, I would have added to the underhead of 'The Galloping Fish,' for the Colorado is muddy and if one had pockets and things, why, you would be sunk. And that wouldn't have been considerate to Mr. Ince to quit before the fade-out!"

S. M. Tompkins, president of the Standard Film Laboratories and head of the group which owns the Hollywood Studios, has just returned from a short business trip to New York City.

Friends of William V. Mon featured screen player, handed hi one of the pleasantest surprises his life at a recent dinner par preceding the Los Angeles premi of "In the Palace of the King" i which Mong plays the role "Perez."

"Perez" is part number 100 f Mong. In his long career on stag and screen and in vaudeville, h has played almost every concei able character. His friends remem bered it with a handsome watc inscribed: "We have all enjoye the first 100. May there be many more."

Mong is already in his secon hundred. He is finishing the pa of Pedro, the Spanish smuggler "Thy Name Is Woman."

Thomas Wilkes' latest dramati presentation, "Topsy and Eva, will be shown at the Majestic The ater here beginning this Sunday The role of Marks, the lawyer, wi be enacted by Ashley Cooper, well known local character artist, wh was called to San Francisco to as sume this part when the sho opened there. Mr. Cooper has long and illustrious record as on of the finest delineators of difficul characters on the stage and screen

AERIAL CINEMATOGRAPHY NEXT

Going on location by airplane is an old stunt in motion pictures, but shooting a scene from an airplane as part of an actual production is new. And Douglas Fairbanks is one of the first to use aerial photography in this practical manner.

Fairbanks is now completing plans to photograph the concluding thrilling scene" of his "The Thief of Bagdad" by plane. While a battery of cameras grind out the action of the story from the ground, a cameraman will soar overhead and register another view of the scene.

The episode to be photographed shows the departure from Bagdad of Douglas Fairbanks as the regenerated thief and Miss Juliane Johnston as "The Princess" on the Magic Carpet. They will float over the city while a mob of several thousand "extras" wave to them from the Great Square of Bagdad.

Synonym For Slang

"Oh, stop your brummeling."

That's Hollywood's newest response to a "thick" compliment. Carmel Myers brought the word to being and it has spread throughout the film colony; has been carried back to New York and bids fair to be carried over the country.

Beau Brummel was a courtly gentleman, with a pleasant bit of blarney for every woman to whom he found occasion to speak. John Barrymore, in the Warner Brothers production of Clyde Fitch's play, plays the man whose name has become a synonym for eloquence and dhe neglects none of the mannerisms of the beau. So when other members of the company, off stage, attempt to say pretty things to Miss Myers the natural response is:

"Oh, stop your brummeling me."

Other members of the company soon seized on the phrase and it has spread quickly.

ACTOR NEEDS IMAGINATION

Cullen Landis gives no hope to the actor without imagination.

"An actor must visualize from the word picture of his role in the script, or he cannot fashion a characterization," says this young actor, who recently added to his screen activities in trodding the boards of the speaking stage in "The Valley of Content."

"A knowledge of life is valuable in the creation of a character, but still one must have expensive powers of imagination so that one sees with the mind's eyes the intimate psychology of the character he portrays. I believe that an actor cannot do better than remaining close to what the author has written, while of course, he will add to this that intangible something of his own individuality that properly should color his work."

Spencer Bell, colored comedian of the Jack White forces, has some scenes in "Air Pockets," the new aviation comedy, in which he is shown as unwilling ballast hanging from the fuselage of a 'plane as it mounts the airways, and in which his portrayal of a thoroughly scared darky is said to equal his hit in "Kick Out," the lion comedy of a year ago.

Director Fred Caldwell has encountered some difficulty in finding suitable locations for his forthcoming production, "Hollywood in 1900." In fact Mr. Caldwell has found very few spots in the film Mecca that recall any memories to J. Stewart Woodhouse, the author, of the Hollywood he remembers of twenty-five years ago.

Because of this some of the main parts of the script have been changed to meet the requirements of other locations where modern twin-sixes and Spanish bungalows are not too much in evidence.

When your real estate deals fail to keep you on the jump, write plays.

This is the new motto of Oscar Apfel, popular director, who has been spending idle time during his vacation in preparing vaudeville sketches that will be used by several well known screen stars on tours they will make while the production lull continues at some of the studios here.

Following the completion of three big pictures for Metro, featuring Viola Dana, Apfel took a vacation, during which he has made more money in realty speculation than he did as a director. But his deals did not keep him occupied all the time and he turned his attention to preparing the vaudeville acts while his play, "Morphine," which enjoyed a run at the Egan theatre here, is being revised for a big opening in New York.

Norma Talmadge, who is now playing in "Secrets," a drama of the crinoline period, is unable to use her favorite dressing room due to the fact that the hoop-skirts of this period are too large for the tiny dressing room door.

Blanche Mehaffey, plucked from Flo Zeigfeld's dazzling array of American beauties to add luster to Hal Roach comedies has been keeping a weather eye on New York theatrical criticisms of late. For several seasons Miss Mahaffey was one of the prize bits of pulchritude in the Follies. This season's revue has just opened without her and she feels badly about it, although she's tremendously happy at her increasing screen success at the Hal Roach Studios. Will Rogers, whose inimitable wit has brightened many a New York theatrical season feels about the same as Miss Mehaffey. He is starring in Hal Roach comedies now and the Follies are having to worry along without him.

Finis Fox is adding the final touches to his own story, "The Woman Who Sinned," and expects to start production within the next two weeks. Aside from writing the story and making the adaptation he wlil also direct the picture, which will be the first of a new series of Finis Fox specials.

Ever hear of "sneaking" pictures?

Ask King Baggot, he'll tell you about 'em.

They were a form of motion pictures made by the independents in the early days, when King and Mary Pickford were Carl Laemmle's stars.

The patents company kept detectives on the trail of the unlicensed units to keep them from using the patent cameras, so when a director went out to shoot a scene his cameraman carried his cranking machine in a gunny sack, and location shots had to be taken on the sly.

Finally King and Mary had to go to Cuba and make pictures there, until the matter was straightened out in the courts.

Wallace Worsley, director of the famous "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," a Universal feature, is going to lend his personal touch to its presentation on November 16 at the Criterion theatre.

Heretofore, Worsley has outlined the theatrical presentations of his pictures by wire and long distance telephone, but in the case of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" he will take a personal interest in the Los Angeles presentation and help to supervise its screening.

Worsley has already had several conferences with H. B. Wright, managing director of the Criterion, and the two will collaborate in giving the film fans here an artistic presentation of the famous Victor Hugo story.

William S. Hart has returned from his location trip to Sonora, Calif., and is once again working at Paramount's West Coast Studio on "Singer Jim McKee."

Phyllis Haver plays the leading feminine role in this original story by Hart, and Clifford S. Smith is again directing the famous Western star.

MOUNT VERNON FILM LOCALE

Mrs. Anthony Wayne Cook, president of the Daughters of the American Revolution, has gone to Washington to observe the taking of scenes for D. W. Griffith's next film, "America," relating to the life of George Washington.

Arrangements are being made for the Washington mansion at Mount Vernon to be used as an exact historical setting for the scenes showing Washington's home life, and the historical incidents which transpired there.

Observers for the D. A. R. have been present at most of the important scenes in the taking of the picture, including the battle of Lexington and the battle of Bunker Hill.

All the scenes of Washington's earlier life will be taken on the actual settings in Virginia.

D. W. Griffith has taken a large staff and two cars of players to the Washington setting, where he will spend several weeks.

An unusual thing about the Renaud Hoffman picture, "Which Shall It Be?", just completed at the Hollywood Studios is that David Torrance plays a leading role of a wealthy and unhappy man in which his loneliness is accentuated through never being seen on the screen with anyone else throughout the film. This is the unheralded little film that has aroused such a storm of praise from critics.

Miss A. M. Fielder, well-known British social secretary and authority on matters of European customs and manners, has been appointed technical adviser to the Sam Wood production of "The Next Corner," in which Conway Tearle, Lon Chaney and Dorothy Mackaill are featured. The story is laid in fashionable Paris and Miss Fielder has been of invaluable assistance in determining matters of French procedure.

Sid Smith, well known comedian, has been added to the cast of the Cameo comedy company directed by Gil Pratt.

Although Smith has gained fame and following as one of the "Hallroom Boys," in the film series of that name, this is the first time he has appeared under the Cameo banner. Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance are also working in the current production, as yet untitled.

The genial Scotchman, world traveller and student, Leslie Fraser Gordon, has been drawn into screen work again because of his unfathomable and well indexed fund of knowledge. He has been made technical adviser and in charge of the Research department at the Hollywood Studios. At verious times previously he has done screen work, with Edison and Thanhauser in the early days and later editing films for three years.

MASEFIELD PLAY AT PASADENA MONDAY

Pasadena's Community Players will have the honor of making the first presentation in America of John Masefield's new play, "Melloney Holtspur," now running in London. He has cabled them permission to give the play seven times, starting Monday night, November 12.

Lovers of the theatre as an institution rather than merely a place of amusement, in Southern California, are enthused over this recognition of the Pasadena Community Playhouse. There will be many theatre parties from the various literary and dramatic clubs to attend the premiere, which will be produced under the direction of Gilmore Brown.

a picture. His "House With a Bad Reputation," a best seller of two years ago, is also being transcribed to the screen by an Eastern producer.

Al Wilson, the famous stunt aviator of Universal chapter plays, plans to seek fame as a "straight" actor soon. He is playing a leading role in "The Ghost City" with Pete Morrison and Margaret Morris at Universal and his airplane thrills for the first time are incidental to his acting.

"Love Insurance," which will be the first vehicle of Reginald Denny, Universal star, when he recovers from injuries suffered in an automobile accident, is taken from a novel by Earl Derr Biggers in which the true whimsical humor of life is the chief element.

Bernard McConville, supervising editor of Universal-Jewel features, and Rex Taylor, well known scenario writer, adapted the book to screen form. Taylor prepared the scenario. Much is expected of the new story for the quality of the author's work has been reflected in many popular Saturday Evening Post stories and novels. One of his chief works was "Seven Keys to Baldpate." McConville and Taylor are among the best known screen writers and in their collaboration should produce a highly promising screen plot.

Denny is convalescing nicely and is expected to be back at Universal City within a few weeks.

Jack Hoxie's feature "The Phantom Rider" has been finished at Universal City. Robert North Bradbury directed the picture and Lillian Rich played opposite the Western star. The story and continuity were written by Isadore Bernstein.

Eleanore Boardman, playing a leading role in "The Turmoil," Hobart Henley's production of the Booth Tarkington story at Universal City, has a queer fad when not at work on the set. She and George Hackathorne design and paint picture frames. They monopolize much of the attention of the stage carpenters as a result.

After countless rounds of ring battling, street brawls and coal yeard gang fights, filming of "Jack O' Clubs," Herbert Rawlinson's latest feature, has been completed at Universal City.

Fighting Herb Rawlinson and Battling Eddie Gribbon fought sixteen rounds to a perfect draw at Universal City area. This is the result of the much-discussed "grudge fight" between the two actors, staged as the big scenes in "Jack O' Clubs," from the story by Gerald Beaumont.

Bets had been placed and the studio was agog with excitement over the fight, because of rumors of an old "feaud" that the two actors were to settle in the ring while enact the part of battlers for the camera. Some t ago some of Gribbon's favorite scenes w cut from "The Victor," in which he appea with Rawlinson, and rumors were thick t an argument over it would result in a ba far more real than the usual film fight.

The two entered the ring and fought it while Robert Hill, the director, and a la crowd of actors gathered to witness the fi almost went insane with excitement. Each n drew a black eye. Both landed some he blows. At the close of the battle they sh hands and hurled the hatchet. Hill decla the battle a perfect draw.

"Gribbon's a great sport and a good fighte and we're perfect friends," said Rawlins after the battle.

"Rawlinson's the best sport I know!" s Gribbon.

"I don't care whether these guys were s or not—but I sure got a great canful of fi stuff out of them!" chortles Bob Hill.

So everyone's satisfied now.

Hearken back to 1913.

King Baggot is going to direct a picture Universal with a locale about which he kn a great deal. "The Inheritors," a novel by A. R. Wylie, telling a story of modern Engl and English characters, was adapted to screen for a Mary Philbin starring vehicle Bernard McConbille, supervising editor of U versal-Jewel productions, and prepared as scenario by Frank Beresford. When Bagg starts this picture with the "Merry-Go-Rou girl in the star role, he will have a great m eyes turned upon the undertaking, for it pro ises interest.

In the year 1913 Baggot, then the lead masculin favorite of the new moving pictu went to England and made "Ivanhoe" un Herbert Brennon's direction. He had no i then of becoming a director himself.

"Ivanhoe" was made for Carl Laemm president of the Universal Pictures corporati but it bore the "Imp" trade mark. The "In was the Independent Motion Pictures comp which Mr. Laemmle formed many years ago combat the "trust" of the film industry. "Iv hoe" was four reels in length, which at t time classed it as a "super-feature." The was the first from America ever sent to Eur Baggot played in England and France m times before the camera. England was to sort of a "stamping ground."

"The Inheritors"—the title will probably changed—is laid in an old English estate, theater centers of London and a small Engl village. Miss Philbin will play in it a v unusual character, a worthy successor to Ag Urban of "Merry-Go-Round" and Mamie R of Owen Kildare's "My Mamie Rose," film of which was just completed by Irving C mings.

Filming of a series of sensational storm scenes, and a thrilling race over a wrecked trestle ended the photography on "Innocent," the new Universal all-star feature written and directed by Perley Poore Sheehan, noted novelist.

The picture in the making created intense interest at Universal City for several reasons. In the first place, it was rehearsed and presented as a stage play is handled, from preliminary reading of the play on, through complete rehearsals. The man assigned to cut and edit the films, Ralph Dietrich, was assigned to the staff as script secretary and assistant director, knowing therefore every point in the action and editing the film as photography progressed. It also marked the first practical tryout of the new lightning torch, invented by Arthur E. Shadur, city engineer of Universal City, and the first safe device of the kind ever designed.

Sheehan's picture is a melodrama of the Arkansas mountains, but so handled that its melodramatic action is secondary to its characterizations, a trick new to the screen.

The cast included Gladys Hulette, Howard Truesdell, Edgar Kennedy, Margaret Seddon, Charles Cruz, Norman Rankow, Robert Gordon, Lon Poff.

Jack Sullivan, the man who handled the crowd scenes in "Merry-Go-Round," "The "Hunchback of Notre Dame," and other big mob scenes in recent pictures of note, acted as Sheehan's assistant. Jack Rose, one of Universal's best known cameramen, turned the crank on the new picture and Raymond L. Schrock made the adaptation and the scenario.

Photography has been completed on "My Mamie Rose," May Philbin's new Universal-Jewel starring vehicle, and her first big role since she made picture history in "Merry-Go-Round." The story, adapted from Owen Kildare's famous novel of the Bowery by the same name, is one of the year's spectacular productions at Universal. The old Bowery was reproduced in detail, with its elevated railways, its quaint old resorts, its queer characters whose names have gone down into tradition, and its odd glamor that has long outlived the place itself.

Steve Brodie lives again, the man who took a chance, in the quaint story. Chuck Connors, Mike Flynn, Philadelphia O'Brien, all famous figures in the New York of a quarter century ago, appear in it. The first automobile in New York chugs painfully over its cabbled streets.

Mary Philbin, as the "Mamie Rose" of the Kildare novel, played a remarkable role throughout the making of the big picture, directed by Irving Cummings. It is a known fact that "My Mamie Rose" is the true story of the life of Kildare, originally a Bowery gangster, who, through the love of a girl, reformed and finally became one of America's best known authors. Step by step the picture treats with his life and the girl who changed it.

The sordid side of the Bowery is eliminated; the picture shows it as it was seen through the eyes of the author; a place of glamor and romance; its true side, with its pitfalls and its tragedies, is not shown, save in a few hints, in the treatment of the story.

A notable cast appeared with Miss Philbin. Pat O'Malley will be seen as "Kid McLaren," the prototype of the author, and others who are well known are Charles Murray, Lincoln Plumer, Edwin J. Brady, Max Davidson, William Collier, Jr., Kate Price, Sherry Tansey, Steven Murphy and Tom O'Brien.

Bernard McConville supervising editor of Jewel productions at Universal City, handled the script, the adaptation being made by Harvey Gates (who also wrote the scenario) and Lenore Coffey.

The Ray La Verne motion picture casting office, located on North Bronson in the heart of the local studio district, has opened its doors to the public—to the folks of filmland—and extend a cordial invitation to all to drop in and get acquainted.

Ray La Verne, head of the new organization, was formerly connected with the Ivan Kahn agency. He is fortunate in having associated with him in the new company Mr. Eugene W. Stewart, formerly of Chicago. Mr. Stewart recently journeyed to the coast on pleasure bent but became so delighted with the well known beauties of Southern California that he has decided to become a permanent resident.

"Service"—real, unadulterated, honest and conscientious service to both the actor and the producer is the slogan of the new company. Each department, casting, legal, publicity, etc., will be in charge of competent and courteous officials.

The surroundings of their comfortable and comodious quarters are attractive, even to the extent of having a homelike atmosphere which, without doubt, will be appreciated by the actor and will become an added asset to the organization.

A novel innovation is a private office which is placed at the disposal of all studio officials who may desire to interview prospective casts. No charge will be made for thi sservice.

A Mary Pickford rose now blooms.

At the recent California Flower Show held in San Francisco, a rose, grown by Fred H. Howard of Los Angeles, who has won scores of medals for his rare floral creations, was publicly dedicated to "America's Sweetheart."

A. D. Houghton of the University of California, in dedicating the rose to, the star praised Miss Pickford for her ideals and paid great tribute to her art.

Joseph De Grasse, who is to direct Richard Walton Tully's production of "Flowing Gold," was interviewing an oil field worker who had spent a great deal of time in Ranger, Texas, during the stampede, for flowing gold" into that section, which is the locale of the story.

"Ranger was quite muddy in those days, was it not?" inquired De Grasse.

"Muddy? Say! I was walking along the sidewalk on main street one day, struggling in mud almost to my hips. Glancing down, I saw a man's head above the mire in the street. Big-hearted, I reached forth and offered him assistance to the side walk. 'Never mind,' he laughed, refusing my aid, I'm riding a horse.'"

Your Question— and its Answer

QUESTION—"I have been more or less sick since an attack of the 'Flu.' Please tell me how long it will take to get well under Chiropractic Adjustments."

ANSWER—Time required for complete restoration to health is dependent upon your age, general vitality, duration of illness, severity of illness, the ability of your Chiropractor to correctly analyze your case, determine the causative subluxations in your spine and correct them, and last but not least, the co-operation he will get from you in the matter of regularity of Adjustments. Thus you may see that each case demands separate study. From a thorough examination of your spine and due consideration for the points named above, we can give you a quite accurate opinion as to time required in your particular case.

"SUPERVISED BY————"

"Supervised by————."
It is a meaningless and much-abused film phrase which has had a tendency in late years to supersede the well-known "directed by————." Why?

In an interesting discussion we had the other evening with a man who has enjoyed many years of prominence as an actor, writer and director, we unearthed many subtle reasons for "supervised by————." This man stated that it was an outrage to those directors who had spent a lifetime of earnest endeavor and rigid application in learning the various angles of stage and motion picture direction, of acting, of writing, of set construction, of lighting, and cinematography, as the majority of them have, to have to bow down to the ever-present "supervised by————." And as he outlined the sinister phrase we have catalogued it as a bitter sarcasm, this supervision credit. And why not?

A producer procures some capital and decides to make a contribution to the shadow stage. Inevitably the very first thing he does is to call in a man who really knows how to make motion pictures, that is, if he is a wise producer. This man is usually a director with an established reputation, who forthwith sets about to select a story, employ competent aides and technical men, arrange for adequate studio space, procure modern facilities, and assemble a cast of merit. This is all done rapidly and efficiently through knowledge gained by years of experience. Once everything is in readiness the picture goes into active production. Incessant toil, sincere application and an understanding of situations all help to make the completed film a worthwhile endeavor. If the director possesses a sparks of genius he may turn out a veritable masterpiece, winning the plaudits of all who preview it. Then the sad thing happens; the finished reels pass into the hands of the "supervising director," who may have formerly occupied a responsible position as ribbon clerk in some small-town merchandise emporium or as supervising lawn-trimmer on some Long Island estate. Having invested a little money in a motion picture company, or through personal friendship with the powers-that-be, he is given a position in the studio. And where, we ask, could he serve better than as "supervising director," giving the last artistic touches to the finished production, and doing his bit to keep the footage down.

If the picture is good it is "supervised by so-and-so," and the director passes into oblivion; if it is rank it is "directed by so-and-so," and the buck is passed to the man behind the megaphone. No praise for the director. All praise for "supervised by———." No wonder so many of our directors are heartsick and discouraged. What can you do when someone like this takes out the shears and begins to cut the picture right and left. He doesn't know drama; he doesn't know motion pictures. All he does know is ribbons, or lawn-mowers, or "less footage," and he proceeds to accomplish the latter with the aid of a pair of reckless shears. He presumes to tell a director who has enjoyed years of success in his profession how motion pictures shall be made. There can be no art in motion pictures as long as "supervised by————" holds sway. The director will shoulder the blame for his few mistakes if he is given credit for his successes, unmolested by the supervision demon.

This Week's Theatre Notes

One of the most dramatic human documents which has ever been played on the silver screen is "The Mail Man" at Loew's State Theatre. Produced by Emory Johnson on a lavish scale the story deals with a family of a letter-carrier and the drama coming into their lives. One of the most interesting parts of the film is the evolution of our present postal system which is shown with every phase of transcontinental mail service portrayed. The destiny of the family of Bob Morley, of the U. S. postal service, holds its sway on the emotions of the audience and the production may be considered as one of the best photoplays of 1923.

The leading character actor, Ralph Lewis, portrays the chief role and the cast includes Johnnie Walker, Martha Sleeper, Virginia True Boardman, David Kirby, Josephine Adair, Taylor Graves, Hardee Kirkland, Richard Morris, and Rosemary Cooper.

The funsters rule the boards at the Hillstreet Theatre. Headin gthe comedy outlay will be the famous "Black Laugh," Al Herman. Thomas E. Shea, veteran of the dramatic stage will present a series of character bits from "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "The Cardinal" and "The Bells." Another stronghold on the bill will be Jack Rose, he who breaks hats and spreads mirth all at the same time. The dancing and singing will be provided by Ted Lorraine, Jack Minte and Mlle. Marie Andre' in a miniature musical revue adapted from "Moth and Flames." Joe Towle is also a spreader of joy under the title "Joe Towle in his own peculiar entertainment." Completing the vaudeville will be the McGood-Lenzen Co., society equilibrists. An unusual photoplay is promised in "A Bill of Divorcement," featuring Constance Binney. Other features on the bill aer Allen Hall and the Tiny Symphony Orchestra, Wm. Duncan chapter-play, "The Steel Trail," a "Snub" Pollard comedy, Hillstreet International News and Aesop's Fables.

"Going Up," Douglas MacLean's greatest screen production, flies into the Alhambra Theatre for the week and will probably fly away with about all the laughter the audience can reasonably be expected to share.

Douglas MacLean is the star of the high altitude comedy and the aviator clothes he wears fit him without a wrinkle. The plot concerns a young man who has to fly an airplane and can't. That is about all there is to it, and that is sufficient as far as it affords Mr. MacLean opportunities of being forced from one amusing uncomfortable situation into another.

The cast includes Marjorie Daw, Hallam Cooley, Edna Murphy, Hughie Mack, John Steppling, Francis McDonald and others.

Bill Hart is back!

After a long retirement from the screen, Mr. Hart appears in his first new Paramount picture, "Wild Bill Hickok," from a story written by himself and detailing the adventures of one of the most noted historic characters on the western frontier in the stormy days following the Civil War.

The picture, which is the feature attraction at Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre this week, is regarded by the producers as a most fitting and worthy vehicle for the return of the most famous and popular exponent of western drama on the screen.

The picture is augmented by an accompanying program including Gould & Rash, the novelty songsters, known throughout vaudeville for their versatility in vocal work; Herman Heller conducing the Metropolitan Orchestra, Henry Murtagh at the Wurlitzer offering another novelty, "Ethiopia," which Murtagh describes as a complete grand opera in seven minutes, and other pictorial features.

The opening week of Mary Pickford in "Rosita" at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre is destined to be a dazzling affair in local cinema history.

According to Grauman, the initial performance will be in the nature of a testimonial to "America's Sweetheart" who, Douglas Fairbanks and Charles Chaplin will be guest of honor. Every star in Hollywood will also be present by invitation. The house will be artistically dressed for this gala occasion.

In this performance only, all seats will be reserved. The entire orchestra and loges will be priced at $2.20 and the dress circle and rear balcony at 65c for this occasion.

Here is Edith Yorke, whose specialty is playing "mother" roles. In these she has excelled until her name is known in both stage and film circles.

Not all mothers are ideal, however, according to Miss Yorke, whose portrayal of "Mom," in "Mothers-in-Law," which is at Clune's Broadway, is an out-standing feature on the B. P. Schulberg production.

Miss Yorke has played many mothers, but she confesses the role of "Mom," is the one she loves best of all. It shows her as a loyal little woman who keeps the home-fires burning in the face of a tyrant husband and a rebellious son, and later, in the household of the son and his pretty, restless wife.

With deep understanding, the mother-in-law summons all her strength to fight for the happiness of her "two" children.

Dusk was stealing over the western hills as e slipped into the little car waiting at the curb d sallied forth to the east over the boulevards Hollywood. After a short and rather swift de of perhaps fifteen or twenty minutes we ew up in front of a magnificent structure, chitecturally reminiscent of an old Spanish stle, which was located on an avenue in the art section of Los Angeles.

Ye editor and ye publisher disembarked, and avely marched up to the massive door and as avely rang the silvery-toned bell that met our ze. There was an electric buzz and the door ung to. We entered and found ourselves at e foot of a long row of richly-carpeted stairs, the head of which was a beautiful blonde rl, immaculately attired in a gown of whitest e, who bade us welcome entry. In some man- r or other we tripped up the stairs and not ng after found ourselves settled snugly in a ep divan in a luxuriously appointed suite, ith the same girl delightfully perched on a air not far from us. This then, was how we et Mae Marsh, the Mae Marsh of whom we d heard so much during the long years since e first motion picture made its debut. This rl who was interrogatively gazing at us, was e of whom that cinema maestro, D. W. Grif- h, had said * * * "she was born with the ul of an artist; of all my people, of all those who have worked with me, she is the one who was born to act. She need but be herself on the screen, and she creates a masterpiece."

She spoke, and we were tensely attentive. We had querried her about film production in London, as she had known it during the time she was there making "Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing" and "Flames of Passion."

"Compared to American film making they are ten years behind the times there. They haven't the equipment that the American studios possess, that is, with the possible exception of the Famous Players studio in London which is equipped in practically the same manner in which American studios are. However, I believe their settings are superior to those of the Americans. Simplicity is the keynote of their settings; they are not wont to over-exaggerate things as the Americans are. While their spectacular productions have the same atmosphere of richness and wealth that ours do, there is no conglomerated background and everything is subdued to permeate an air of simplicity, which, after all, is the true expression of aristocracy and finesse.

"I find the English professional people a charming group. The male seems to predominate in popularity with motion picture audiences there, for there are very few girls suited to motion picture acting. That is the reason why so many of our American girls have gone abroad to make pictures for English companies. Of the English girls there are only a scant few who enjoy any great popularity, one in particular whose name I cannot bring to mind just now. British audiences are intensely loyal; they enjoy home-made productions, but they also accord American films a hearty reception.

"The two pictures I made were filmed in London and in Devonshire. While I thoroughly enjoyed my visit there I would like to stay in California to make pictures.

"When I returned to America I made 'The White Rose,' for Mr. Griffith. It was a new type of role for me and it afforded me marvelous opportunities to once more appear before the American public in a big way. No, I don't know if Mr. Griffith will return to California. He was contemplating making 'The White Rose' here but something arose to change his plans. I don't believe location is a vital factor in his production plans. He is essentially the worker, tireless and energetic. During the making of this picture we very rarely got home before midnight and were made up and ready on the set by ten the next morning at the very latest. Mr. Griffith is the artist and devotes great thought and care to his pictures. He loves to work in seculsion, toiling incessantly. He may come back here. I couldn't say. He usually does things on the spur of the moment in cases of that nature. In my opinion his real reason for ever leaving California was the bitter feeling the public seemed to have against motion picture people, and the endless wrangling between the factions which was at its height at that time. Probably he thought he would find things better in the east, as he evidently has, but with things changed to such a great degree in the past few years he may return to the field of his first endeavors.

"You ask me what my favorite role was. 'Apple-Pie Mary,' without a doubt. It was a picture Bobbie Harron and I made. I felt more at home in that type of role. I believe in portrayals with great heart appeal; and that was one of them. 'Tol'able David' was great; pictures like that are bound to reach the peak.

"What a wonderful thing it would have been to have preserved the old Griffith studio here as a landmark of the motion picture. That is an ideal that must give way, however, to the steady march of progress, and even now the familiar old buildings have passed away."

We talked on, and she told us of her latest cinema contribution, "Daddies," which was made by a local company, and her plans for the future, which are not, as yet, fully matured. Then her little daughter, Mary Marsh Arms, entered and we were introduced to the little lady, who bears a very striking resemblance to her mother. We were told that Mary had, in addition to her dollies, many imaginary playmates and that oft-times when mother was about to recline in the easy chair she would be informed that "Andrew" or "Jack," or some other visionary companion of Mary's was sitting there and really oughtn't to be disturbed. So it seems that Mary has inherited from her daddy, Louis Lee Arms, who is a newspaperman, and her mother, a vivid imagination, unusual descriptive powers and acting ability. This combination should prove a prizewinner. Devotion of the finest kind is what holds this mother and daughter together.

We talked and talked, and time passed with incredible swiftness. Soon we found the clock hands pointing to departure time, and we arose to go, first selecting from a group of striking portraits the study of this remarkable actress which you see here. This picture is Mae Marsh as she is, stately, dignified, pathetic, humorous, girlish. A merry twinkle in her eyes and at times a statemanly dignified mien. A mixture of the buoyant happy and the wistful. That is Mae Marsh. We departed with impressions and memories that time cannot dim, with beautiful thoughts of this gifted and charming girl. To us she is the essence of all that is worthy in motion pictures.

By Arthur Q. Hagerman

A novel reunion took place at Universal City, n the Hoot Gibson set, when Major E. S. Hardy, U.S.A., visited the big studio to be the uest of his former top sergeant, W. T. McCul- y, first assistant to Edward Sedgwick, direct- ng Gibson in "Courtin' Calamity."

The two served overseas in the photographic ivision during the war, McCulley, made a on-commissioned officer in view of his studio xperience, being assigned as aide to the major. McCulley handled a number of important de- elopments in wartime photography, such as opographical observations by airplane with a amera.

At the close of the war he returned to Uni- ersal City, while Major Hardy was assigned o another branch of the regular service.

Slated to be an Armistice Day speaker at a Los Angeles affair, Major Hardy arrived from San Francisco Presidio, and at once proceeded to Universal City, where with a party of brother officers he passed the day with his former aide.

It took Hoot Gibson and a high powered racing car just a little longer than nothing-flat to wreck a circus set that had required two days to construct.

Hoot hit a lemonade stand when he was driving forty miles an hour and he carried pieces of it clear through the big tent housing the main show. His flying trip through the world of canvas, sawdust and pink lemonade came as the big thrill scene in "Courtin' Calamity," his latest Universal feature. The story is a screen version of the popular Saturday Evening Post story by William Dudley Pelley. It is woven around the adventures of an eastern college lad who joined a wild-west show in preference to an apprenticeship in his father's iron foundry.

Hoot was as excited as a school kid the day he was to drive the racing car through the circus tents. It was to follow the shooting of one of the circus hands by "Calamity Jume," a part played by Josie Sedgwick. Gibson is directing the picture in the absence of Edward Sedgwick, his regular director, who has been seriously ill for several weeks.

"You'd better let a 'double' do this scene, Hoot. It'll never 'pick up,'" W. T. McCulley,

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

Nov. 16th, 1923.

Milton Gardner, vice-president of Goldwyn, Victor Seastrom, director, Ray Moore, head location manager, and Al Lewyn, all of the Goldwyn forces arrived in San Francisco on Sunday morning, and are spending several days here looking up locations for a new picture. The next Goldwyn production, work on which will begin at an early date, will be under the direction of Victor Seastrom, and will be a story of San Francisco, with extensive location work done here.

Wallace Beery was a week-end guest at the St. Francis, arriving on Saturday from Ft. Bragg where he has been working in "The Signal Tower," being made by Universal under the direction of Clarence Brown.

Ernest Traxler who has just completed his job as production manager on "Greed" arrived in San Francisco on Friday evening for a little visit. Ernest is now almost a native son of San Francisco for most of his eleven months of work on "Greed" was done here, and the Plaza Hotel doesn't look natural without his smiling face.

Anna May Wong, little Chinese film star, and the elderly Chinese woman who acts as her chaperon, arrived in San Francisco last Wednesday. After a short stay here they expect to sail for Honolulu on a holiday trip.

One of the most interesting events of the fall season was the arrival at the Curren Theatre last Sunday of Joseph Dalgeim and his Russian players of the Chat Noir Theatre. Back in the old days of Russia when Balieff had his "Chauve-Sourfs" in Moscow, Dalgeim and his "Chat Noir" in Petrograd, and with the coming of the day of revolution when Balieff was driven out first to Paris, and later to New York; Dalgeim went the other way, first to Siberia then China, and only lately arrived, via the Pacific, in San Francisco. The Chat Noir Theatre company, as opening at the Curren Theatre last week, includes some twenty-five Russian artists, giving a sort of glorified Russian vaudeville, comprising ten numbers of singing and dancing acts, with such artistic costumes, such vivid pantomime, and such charming music as to make an entertainment, not only unusual but thoroughly enjoyable even to a person like ourselves who boast not even one word of Russian, the language in which the whole performance is given. After a short stay here the company expect to go into the Auditorium Theatre in Los Angeles for a run, and later tour the coast.

Earl Olin, for a long time director for Larry Semon, and Frank Alexander, four-hundred pound comedian, have come to town, and in association with Frank Burt, and Earl Sibley of the Artcraft Productions formed a new production organization. The new company is to be called the Eldorado Productions, with offices at 718 Golden Gate Building, and they will begin production at an early date of a series of two reel comedies.

The safe arrival is reported from Los A geles harbor of the fleet of seven assorted sh brought here and sent South to be used in next picture of the Frank Lloyd Productions. command of the flotilla when it set sail v Wayne Abbott famous for years as a parash jumper, with a record of having jumped ei thousand feet, and now taking a chance goi to sea with seven moving picture ships. Amo the boats is a quite new Admiral's launch to used by Mr. Lloyd in directing the picture.

Charles L. Fallon, quite well known to picture world, and recently assistant direc with a local picture making company, is n appearing as a member of the company givi a series of French plays at La Gaite Francai

Edward B. Baron for many years represen tive of the United Artists Corporation, distrit tors of the Fairbanks, Pickford, Chaplin a Griffith productions, has severed his connecti with that company to assume an important po tion in the executive department of the Herb Rothchild Entertainments.

All pictures have production costs and fo age,but "Greed" holds the unique record of ha ing mileage as well, for Ernie Traxler its pr duction manager bought a new car just after began work on the picture, and sold it the oth day just after the finishing of the filming "Greed." The recorded miles on the speed meter were something over ten thousand, made on business for the production, and m of them traveled in and around San Francis and the Bay Cities. Some mileage.

Motion Picture Settings

By CEDRIC GIBBONS
Art Director, Goldwyn Studios

From a photographic standpoint, color is of practically no value in the design and construction of motion picture settings.

There have been many articles written concerning the importance of color used on motion picture sets. I have read long explanations telling the exact method whereby reds, greens, browns, and blues attain their different values in the black and white scale of the motion picture screen.

There must be little doubt in the public mind, after these many forceful articles, that red really photographs black, and that yellow photographs white, and that cameramen will not take pictures of white walls because white walls "burn up" a set, giving a flat appearance to the picture.

The reason I use color is because of the effect it has on the players and directors working on the set. It is used for precisely the same reason that each company uses an orchestra—to aid the players in attaining a certain mood. Suppose I dispensed with color, using blacks and greys. You can imagine the depressing effect such a sombre setting would have on a group of people who are supposed to be enjoying the festivities of a gay cafe. Colorless sets are morbid. We use them only when the action transpiring in the scenes is of a cold depressing nature. Why paint a cafe scene in greys when it is much easier to mix orange, lavender or green, and these paints are less expensive? If we were dealing solely in a scale of greys we would not use grey paint. Browns are handled much easier, and give a better tone effect.

I make all the preliminary drawings of sets in color, not because color is of importance to the set, but solely for the reason that I am an artist who prefers to work in color. Another artist might make his drawings in black and white.

Color is only for the benefit of the individuals engaged in the making of a picture. A motion picture audience does not know the difference between a light blue wall, a white wall or a yellow wall. All they are able to discern is the values, and these are attained, not by colors, but by lighting.

In making the sets for the interiors of a castle in the Goldwyn picture "In the Palace of the King," I broke an iron-clad rule by using white walls. All the effects were obtained by lighting and lighting in pictures supplants color in paintings. Motion pictures represent a seri of pictures. Unfortunately we cannot impa to these pictures, therefore, we must conceiv our artistic values by the use of light.

It is my belief that the public taste should played up to. We have been playing down the public long enough. In the settings f "Three Weeks" I have eliminated all detail design, and have merely suggested the mood the setting. We have been working like a grou of beginners in an art class. Our eyes hav been attracted to detail. We have buried th one predominating idea of our scenes with mass of detail. We have cluttered up our se with palms, jardinieres, and brass beds. Te years ago a director in designing the interi of a wealthy home thought that he must us every piece of rich furniture, tapestry and gew gaw that he could possibly crowd in the roo or the public would not think it was a ric man's home. Today, rich interiors are ver plain. Tomorrow they will be nothing but th suggestion of such a place. In "Three Weeks we hope to accomplish this. I am working en tirely in line, light and composition. Colo means nothing to the artistic merit of the ac How can it mean anything when the publi does not see color on the screens?

Poetry and Prose

ften I think of the beautiful town hat is seated by the sea;
ften in thought go up and down
he pleasant streets of that dear old town, nd my youth comes back to me.
nd a verse of a Lapland song s haunting my memory still:
A boy's will is the wind's will,
nd the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

can see the shadowy lines of its trees, nd catch, in sudden gleams,
he sheen of the far-surrounding seas, nd islands that were the Hesperides
f all my boyish dreams.
nd the burden of that old song,
t murmurs and whispers still:
A boy's will is the wind's will,
nd the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

remember the black wharfs and the ships, nd the sea-tides tossing free;
nd the Spanish sailors with bearded lips nd the beauty and mystery of the ships, nd the magic of the sea.
nd the voice of that wayward song s singing and saying still,
A boy's will is the wind's will,
nd the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

remember the bulwarks by the shore, nd the fort upon the hill;
he sunrise gun with its hollow roar,
he drum-beat repeated o'er and o'er,
nd the bugle wild and shrill.
nd the music of that old song hrobs in my memory still:
A boy's will is the wind's will,
nd the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

remember the sea-fight far away, ow it thundered o'er the tide.
nd the dead captains, as they lay n their graves, o'erlooking the tranquil bay, here they in battle died.
nd the sound of that mournful song
oes through me with a thrill:
A boy's will is the wind's will,
nd the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

can see the breezy dome of groves, he shadows of Deering's Woods;
nd the friendships old and the early loves ome back with a Sabbath sound, as of doves n quiet neighborhoods.
nd the verse of that sweet old song,
t flutters and murmurs still:
A boy's will is the wind's will,
nd the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

remember the gleams and glooms that dart cross the school-boy's brain;
he song and the silence in the heart, hat in part are prophecies, and in part re longing wild and vain.
nd the voice of that fitful song ings on, and is never still:
A boy's will is the wind's will,
nd the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

here are things of which I may not speak;
here are dreams that cannot die;
here are thoughts that make the strong heart weak, nd bring a pallor into the cheek,
nd a mist before the eye.
nd the words of that fatal song
ome over we with a chill:
A boy's will is the wind's will,
nd the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

Strange to me now are the forms I meet
When I visit the dear old town;
And the native air is pure and sweet,
And the trees that o'ershadow each well known street,
As they balance up and down,
Are singing the beautiful song,
Are sighing and whispering still:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

And Deerings' Woods are fresh and fair,
And with joy that is almost pain
My heart goes back to wander there,
And among the dreams of the days that were,
I find my lost youth again.
Rnd the strange and beautiful song,
The groves are repeating it still:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

The day had westered far, and on
The yellow pines the sunset shone,
Streamed back from Lurvein, kindling them
To redder lustre, branch and stem,
Ere they reached the pine-tree on the crown
Sole-standing of the promontory,
Whence they beheld far-gazing down
The loch inlaid with sunset glory.
Long time beside that sole pine-tree
They stood and gazed in ecstacy,
For the face of heaven was all a-glow
With molten splendor backward streamed
From the sunken sun, and the loch below,
Flushed with an answeting glory, gleamed.
Each purple cloud aloft that burned
In the depth below was back returned.
There headlands, each o'erlapping each,
Projecting down the long loch's reach,
With point of rock and plume of pine,
All glorious in the sunset shine:
And far down on the verge of sight
Rock-islets interlacing lie,
That lapt in floor of molten light
Seemed natives less of earth than sky.
From height of heaven to ocean bed
One living splendour penetrated,
And made that moment seem to be Bridal of earth and sky and sea.

HOPE

By Eric Mayne

"Hope springs eternal in the human breast, Man never is, but always to be blest."

It is this continual hope for a blessing that makes life itself a blessing.

Hope is necessary to life, but it is not life.

Hope exalts the purpose of life, and strengthens the courage of life.

No matter how rich a man may be, if he has lost hope he is poor.

It is better to die, hoping to live, than to live hoping to die.

A Wise Man has said, "We are never beneath hope while we are above hell, nor above hope while we are beneath heaven."

The more conscientiously a man shoulders the responsibilities of life, the more he feels the need of hope.

Hope saves a man from allowing himself to sink in the slough of despond, it also prevents him from scaling the mountains of presumption.

Hope against hope to achieve something worth while, and if success is doubtful, keep on working and keep on hoping.

"Hope evermore and believe, O Man, for e'en a sthy thought
So are the things thou seest; e'en as thy hope and belief.
Say to thyself; It is good yet there is better than it.
This that I see is not all, and this that I do is but little;
Nevertheless it is good, though there is better than it."

EDITOR'S NOTE--"Camera!" takes great pleasure in announcing for its feature section a series of very interesting and timely articles entitled "Palmborg's Paragraphs," which will be a narrative of anecdotes of motion picture life and impressions of film folk as seen through the eyes of an insurance analyst. These will be written exclusively for this magazine by Mr. C. F. Palmborg, Hollywood representative and special analyst of the New York Life Insurance Company, who has attained renown as an expert in his chosen profession. Mr. Palmborg speaks with authority as he has dealt with the foremost people of the shadow stage as well as numerous lesser lights of the industry, and he has incorporated in his writings all of the pathetic and humorous touches which naturally form a large part of such an essentially human and down-to-the-earth vocation as is his. The first of the series will begin next week and will have as its subject the late lamented Wallace Reid. We are giving Mr. Palmborg's foreword herewith:

It is a fact that the general public does not realize that the picture people are normal men and women just like themselves. As they are entertainers they looked upon as "players" in every sense of the word. They are believed to be temperamental, erratic children who are seldom serious about anything.

In my work I have dealt with all classes and types of people, from the cleverest politician and business man to the wealthy society idler and the family man of slender income. During the last two years I have worked almost entirely among picture people and in doing so have dealt with producers, directors, stars and those connected with the various branches of the industry. I find that they are a splendid class of people to work among. They are courteous, brilliant, clever, and prompt in keeping their appointments. They are serious workers, who plan for their families and their future just as carefully as the business man.

Occasionally there are exceptions, as in all walks of life, and I meet a snappy, rude individual who seems to think that by so acting he is conveying the impression that he is a "big man." Of course, he is only making himself ridiculous and advertising his smallness.

But the delightful pleasing personalities I have met among the picture folk far o'er shadow the others, so when an outsider airs his views of them I proceed to set him right. Either jealousy or ignorance or a combination of both, causes the average man or woman to make slurring remarks about the players. This is not right, for I repeat that I have found them just as, and often more, wholesome, interesting and business-like than those who criticize.

At an early date I plan to give some of my personal experiences with various individual noted celebrities.

SPORTS

NOTICE

The feature story about Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight champion pugilist, which was announced last week for this week's issue has been indefinitely postponed owing to the fact Dempsey has left for New York and foreign points, and that upon his return developments of a very interesting nature will have taken place, worthy of inclusion in an article of this nature. Rumors of all sorts are rife at the present time regarding the champion's future activities and we therefore deem it advisible to wait until such time as we can present an article that will be absolutely authentic and covering the very interesting events that are bound to take place during his sojourn in the east and abroad. We could have prepared a personality story for you but we believe you will appreciate our efforts to provide you with the latest news at all times. Your disappointment at not finding this announced story here this week should therefore be mitigated to some extent by knowledge of the fact when it is published it will be a case of first with the latest with us.

New York has made twenty-five entries for the 1925 English Derby. The King of England has entered five.

Zev, great Rancocas colt, is slated to meet In Memoriam at Louisville this Saturday in an attempt to reverse the recent defeat. They say Zev is in better shape now and should come out an easy winner.

The French Jockey Club hsa plans under way for an international horse race at the Langchamps track at Paris for 1924, a day after the Grand Prix run. In all probability America would send Zev, England would be represented by Papyrus and France would enter its great steed Epinard.

Princeton is scheduled to meet Yale on the gridiron this Saturday. It iwll be the final game of the Tiger season.

There is a revival of talk about the proposed Jack Dempsey-Harry Wills bout. It appears that the recent animosities between the two battlers may be satisfactorily settled and that the fight may be one of the headliners of the coming year. Dempsey will also have to settle the little matter of the heavyweight title claims of Messrs. Gibbons and Firpo, howeverr, before he can assurer himself of any real peace. These will probably come to a head next year, too, and if so, 1924 will figure prominently in pugilistic annals.

Louis Pergantos, Greek light heavyweight wrestler, who recently met Ad Santell at Philharmonic Auditorium, is back in town, and has issued a challenge to all light heavyweights.

One of the most interesting figures of local mat circrles is George D. Kotsonaros, Greek grappler, who recently met Jim Londos. He is a man of splendid physical build, and has often been referred to as the "Greek Georges Carpentier" because of this attribute.

PUBLIC OPINION

SCRIBBLERS LEAGUE

Los Angeles, Nov. 9th.

Editor "Camera!",
Los Angeles, Cal.

The executive of the above organization ventures to request your kind co-operation and assistance in making known to readers through the medium of your journal particulars of the following short story competition which is open unconditionally to all non-professional writers in the county of Los Angeles.

The Scribblers League is an organization of some years' standing and is well known in the literary and newspaper world of Los Angeles. It exists for the advancement of better literature and its ulitmate aim is to see Los Angeles recognized as the literary center of the West. Its object in promoting this competition is purely altruistic, and for the encouragement of writers hitherto unknown.

The awards will be made by competent and independent adjudicators, not connected with the organization.

All entries must be sent to the Competitive Secretary, Miss A. M. Kirby, 2503 Buckingham Road, Los Angeles, from whom all entry forms and additional particulars may be obtained.

Yours faithfully,
A. W. MACY, President

Editor, "Camera!",
Los Angeles, Calif.

I have just received my copy of "Camera!" dated October 20th and note therein your appointment to the managing editor's desk. Congratulations.

From the tone of your past editorials one can surely say that you are sincere, and that you want to be of service to the profession.

Your editorial calls for suggestions or grievances.

There are several "things" connected with the industry that I, as well as the vast millions, would like to know about, and it seems to me that only a paper that "has no axe to grind" would answer them satisfactorily to all parties concerned. They are as follows:

First: Is there a dearth of screen material?

Second: Is there a chance for the "original" writer? (Not a short story writer or a novelist.)

Third: Does the correspondence school that advertises so extensively actually sell 85% of the MSS. sold in California, or isn't this a "ture?" (Their "ads" state they are the clearing house for that amount).

Fourth: Do the firms that request a messenger fee actually try to sell your MSS. or are they not left in filing-cases for a period of weeks, with false notations as to where they were sent marked thereon?

Fifth: Anyone connected with the organization, or rather the profession, should not allow his or her name to be used for advertising purposes? (Half of the time the "star" never uses the article mentioned, and is only interested in the money it brings in).

Sixth: MSS. that are unread should be returned with that notation thereon, rather with one that infers that the MSS. was read and it was "not suited to our requirements."

Seventh: An editorial on the "course of a MSS. through a studio" would be of benefit, and would create trust on the part of the author.

Eighth: The personal letters of encouragement that used to be sent out to authors by Selznick and Norma Talmadge some years ago did much to keep an author trying, while the form cards that are sent out today make many an author give up trying to write for the screen and go back to short-story writing. I do not mean by this that those without any knowledge about writing should receive these letters; tho sometimes even these people can be trained.

Ninth: Don't you think the public taste, and the class of pictures then being produced, in 1920-21, was on a par with their taste today? In other words, is there really any uplift in pictures today?

Tenth: Who are some of the reliable agents in California that sell MSS. (I don't mean the typing, revising, where-to-sell bureaus.)

I believe articles printed about the things listed above will be of value to everyone connected with the industry, and if you advertise what you are attempting to do, your circulation will be increased. The profession needs a paper like yours, and while this is a program that will probably keep you and your staff busy, providing you undertake it, for the remainder of the winter. It believe it will more than repay you, for everyone, author, scenarist, director, star, technical man, etc., will know that if they have a grievance there is a paper in Los Angeles that will print the truth and nothing but the truth and that "big" money cannot buy it.....

Again I wish you the best of success in your new position, and I am sure if you continue in the same vein as you have heretofore that more happiness will be forthcoming for your readers.

Thanking you, I remain,
Very sincerely yours,
JOHN B. CAREY.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Mr. Carey's missive presents several very interesting querries, well worth serious consideration. Located, as he is, in the eastern section of the country, far removed from the scene of major film activities, he is not afforded any great opportunity to get an insight into motion picture production. For his benefit and others like him, and in the interest of the industry at large "Camera!" will soon present a series of themes dealing with the screen-writing situation in all of its phass, written by Richard Mattison Duane, who is now conducting an investigation along these lines. They will be snappy, accurate and timely; and, of course, simply told and well-written. "Camera!" presents the truth—always. Watch for these articles soon!

ROTH EXPOSE ROCKS FILMDOM!

Actress Is Badly Hurt In Crash

Renee Adoree, well-known Louis Mayer star, was seriously injured last Thursday evening while on her way to the studio for night scenes when her automobile collided with a street car.

An X-ray examination at the Angelus Hospital revealed several broken ribs, and her face and arms were cut. She is now at her home under doctor's care.

Jackie Seeks Leading Lady

Little Jackie Coogan is looking for a sweetheart, or rather, Arthur Bernstein, business manager and casting director for the Coogan company, is looking—not for a sweetheart for himself, but for Jackie. But Jackie, or rather Mr. Bernstein, is very particular, and his sweetheart must be just so, or he won't suit. She must be, for instance, about 52 inches tall; she must be from 6 to 8 years of age; and she must be as blond as any Flemish maiden, for that is what he is supposed to be. This little girl is required to play the role of little Alois in "The Boy of Flanders," which is an adaptation of Ouida's story, "A Dog of Flanders."

Mr. Bernstein emphasises the fact that choice of a little heroine is not already committed, and that each little girl's chance is as good as another's, provided she meets the requirements set forth. "For who can tell," says Mr. Bernstein, but that in our search for a suitable partner for little Jackie, we shall find another prodigy, and we are certainly not committed in our choice to any already established feminine juvenile player."

The picture on which work is about to be launched is the second to be made for Metro release, the first being "Long Live the King," which is already in Metro's hands.

BOND FORMS OWN COMPANY

News has just been issued of the formation of a new independent production company by Frederick Bond, formerly with D. W. Griffith, who recently completed the direction of "Beyond The Veil," featuring the noted Hindu, A. K. Mozumdar. The company will have Monroe Salisbury as the star of the first six stories, from the pens of well-known writers. Fans the world over have been writing in, inquiring as to the reason for Salisbury's long absence from the screen. He has just concluded a successful engagement playing the principal role in The Mission Play. However, the fans won't have to wait long now to see him on the screen again.

WORSLEY PLEADS FOR CO-OPERATION AND COORDINATION

Cooperation and coordination.

These are the two remedies for the excessive cost of making motion pictures, according to Wallace Worsley, whose "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" opened Friday at the Criterion.

Worsley, who has had a long and successful career as a director of motion pictures, has had excellent opportunities to detect the wasteful processes which run up the costs of films, especially the larger productions, and he declares that high salaries alone are not responsible for the staggering sums spent by the producers.

Discussing the problem at his home the other day, Worsley said:

"The public is responsible for the high salaries demanded by popular players. Its favorable attitude toward them increases their value in a picture. When a player leaps into popular demand, it is only human for him or her to insist upon a salary that is commensurate with the box office powers of his or her appearance.

"And the producers are not without fault in this matter, too. They have boosted a lot of their players into the high salary class, largely through publicity designed to sell their photoplays. So, if the public and the producers unite to exaggerate the box office value of a player, it is not to be wondered at that the player wants a share in the 'melon.'

"The principal cause of excessive costs lies within the studio itself. Lack of cooperation and coordination causes a tremendous amount of waste. An instance of this was given in making 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame.' Lon Chaney, the star, was engaged at a salary of $2,000 a week 10 days before I was assigned to direct the picture. It was exactly three months from the date of his engagement until we began 'shooting.' Thus Mr. Chaney received about $25,000 before he ever had a make-up on.

"If there had been the proper cooperation and coordination, the director would have worked with Perley Poore Sheehan in adapting Victor Hugo's novel to the screen. The sets would have been designed and the scenes determined upon before the cast was engaged. Then all would have been in readiness to start work at once and a wasteful 'leak' would have been stopped.

"This was but one of several instances which ran up the cost of 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' to nearly $1,000,000. And what was true of this picture's production is true of many others which have been made in this and other years. It is not the amount of money that is spent, it is how it is spent that adds to the drawing power of the picture. Mostly sets that do not maintain the grip of illusion are failures, while cheap sets that do not fit into the picture in the right way are expensive at any price.

"With the proper cooperation and coordination in the studios, there would be a minimum of delays, which always add a staggering amount to the overhead. Misunderstandings that should have been obviated before 'shooting' began often cause a costly and entirely unnecessary delay. This points to a need for more real brain power and a comprehension that the competent man is cheap at any price and the incompetent one a dead loss, even at a small salary.

"Then, too, there is too much petty jealousy, too much spiteful bickering in some of the studios where complaint is made of high costs of production. Cooperation and coordination would smooth these away and give an organization that would be always pulling together. But, as long as the money is the only object kept in view, art must suffer and the motion pictures have their ups and downs in progress."

Attorney in Blackmail Case

A sensation has been created in film circles by the expose of an attempt upon the part of Herman L. Roth, prominent Hollywood lawyer, to extort $20,000 blackmail from Barbara La Marr and her manager, Arthur H. Sawyer.

Roth threatened to file an amended divorce complaint for Ben Deely, Miss La Marr's ex-husband, against her, naming co-respondents. The only alternative offered was to produce "hush" money.

Miss La Marr is now in San Francisco, and Roth is here, under arrest, awaiting probe of the case by the grand jury.

Six well-known film people, including Jack Gilbert, Roscoe Arbuckle, Paul Berne, Louis H. Scherer, Fred Wickersham and Lew Mason, have been ordered to appear and tell what they may know about the case.

George Berthelon is now general production manager at the Hollywood Studios, the only studio which does not produce and the exclusive business of which is renting full production facilities.

Berthelon was formerly assistant to a regime of three general managers at Goldwyn's Fort Lee Studio.

PETER THE GREAT IN COMEDY

"Peter the Great," one of the most valuable and highly trained of imported Shepherd dogs, has deserted the drama for comedy. He is now enjoying his third week as a comedian at the Christie studio and he threatens to cause a stir of jealousy among other canine actors. Harold Beaudine is directing the picture in which Jimmie Adams is featured.

PEIL WITH RENALLES

Edward Peil, renowned interpreter of Chinese characters who gained fame for his portrayals in D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" and "Dream Street", has been signed by Renalles, Inc., to play a similar role in their forthcoming picture entitled "The Elk's Tooth."

UNIQUE EXPLOITATION FOR "SUPERSTITION"

Because of its intriguing title and remarkable scenic possibilities, "Superstition," just completed by Creative Productions at the Hollywood Studios, is slated to become one of the most widely and variously exploited photodramas made this year, which has been replete with spectacular costume plays.

W. H. Carr, general manager of Creative Productions, and his staff of artists have been busily engaged for a week in working out an elaborate prologue for "Superstition" that will bring into prominence the strange beliefs and mythical legends of mariners that are woven into the picture, which was adapted to the screen from "Trapped," a widely read seafaring novel by I. W. Irving.

Exhibitors throughout the country are expected to seize on this prologue as a striking prelude to the screening of "Superstition" and a series of "teaser" cards, based on the many variant phases of the picture, is being prepared by Carr and his assistants.

For lobby displays and tie-ups, "Superstition" especially lends itself as a forceful advertising medium. Grottoes depicting the scenes of voodoo worship, with the mystic rites, incontations, chantings, flagellations and sacrifices will make up an especially vivid display, while other advertisements may be built on the nautical angle of the photodrama, which portrays one of the most forceful wreck scenes during a storm that ever has been put on the silver sheet.

Yachts and sailing craft, South Sea Islanders and California society all play their part in "Superstition," which begins and ends in a sailors' snuggery on the Pacific coast. The curse of dope also is grippingly depicted by the new Creative Productions photodrama, which has as one of the angles of its plot the addiction of a scion of wealth to the use of narcotics and his banishment to a long sea voyage in order that he may be remolded into a fit bridegroom for a San Francisco society bud.

Because of all these varying phases, "Superstition" is a picture that most readily permits of picturesque exploitation and, when his plans are completed, Carr declares they will make a hit with exhibitors and film fans wherever the displays are used.

WARNS SCREEN-STRUCK FOLK

"Keep away from Hollywood."

That is the warning issued by M. C. Levee, motion picture producer and president of the United Studios, Maurice Tourneur, director, Blanche Sweet, star, and Conway Tearle, leading man, in a joint "open letter" sent to a thousand periodicals. In co-operation with the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce they have begun a campaign to stem the tide of screen-struck boys and girls who are flooding the streets of the motion picture metropolis.

"There are more than one hundred thousand people registered with the agencies which supply men and women for minor parts in motion pictures," says the letter. "There are Fiji Islanders and Esquimaux; negro roustabouts and retired bank presidents; Bowery gunmen and New York society leaders wintering in the West. Thousands of them have independent incomes and can sustain themselves with but a few days' work a month. Most of them live from hand to mouth after the hundred dollars or so brought with them has been exhausted.

An accomplished and talented young woman—or man with dramatic training, stage experience, good looks, a very large wardrobe, friends in the motion picture industry, an income sufficient to maintain them in comfort for a year or two and unlimited persistence might be warranted in attempting to succeed in a screen career. Of all qualifications, the most important is—a steady income apart from possible picture salaries."

Sam Mogi, president of Independent Comedies, Inc., is jubilant over the progress of his organization and hopes to soon be engaged in active production. A well-known comedian is being sought for a series of twelve one-reel farces.

"THREE WEEKS" NEARS FINIS

Camera work on "Three Weeks" will be finished in three days, according to Alan Crosland, who is directing the Goldwyn film version of Elinor Glyn's famous story.

Scenes on the exterior of the huge Balkan castle built at the studios for the production have just been filmed. More than 700 extras were used, besides the principals in the cast.

Cavalry Aids in Historic Epic

The crack cavalry company of the Army, the famous Third stationed at Ft. Meyer, Virginia, played the part of Morgan's Raiders this week in scenes for D. W. Griffith's next film "America." This is the first time a cavalrry unit has taken part in a film.

Major Wainright, aide to Secretary of War Weeks, led the troop in the costume and character of the celebrated Morgan. Colonel Hawkins, in command of Ft. Meyer, assisted Griffith in directing the maneuvers. The White House staff of photographers were caught in one of the charges, without serious injuries.

Says Males Win on Merit

"More credit to the man who succeeds in pictures than the girl," says Theodore von Eltz, who is playing a leading role in Universal's "The Turmoil."

"Who 'discovers' the man as a general thing? When do we read that Alphonse Charming was started toward his prominent place on the screen today, by some famous painter, who put him on a magazine cover that immediately fell into the hands of a well known director, fame immediately following?

"When do we read that winning a beauty contest by Richard de Rich brought him to the notice of prominent directors who fought duels with one another to be first to put his name on the dotted line?

"Who is his patron? Experience, technic, art—the great three in one. But the crutch of any aids is denied him. Beauty would but shame him. He can rely on only one thing—merit. He has to act first, last and always."

GETS IDEAS ON TRIP

When Finis Fox left New York a short time ago to come to Los Angeles via the Panama canal, he had only a vague idea of his story, "The Woman Who Sinned." As his boat stopped at Kingston, Havana, Panama and Colon, Finis saw characters and observed incidents that furnished him with ideas for the development of his plot and gave him material for completing his story.

Finis worked almost constantly while enroute, with the result that when his boat reached Los Angeles Harbor, Finis had a complete working script for his story, "The Woman Who Sinned," complete in all its details ready for the camera.

Finis will start shooting as soon as he gets his cast assembled.

Sennett Has Chaplin Pee

Charlie Chaplin's discovere Mack Sennett, has made anothe find in Harry Langdon.

Sennett's announcement yea ago that he had discovered th world's greatest screen comedia was not taken seriously, unt Charlie Chaplin's appearance o the screen vindicated all of th Comedy King's extravagant clain for him.

Since the inception of Chaplin pantomimic action, there have bee no discoveries in the line of come dians of any noteworthy impor ance until the present.

Mack Sennett lays claim to th fact that he has made another mo important find, and the only re competitor to the famous Charli in the person of Harry Langdo Sennett even goes so far as to sa "he is Chaplin's equal." Wh should know better? It was Mac Sennett who brought Chaplin to th screen and made him known to th world.

Now it is Harry Langdon, whor Sennett avers will be the next ma ter-comedian of the silver shee and again—who should know be ter?

Harry Langdon comes to Mac Sennett following many years e perience on the stage, where h had become recognized as one the funniest comedians in musica comedy and vaudeville. He is a tached to the Sennett organizatio by a long term contract, and wi appear at the head of his own com pany in a series of specially wri ten comedies under the person supervision of the producer, as wa Charlie Chaplin.

Clarence Bricker has been a pointed assistant managing directo for Renalles, Inc.

MICKEY IN WELLMAN FILM

Mickey McBan, famous film sta let, has gone to Sonora on locatio with the William Wellman com pany from the Fox studio whic is filming "Not A Drum Wa Heard," featuring "Buck" Jone It is interesting to note that Micke was in the first picture Wellma ever directed, "The Man Wh Won," starring Dustin Farnun which was also shot at the sam location two months ago. Othe pictures in which has been prom nent are "Poor Men's Wives," and Emile Chautard's forthcomin "Beware The Woman" which wa made under the working titl "Born of the Cyclone."

George O'Hara, star of th "Fighting Blood" series, is nearin the completion of the pictures o the second series, with about thre weeks seeing the wind-up. Fee ing in need of a rest, O'Hara planning to spend his vacation i New York where he will take all the new shows.

Istra Films Novel in London

One of the most daring novels aling with life in London pub- hed in recent years, which used enormous public discussion on its publication a few months o, is now being filmed in Lon- n, and there is interested anti- ation as to how this remarkable ce of literary realism will be nslated to the screen.

This is "Miriam Rozella," writ- by B. L. Farjeon, a well-known glish novelist. His story deals th an innocent and large-souled ung woman, who suddenly anged from a position of afflu- e to poverty, comes under the luence of a group of wealthy d disolute society people. So at- ctive does she prove to these h idlers that they all seek her n, and a wager is placed on the l's honor.

There are many scenes of stark alism, and the author is quite ndid. How will this story be ated in a film? is a question be- g widely asked.

The screen version of "Miriam zella" is being made on an borate scale by Astra-National oductions, with an all-star cast. ven Nares, London's famous tinee idol, plays the leading an's role. Moyna Macgill has e title part. A dozen actresses re screen-tested for this role, d she was found to be the only e who registered a sufficiently nocent expression on the screen meet the requirements of the rt. Others of prominence in the st are Ellaline Terriss, Gertrude cCoy, Henrietta Watson, Mary ough, Ben Webster and Russell horndike.

Emotional Role in "Turmoil"

In the role of Mary Vertrees in both Tarkinston's epic of Ameri- n life, "The Turmoil," Eleanor ardman has a role well to the king of any ambitious actress. It a part full of opportunity for an tist possessed of real emotional ility, and the superb cast and chnical presentation of the film rsion under Hobart Henley's di- ction makes certain that the pic- re will be one of the most elabor- e offerings of any season. Read- s of the book love the character Mary Vertrees.

"The Turmoil," prepared for the reen by Edward T. Lowe, is a obart Henley production which ill be released as one of the fea- ired Universal-Jewels, following Merry-Go-Round," "A Lady of uality," "The Hunchback of otre Dame," "The Acquittal" and My Mamie Rose." Lowe in his riting of the scenario gave to it e ability and painstaking effort hibited in the scenario of "The unchback of Notre Dame."

VARIETY FOR GRASSBY

In "Shadows of the East," William Fox special now in the making, Bertram Grassby is adding another distinct characterization to his already long list of screen portrayals. Whether by accident or design Grassby seems to be cast into a different type of role in each production and no little demand is being made upon his ingenuity as a make-up artist. In the Vitagraph production "Pioneer Trails" he was called upon to play a Westerner of the good old roaring '40s. In the Metro production, "Angel Face Molly," he portrayed a sleek and debonaire Argentino; then in the Vitagraph version of George Barr McCutcheon's "The Man From Broadney's" he essayed the role of a Hindu of a villanous order. In his present production, "Shadows of the East" he is again playing an East Indian, but this time a dreamer and mystic of finer qualities, in fact a sort of Hindu "miracle man."

WINS LAEMMLE AWARD

William Elwell Oliver, graduate student of the University of California, won the Carl Laemmle scholarship with which the noted moving picture magnate entered the college and university field with a demand for new writers.

Several months ago the president of the Universal Pictures corporation announced a scholarship contest for the best screen story written by any college or university student in the United States. On short notice and at the busiest part of their years, 250 out of a possible 700 centers of higher learning responded instantly with a total of many thousands of manuscripts. There was such a bulk of material came in that the final decision had to be delayed one month.

Oliver, a graduate of the class of 1922 at the University of California, but still pursuing his studies in line with his literary aspirations, submitted a psychological adventure story entitled "The Throwback." It was judged the best of the entire number. It is laid in California and China and details the effects of heredity on a young man not quite as much of a pioneer in training as his grandfather.

There is a possibility that "The Throwback" will be used for Reginald Denny in a few months. Bernard McConville, supervising editor of Jewel productions, is now studying the story in preparation for its transformation into scenario form.

Oliver won a $1500 prize and the university a $1000 gift to be used appropriately.

IS BLONDEST OF BLONDE

The blondest girl in motion pictures.

This is the title given pretty Belva French who is playing an important role in "Souvenir," under Victor Hugo Helperin's direction at the Hollywood Studios.

Belva's spun-gold tresses are heritage from Swedish ancestors and they are several shades lighter than any other blond before the camera, forming a lovely halo about her piquant face when photographed.

Usually Miss French wears a straight bob but in "Souvenir," she is playing the role of a nurse and having decided that curls peeping beneath the cap would be captivating she has become friendly with the curling iron.

CARAVANERS VISIT DOUG

Seventy-five "caravaners" from various eastern points are back in their homes today after a motor trip from New York to Los Angeles, with the journey ending at Douglas Fairbanks' "Bagdad" in Hollywood. The day before they departed eastward they were the guests of the studio, viewing the huge sets which have been erected for Fairbanks' forthcoming picture "The Thief of Bagdad."

The caravan was said to be America's first motorized coast-to-coast procession and consisted of 35 privately-owned automobiles, dispatched westward by a New York newspaper last September.

After an adventurous 35-day journey, the party reached their "Trails End" at Santa Monica, the beach city near Hollywood.

Most of the party of 75 were New Yorkers. A day in Hollywood proved to them that the gigantic sets for the elaborate Fairbanks screen tale are the "skyscrapers" of filmland.

The caravan was headed by Syl MacDowell, formerly well-known Hollywood feature writer of motion picture subjects.

SIX TO GO FOR MAX

Max Mogi is busily engaged on the seventh of a series of thirteen two-reel comedies, starring Billy West, which Ward Hayes is directing at the Century Studio. The series is being released by Arrow under the name of Broadway Comedies.

WAS PIGSKIN STAR

Lloyd Bacon can do without horse races, swimming and golf, but where is the college man who can stay at the office on Saturday afternoons during the football season?

Mr. Bacon, who is head of Lloyd Hamilton's scenario department, played four years of college football, on the Santa Clara and Stanford University teams.

DIVORCE INFO APPALLING

Rupert Hughes, noted author and director, lectured before the San Francisco University Fine Arts Society on "The Divorce Dilemma."

Major Hughes has just completed his latest motion picture for the Goldwyn company, entitled "Reno." The picture was made under the working title of "Law Against Law," and deals with the conflicting divorce laws of the various states of the United States.

Before starting the picture Major Hughes spent several weeks in conference with some of the most noted divorce lawyers in the United States.

He learned that:

Over seventeen million dollars are paid out annually in alimony fees!

A man may be divorced in Nevada but he is still married as far as New York state is concerned, if his wife was not present at the divorce proceedings!

A man may be divorced anywhere, but he is always a husband in South Carolina, that state refusing to recognize divorce.

If he gets a divorce, remarries and enters the state of South Carolina he is a bigamist in that state and subject to imprisonment.

There are only two grounds for divorce in New York State—adultery and desertion, providing the couple have lived apart for five years or more. One may step across the border into Connecticut and have his choice of seven grounds for divorce.

A marriage is not legal in Maryland unless performed by a clergyman!

Nineteen states have no laws prohibiting the marriage of the feeble minded!

There is no minority age in seventeen states!

South Carolina permits a girl of twelve years of age to marry!

Divorce cannot be obtained on any ground in one state, yet it is granted on evidence of bad temper in another!

COOLIDGE SEES RUSHES

The Boston Traveler says:

Washington, October 31: Congressman Treadway today presented to President Coolidge, David W. Griffith motion picture director and producer, who showed the President several scenes of his "America," a picture of the war for Independence which will reproduce Lexington and Bunker Hill as they were in the Revolutionary Days, and will show the battles in which the American farmers and militia men struck the first telling blows for freedom.

American soldiers of today, attired as were these earlier soldiers, re-enacted the battle scenes. Many of the historic relics of those days, were used.

LeRoy Stone has been engaged to cut "Flowing Gold," Richard Walton Tully's next First National picture, which is to go int oproduction immediately.

Advocates Public Visits

Should movie stars make personal appearances?

Here's a question that divides the celebrities of Hollywood definitely in two.

Many stars are strictly against personal appearances and will not appear before the public under any circumstances. The others have a contrary opinion and after years of discussion among the players themselves, the situation still remains thus.

A definite illustration was had at the Actor's Fund Benefit recently. Many celebrities, although contributing in other ways toward the fund, were conspicuous on the stage by their absence.

Among those who appeared on the rostrum were Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, John Barrymore, Conway Tearle, Adele Rowland, Carmel Myers and others of prominence. Among those who did not appear were many other celebrities of the cinema.

Conway Tearle for instance, proved himself a pianist of no ordinary talent much to the surprise of many of his followers. Carmel Myers, Marjorie Daw, Enid Bennett and others proved themselves quite at home on the stage.

There was not one single instance where the appearance of a film player at the Benefit performance resulted in any disillusioning or unfavorable after effect on the part of the audience.

Mr. Tearle, himself an experienced stage actor, has this to say on the subject: "Motion picture players generally make a favorable impression when they appear in the flesh before the public. It is true there are instances where film artists have failed miserably when they stepped onto the stage. However, no better illustration of the fact that screen players can not only commit themselves favorably on the stage but can enhance their screen success through it, could be had than evidenced at the Actor's Fund Benefit. It requires training and study to succeed on the stage. Stage presence is something that is all important to the person who appears before the footlights but which does not find its place in the work of the studio player. By stage presence I mean general stage deportment including among other things, voice training.

"This all-important factor is frequently not appreciated by motion picture players and therein lies their down-fall when making public appearances. The motion picture players who participated at the Actor's Fund Show, many of whom never appeared on the legitimate stage, were trained for their work for that night. Even those who appeared for but a few moments realized that they had to make a study of the little they had to do in order to "get over," to use the vernacular of the theater.

"The day has come when film players no longer dash out before the public without a single thought of what they can do to hold and entertain their audience. Public appearances will enhance and not harm a film player's prestige—provided he or she acquires the necessary training and study that goes with the public appearances of any person no matter how famous they may be in other fields of endeavor."

HOKUM NOW UNPOPULAR

Press agent traditions are being broken daily by Hollywood scribes who learn to tell the truth when they become members of the "Wampas."

At the United Studio yesterday Bessie Love, appearing in an earthquake scene for Maurice Tourneur's "Torment," broke the small finger on her right hand when she caught it in a door during the height of the excitement.

In days of old this story would have been heralded with much fanfare; the star would have been "rushed to her home" where the doctor would have decreed that she remain for a week. Production would have been "held up" and everything generally, would be terrible.

Bessie did break her finger but the report of the accident states that she will not lose any time over it but that she will continue working just the same.

How times have changed.

BANS HUMP ON GROUND

They were doing scenes in "Air Pockets," a Jack White comedy.

Spencer Bell, colored and unusually credulous studio attache, was to be suspended beneath a plane and photographed as it went aloft. But Spencer showed an unwonted disposition to "stall," first asking to see a rehearsal with a dummy attached to the wire. This, Director Fred Hibbard assured him, was unnecessary, the wire being amply strong and the pilot having instructions to do only straight flying.

Then Spencer asked for a parachute.

"But," argued the director, "that would make a hump on your back, and everyone could see—"

"Boss," said Spencer firmly, "a small hump on my back today is better to me than a big hump in the graveyard next week, with my name on a rock at one end—and I don't mean puh-haps!"

They compromised with a rehearsal with the dummy.

HAS BECOME VILLAINOUS

Ah, the black-hearted villainess!

Eva Gordon, accomplished emotionalist, has played many sympathetic roles in excellent feature productions, but now she has turned the tables on herself and has turned "heavy" for the screen. She is playing the feminine heavy of William Duncan's current Universal chapter play, "The Fast Express," which Duncan directs and in which he co-stars with his wife.

Miss Gordon recently returned from Alaska where she played in a feature produced entirely in that snow-clad locale. She is a widely-traveled person, having spent her life in equal shares in the chief countries of Enrope, in China, America and various spots along the Pacific. Just before she went to Alaska a few months ago she played an excellent characterization in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

FINDS IT SLIGHTLY DAMP

Miss Ora Carew, star of the Gerson Pictures corporation, is finding it extremely damp in sunny California these days. Miss Carew went on location with the company to Peterson's Mill in the heart of the Lahonda Mountains of California for the purpose of making scenes for an Alaska picture. When between Pescadero she was caught in the first big rain storm of the season and received a prodigious soaking, as she was driving an open car. No sooner had she arrived at the Camp when Director Gibson informed her that she had to get ready to make a storm scene. Changing into dry garments Miss Carew went on the setting and no sooner had the camera began to work when they started the wind machine with its water rain-making apparatus and Miss Carew got the second soaking of the day.

The picture being made by the Gerson corporation has not been titled yet. It will be different from the usual Alaska picture as it will show the territory in summer dress and the entire company experience all the outdoor life of a logging camp.

One of the most unusual situations during the stay of the company was a forest fire, which preceeded the rain storm. The first, which started in the Canyon just above the Peterson's Mill camp gave every evidence of sweeping down upon the location where the members of the company were about to start work. Miss Carew had not arrived, but for a time it looked as though the popular blond actress would be caught in the forest fire. Fortunately, however, Miss Carew had not reached the point of the conflagration until some time after the rain storm had started. The storm was of such magnitude and such a drenching downpour that even the dangerous forest fire was unable to withstand it.

Victor Potel, clever eccentric comedian, has returned from Catalina with Reginald Barker's "Cape Cod Folks" company. After a two days' rest, Potel will accompany the outfit to a Laguna location which will be utilized for several days.

AIDS REALTY ON LOCATION

Los Angeles—and Hollywood, i particular—boasts no more loya son and booster than Syd Chaplin who is now on location in Yuma playing the featured male role i the Thomas H. Ince production "The Galloping Fish." Syd's boosting takes the form many othe famous actors favor, real estate In the quiet desert evenings, afte the day's work is done, Syd ma be heard regularly, in the lobby of the Arizona Hotel, dilating o the beauties of California an more particularly on the golden op portunities of Hollywood realty.

If everybody who threatens t come down to Hollywood accept Syd's invitation to show hir around, Chaplin will be busy fo many months after his return, con ducting his own Cook's tours.

RUTH RESTS

Ruth Hiatt is having her firs vacation "between pictures" i more than two months, durin which she has appeared in fou productions supervised by Jac White.

She will shortly begin work a leading woman with Lloyd Hamil ton, directed by Fred Hibbard.

NO HOME CHRISTMAS FOR HIM

His studio activities will preven Mervyn LeRoy, clever screen juve nile, from journeving to his Nev York home for the holidays. Re sultantly, Mervyn has been slight ly "low" in spirit, but his friend are assuring him that there's noth ing very miserable about a Holly wood Christmas.

LeRoy will soon be seen in 'Li tle Johnny Jones," and "The Cai of the Canyon."

MONG WILL BUILD IDEAL HOME

Having sold his residential prop erty in Hollywood at a handsome profit, William V. Mong, who ha just finished work on the role o "Pedro," the Spanish smuggler i Fred Niblo's "Thy Name Is Wo man," has purchased a site in Bev erly Hills on which he plans t erect a home that will embody al his own ideas of comfortable liv ing quarters. Mong has a leaning toward the Spanish type of archi tecture, but he says he hasn't de cided yet just what kind of an ex terior style would go best with th home-like interior he is planning Until he has had a chance to con fer with architects and reach a decision, Mong is keeping th Spanish type in reserve, especially as he nurses a longing for a home built about a patio.

Mervyn LeRoy, exvaudevillian who has appeared in many recen Hollywood photoplays, has just de clined an offer to return to his for mer field of endeavor.

THEY'RE SINGING ABOUT WANDA

Back in the days when the members of the original Floradora Sextette numbered only about five thousand, the height of popularity was demonstrated when the stage bar had a cigar named after her. In this jazz age, the same attainment is denoted by the similar action of a composer instead of a cigar-manufacturer.

Wanda Hawley, who recently returned from abroad, and still more recently finished playing the featured female role in "The Man from Brodney's" for Vitagraph, has just reached this zenith in the scale of popularity. Dan Ashbar of Kansas City has just published a new fox-trot entitled "Wanda," with the following touching chorus:

"Wanda—my pretty Wanda—you're the only one for me,
"With a heart so true, all the world loves you,
"You're as sweet as you can be;
"I can't help but sigh, and I almost cry, while you're so far away;
"Sweet Wanda dear, I want you near—
"I long for you night and day."

Louise Fazenda, featured in "The Galloping Fish," Ince production, who is at Yuma with the company, is now entertaining her mother to whom she sent a ticket as part of a birthday offering, so this happy occasion, which the two have always shared will be spent together. Miiss Fazenda is now starting her fourth week on the Arizona location which is fourteen miles from Yuma.

Hughie Mack, the rotund farceur, has been added to the cast of "The Elk's Tooth," the forthcoming production of Renalles, Inc.

JEANS IN ICE-BOX

Does the act of placing a motion picture actor's trousers in cold storage constitute a crime?

That is the question to be decided in a Los Angeles court when M. Kauahilikia, an Hawaiian, faces trial for plundering the home of Frank Mayo, Goldwyn film player.

Mayo's home in Hollywood was robbed recently, and the Hawaiian arrested. The actor's trousers were found later in the suspect's ice box, sole evidence of the theft.

So state attorneys are attempting to discover something in the California statutes making it a crime to put a thespian's trousers in cold storage.

SID IS MAN OF PARIS

Sid Smith is playing a Parisian boulevardier in the current Cameo comedy, directed by Gil Pratt.

This is a Latin character like his part in "The Ne'er-Do-Well," as the Panamanian chief of police. Before that he was featured in comedy as one of the Hallroom Boys.

FOX TROUPE TO SONORA

With a full troupe of players, his technical staff and his director, William Wellman, Charles "Buck" Jones, famous Fox film star, left the Fox Studio this week and is now on location at Sonora, where many of the scenes in his latest starring vehicle, "Not a Drum Was Heard," will be "shot."

Wellman, who directed Jones in his two preceding pictures, is expected to make a great photoplay out of "Not a Drum Was Heard," which was adapted to the silver sheet from Ben Ames Williams' famous Western story of the same name.

WRITERS AID AQUATIC STAR

Interesting news to film-fans is contained in the announcement that Bada Cowan and Howard Higgin recently completed the titling of "Shona of the South Seas," the picture which will serve to introduce Annette Kellerman to the screen. Many of us remember "The Daughter of the Gods" in which Miss Kellerman made her screen debut and which was one of the most extravagantly produced pictures of its day. During recent years, the famous acquatic star has been absent from the screen, appearing in various vaudeville and theatrical productions. "Shona of the South Seas" was filmed in Australia, and when Miss Kellerman brought it back to this country, she decided to secure the best available aid for her come-back—hence the engagement of the firm of Cowan-Higgin.

Eugenie Besserer, clever character actress who is noted for the novel entertainments which she affords her friends at her Edendale home, is adding a patio and open air fireplace to her gardens.

After a month's visit with her son in Hollywood, Lloyd Hamilton's mother has returned to her home in Oakland.

POSSESSES PERFECT BACK

To the true artist, the most intriguing portion of the female anatomy is not the face, the torso or the limbs; it is the back!

After a study of the charmers among the leading beauties in Hollywood's film circles, a group of artists has awarded the distinction of having the perfect back to Kathryn McGuire. The judges included Florence Morgan, Kalman Sejer and Finn Froelich, all of Hollywood.

Back in the days when she played on the Sennett lot, Miss McGuire's beauty won her considerable prominence, which she has since exceeded by her performances in dramatic feature pictures. At the present time, in fact, she is regarded by those in the know as one of the leading actresses among the younger group; she was chosen by the Wampas as one of the Stars-of-Tomorrow in last year's selection.

Her recent appearances on local screens have been in "The Shriek of Araby," "The Woman of Bronze" and "The Flames of Life." She has just finished creating the featured role in Mozumdar's "Beyond the Veil."

WAS ADEPT AT FIT-UP STUFF

When Spottiswoode Aitken first started on his stage career in Edinburgh, Scotland, he was a member of what was termed a Fit-Up Company. The Company toured the provinces, carrying no properties except a curtain and rough boards for seats. They then rented empty store rooms where they put on their shows, ranging anywhere from Hamlet to Uncle Tom's Cabin, which was very popular in Great Britain. The company had no scenery whatever and when little Eva died in the latter play, she was hoisted up to the roof of the stage on a rope.

Aitken who is now playing one of the important roles in Hunt Stromberg's production, "The Fire Patrol," says his Fit-Up Company put on Uncle Sam's Cabin no less than two hundred times and the audience never failed to laugh at little Eva's death scene.

Lillian Leighton, clever characterizer of screen roles, has undertaken the study of "raceology" with special regard to the Indian tribes of America.

Miss Leighton, who will soon be seen in Zane Grey's "The Call of the Canyon," is herself a brilliant interpreter of squaws and negro mammies.

Many landmarks in San Francisco are plainly seen in "Three Days To Live," the third picture made by the Gerson Pictures corporation for the states rights market. Among the most interesting shots are scenes around the Palace of Fine Arts, while other shots will be the old Sutro Estate and the newly completed Skyline Boulevard.

Winter Hall, veteran character actor seen in some of the screen's best features of the past, has been added to the cast of "The Turmoil," the Hobart Henley picturization of the Booth Tarkington novel which Universal is making.

Hall will play Mr. Vertrees, one of the characters in the novel who have been wealthy longer than day before yesterday, contrasted with the newly-rich Sheridans.

HAS ROUGH TWO WEEKS

In her latest "Fighting Blood" production, Louise Lorraine, who plays the leading feminine role, enacts a number of her scenes with a lion, participates in a prize fight, acts as hostess at a formal dinner party and then to further demonstrate her versatility, puts on boy's clothes and is drawn into a fistic encounter with her screen lover, in which she is badly worsted before he penetrates her disguise and learns she is not a regular "He Boy."

Miss Lorraine goes through these varied experiences in less than two weeks actual camera time.

Ben Wilson will start his next feature for Grand-Asher sometime this month and announcement of the title and cast will be made shortly, he says.

WIFE PREDOMINATES

Virginia Valli may have been "A Lady of Quality" all through her last picture, which bore that title, but she's a hard working woman of the wilds now. She is on location on the Noyo River, or somewhere near it, up north of Fort Bragg in Northern California, where under the direction of Clarence Brown—who made "The Acquittal"—she is starring in Wadsworth Camp's prize story, "The Signal Tower."

The role that Miss Valli plays is that of a railroad man's wife. Asked if "The Signal Tower" was a railroad man's story, Bernard McConville, supervising editor of Universal-Jewel productions, said emphatically: "No—it's true. The story deals with railroad men to a great extent. But there is one influence that helps a railroad man more than anything else to follow the line of duty and give the best that is in him to his arduous work, and that is the influence of his wife. 'The Signal Tower' is more a story of a railroad man's wife than of railroad men."

GHOSTS CAPER ON SET

A silent western street set—except for the whirring of generators and the clatter of switches and the shouting of men—on a pitch black night—except for the weird light from giant arcs peeping around corners.

This is the setting against which Pete Morrison's six feet-two and nearly two hundred pounds of human bulk has been doing its best of nights for the past week in rushing certain episodes of "The Ghost City," new Universal chapter play directed by Jay Marchant, in which Morrison stars with Margaret Morris, supported by Al Wilson and other players.

"No wonder they call it 'The Ghost City,'" he wailed to Marchant. "All I've seen of the sets for ages has certainly supported the title. Lights that don't belong where they are and shadowy figures rushing around as though they didn't belong but were trying to hide—"

"Aw, shut up!" said Marchant with a director's prerogative. "I'm trying to encourage the ghosts to come around and when you give that seven-ton voice of yours a workout they all run for the hills!"

PORTRAY TRUE ARISTOCRATS

Kitty Bradbury, character actress of aristocratic type known especially for her work in Charlie Chaplin's "The Pilgrim" and in "The Midnight Alarm" with Percy Marmont, has been engaged by the Universal Pictures corporation to play the important role of Mrs. Vertrees in Hobart Henley's elaborate filming of "The Turmoil."

In Booth Tarkington's novel there is a mental clash between the newly rich and the rich-born engendered by their different attitudes towards life, the first trained by sudden wealth to throw discretion to the winds and spend colossal sums and the latter trained by a lifetime of plenty to be more conservative. Mrs. Vertrees and her daughter, Mary, the heroine of the epic, represent the latter class.

Eleanor Boardman was cast as Mary Vertrees and Winter Hall has just been engaged for the role of Mr. Vertrees. These three then —Kitty Bradbury, Eleanor Boardman and Winter Hall—are the Vertrees. Readers of the book will be glad to meet them on the screen.

"Lonesome" has been chosen as the title of Lloyd Hamilton's newest comedy, just completed under the direction of Gil Pratt. Ruth Hiatt is leading woman, and the cast includes Kewpie Morgan, Mabel van Buren, Jack Lloyd, Otto Fries, Fred Lancaster and others.

Mr. Hamilton will immediately begin work on his next production, under direction of Fred Hibbard.

Through the courtesy of Warner Brothers, William Beaudine has been engaged to direct the Shakespeare comedy classic. No cast has been named thus far.

Lois Zellner, the brilliant scenarist who prepared the film version of "The Man Between," is an enthusiastic art connoisseur. She arranges at least one afternoon a week to pursue this ambition through the Hollywood art shops.

Lillian Rich will now be known as an emotional actress!

At a recent pre-view of Strongheart's newest film, "The Love Master," in which Lillian Rich plays the leading feminine role, dramatic critics and film notables praised her work highly.

This is the first big production that the beautiful leading lady has really had the opportunity of displaying her exceptional dramatic ability.

Laurence Trimble directed the film for Associated First National release.

RECOGNIZED BY COLLEGE

Sada Cowan, with whom Howard Niggin collaborates in the preparation of original scenarios, adaptations and titles, is also well known as the author of sixteen one-act playlets, which are very popular among the "little theatres" and university dramatic societies all over the country. The most recent request for production of one of Miss Cowan's playlets came from W. H. Trumbauer, director of the class in dramatic composition of play production of Grinnell College. Permission was asked to produce "In The Morgue," with the assurance that "the production would of course be part of the laboratory work done by the students and would be done adequately and fittingly."

Such recognition of screen authors by collegians should inevitably result in a better feeling for the entire personnel of the cinema world.

Upon his return from San Francisco where he is presenting Maud Fulton's latest play, "Punchenello", Robert Ober, celebrated actor, will undertake a prominent farcical role in a forthcoming Hollywood production.

Lillian Leighton, who will soon be seen in "The Call of the Canyon" and "Phantom Justice," edited her own newspaper in Wisconsin before she commenced her theatrical career.

SCORES IN EMOTIONAL ROLE

Ethel Wales, in the Hoffman production "Which Shall It Be?" recently completed at the Hollywood Studios, bids fair to achieve a niche in the "American Mother" hall of fame. As one critic who has pre-viewed this picture states, she is " . . . just ordinary farm folks, looks like farm folk, has a flock of offspring and amid her trials and tribulations looks in the film as though she might have spent her entire life on that same farm." This is the film that has startled critics through having no hero, no heroine, no villain, no plot—just a page from life."

WRITER BACK

Last week marked the return of Winifred Dun, scenario editor for Metro, after a flying trip to New York to consult with Laurette Taylor and her author-husband, J. Hartley Manners, over the script of "Happiness." This will be the second Laurette Taylor production for Metro and the assignment of Miss Dunn to prepare the continuity is a signal honor, since this picture promises to be one of the biggest features of the coming season.

During her stay in the East, Miss Dunn also conferred with Metro home office executives regarding the other pictures of the Winter season and she declares that the plans outlined call for a period of great activity at this local studio.

Creighton Hale has two interesting offers under consideration for a vaudeville tour of southern California and has at hand twelve different stories for an "act." Mr. Hale first came to the Coast as a star of the speaking stage in "Little Old New York" and "Just Suppose." Since his arrival on Christmas day he has made six pictures, each involving a long engagement.

Virginia Brown Faire, who has been loaned to the Belasco Productions for "Welcome, Stranger" in which she plays a young Jewish girl, for the first time in her screen career will portray a poor white girl. She has known poverty as an Oriental in several pictures. The finale of "Welcome, Stranger" will see her in affluence which means a variety of costumes, the search for which she has now begun. Her work before the camera commences this week.

Olive Borden, leading woman in Mermaid comedies, had her first aeroplane trip in "Air Pockets," in which Lige Conley furnishes a laugh for every revolution of the propellor. Fred Hibbard directed.

SPEED FOR BANKS TITLE

Monty Banks, who is to make five reel comedies for Grand-Asher, will have a wonderful chance to show his ability as an actor as well as a gag comedian in the picture, it is declared. Herman Raymaker, the director, regards Banks as one of the most talented men in the profession but maintains that in the two reel films, while he could keep people laughing all the time, there was not the opportunity for lights and shades that will be present in the longer film. "We've got a corking story," says Raymaker. "It's first, middle and last names are the same—speed! At that, a title hasn't been chosen. We're trying to get something that will be adequate and express the vim and dash of the story properly."

"SHREW" FOR ZEIDMAN

Having shipped the print of "The Good Bad Boy" to the Eastern offices of Principal Pictures Corporation, Bennie Zeidman announces his second pictures under his contract with this organization.

A modern version of "The Taming of the Shrew" is being written by Dorothy Farnum, who prepared the scenario of "Beau Brummel" for John Barrymore.

Full-rigged ships and ocean-going yachts play important parts in "Superstition," the Creative Productions' picture, now being titled, edited, etc., by Louis Weadock at the Hollywood Studios. W. H. Carr, general manager, chartered one of the largest yachts and one of the largest full-rigged ships on the Pacific Coast for use as locations upon which to film much of the "sea stuff" appearing in the picture.

No decision as to the releasing arrangements for "Superstition" has yet been made.

STROMBERG AT UNIVERSAL

The popularity of Universal City as a leasing studio for independent companies to find haven in continues. The newest arrival is the Hunt Stromberg unit, Stella Productions, in which Harry Carey is the star and Stuart Paton the director. Both of the latter were formerly associated with Universal.

Dorothy Chase has gone in for fancy riding as an addition to her already-long list of accomplishments. As a pupil of Willim Brown of the Griffith Park Riding Academy, who is conducting a class strictly for motion piicture work She is making excellent progress in the more difficult phases of the equestrienne art. Miss Chase recently completed interesting parts at Metro and Century.

The third picture of the Gerson Picture Corporation "Three Days To Live" has been titled and will be ready for the states rights market within the next two weeks.

This picture has all the lure of the Orient with an American setting. The theme treats of a Hindoo who works out his vengeance upon two American bankers in San Francisco.

Ora Carew is starred in this production and is supported by a very strong cast.

DUSKY QUEEN HONORED

Lobengula, who once took the warpath against the British in South Africa, had a queen who was "fat and forty" if not so fair. She was visited by Harold M. Shaw, who has just completed a series of pictures for Metro, while he was making "Die Voortrekkers," which was "The Covered Wagon" of the Boers.

Shaw was presented to the dusky queen by Colonel Colenbrander, who had served with Kitchener, and he gave her a bottle of gin. "After we had toasted her health," he says, "she asked Colenbrander: 'Why did you wait until I am an old woman before bringing your friend from across the sea?' Possibly she imagined she would have received two bottles of gin had she been younger and more attractive."

A lock of golden hair was provided by Carey Wilson, Goldwyn associate editor, for a scene for "Three Weeks." The lock was clipped not from Carey's head, but from the tangle of hair of his small daughter. "I demand screen credit," Wilson cried when the hair was photographed.

Anna Q. Nilsson is working day and night to complete her work in "The Swamp Angel," in order to start on Richard Walton Tully's picturization of "Flowing Gold," another First National picture, next week. She will merely be obliged to step from one stage onto another adjoining.

Horton is Vaudevilling

Edward Horton, who played he of the featured roles in mes Cruze' production "To the adies," has temporarily de- rted motion pictures for the age. The versatile young actor appearing in vaudeville for a w weeks.

Featured with Horton in this aramount picture are Theodore oberts, who is also touring in udeville, Helen Jerome Eddy, d Louise Dresser, another ell-known vaudevillian. Walter oods adapted the stage comedy y Marc Connolly and George Kaufman an dalso served as roduction editor of "To the adies."

Builds Town in Arizona

Building a town with practical ouses throughout only to burn at a later point in the story as the unique experience of Di- ector Irvin Willat, who is pro- ucing the Zane Grey story The Heritage of the Desert" for Paramount.

Willat carried his entire cast nd staff into the actual country escribed by the author. In the ilds of Arizona the temporary own of White Sage was con- tructed. The buildings erected ere four-walled and roofed and ould easily have been made liv- ble. The entire settlement was urned spectacularly as one of he dramatic high points of the icture.

How About Sparky?

Carmel Myers was leaving the California theatre after seeing her- self on the screen in "The Slave of Desire." Also on the bill were the horse race pictures in which Papy- rus and Zev did their stuff.

In front of Carmel were a man and woman.

Said the woman to the man: "Wasn't that a wonderful produc- tion?"

Said the man to the woman: "Yep—Papyrus and Zev put on a great race."

The woman looked at the man in fine scorn.

Carmel hastened to her car.

The spirit of the immortal violin piece and song, "Souvenir" by Drdla, has been dramatized for the screen and stage by Victor Hugo Halperin and is now being filmed at the Hollywood Studios. It has a short prologue, carrying a gra- phic portrayal of the turbulent times of the Russian revolution. The balance of the plot is laid in this country.

ONE-EYED IS CONVERTED

One-eyed Connelly, world-fam- ous gate-crasher, has gone to work at last.

For twenty years he has roamed the country centering his attention on his ambition to see all of the championship fights from a ring- side seat without paying for the privilege. Now he has settled down in Hollywood to work his way to the top of the motion picture in- dustry.

With pick and shovel he is hard at work helping build exterior set for "Torment," the melodrama Maurice Tourneur is making for First National at the United Stu- dios.

It is Connelly's boast that in his twenty years of wandering he has managed to get twenty-one meals every week—yet, no one has ever caught him working. Sport writ- ers all over the country have com- mented on his dislike for two things—work and underwear.

"I'm working now so I can keep right on living in a place where I don't have to wear anything under my shirt," commented Connelly as he rested on his pick, "I like this climate."

Will Start Turkey Day

From the wilds of Northern California mountains where he has been hunting for two weeks, Cecil Be De Mille sent word to his office that by Thanksgiving Day he would be back in the Lasky Studio, Hollywood, ready to plunge into the preliminary preparations for "Triumph" by May Edgington, his next Para- mount picture. During his ab- sence Jeanie Macpherson has been whipping her adaptation into final shape.

Present plans are to start work on "Triumph" immediately following the close of the "pro- duction vacation," at the Lasky Studio. It is more than possible that a considerable portion of the exteriors will be made in New York following or before stage work at the Hollywood plant. Leatrice Joy and Rod La Rocque, announced as featured players in the production, are engaged in assembling their wardrobes.

Art Lee, well-known make-up expert who has been convalescent for some time from a serious ill- ness, is returning to active partici- pation in motion picture activities. He will re-enter the studio world, again contributing some of the heavy portrayals which have won him wide-spread recognition.

Bebe Daniels, Ernest Tor- rence, Noah Beery and Lloyd Hughes are the featured players in this Irvin Willat production. Albert Shelby LeVino wrote the screen play and Lucien Hubbard is production editor.

Cutting Zane Grey Film

Director Victor Fleming and production editor Lucien Hub- bard have completed the cutting of Zane Grey's "The Call of the Canyon." Fleming returned a few weeks ago from the wilds of Arizona where he filmed the photoplay in which Richard Dix, Lois Wilson and Marjorie Daw have the featured roles.

JUGGLED HIS LINES

Ralph Lewis got his first stage experience when Northwestern University put on its annual class play.

He played right half on the foot- ball squad and held down the first sack on the baseball team and thought as a side line he would try the stage. His first role was that of a butler and his first line was "Here Comes the Queen, My Lord." But the gridiron warrior got stage fright on the opening night and when it came time for him t ospeak, he couldn't say a word for several seconds. Then he got his lines confused and in- stead of saying "Here comes the Queen, My Lord," Ralph blurted out "Here he is now," and then the leading lady walked in from the wings. Ralph says he can truthfully say his first stage ap- pearance was a riot.

Hart Will Vacation

William S. Hart plans to take a short vacation at his California ranch as soon as production work on "Singer Jim McKee," his current production is com- pleted. The vacation will coin- cide with the temporary produc- tion lull at Paramount's West Coast Studio.

"Singer Jim McKee is Hart's second picture since his return to the scree nand like its pre- decessor, "Wild Bill Hickok," was written by the star and adapted to the screen by J. G. Hawks. Phyllis Haver plays opposite the star in the present picture.

Since the announcement that Mack Sennett was about to re- incorporate his erstwhile famous chorus of Bathing Beauties, it is very apparent that the newspapers are being devoured from front to last page. "I'll bet," said the casting director, "since that article was printed over a week ago, I have interviewed over two hun- dred girls, including some of the most beautiful you ever saw. I'm now looking for a good assistant to help me, because there are still several hundred more girls to be seen, before we finally decide on the group we will select to repre- sent that company."

Chaney Minus Make-up

Theater-goers who see Sam Wood's production "The Next Corner" will be privileged to get their first glimpse of Lon Cha- ney as he really is minus eccen- tric make-up or physical distor- tion.

Chaney is playing one of the featured roles in this adaptation by Monte Katterjohn of Kate Jordan's novel of the same name. He plays the role of a Basque but for the first time in many years has abandoned all dis- guise. Conway Tearle and Dorothy Mackaill are the other featured players in this Para- mount picture now in the mak- ing at Paramount's West Coast Studio.

Directors Will Dance

The Seventh Annual Ball of the Motion Picture Directors Association will be held at the Biltmore Hotel on Thanksgiving Eve, November 28th, according to announcement being sent broadcast by Chairman of the Ball Committee, George L. Sar- gent. While this affair is the seventh in the notable history of the organization, it is the first costume ball ever undertaken by the M. P. D. A.

Indications point to an affair which will be strikingly beauti- ful and unique, with many in- novations and surprises. Fred Niblo will act as the official pace- maker of the evening. The en- tire galaxy of screendom, from Mary Pickford, Dough Fair- banks, Charles Chaplin, includ- ing many public officials, down the roster of familiar celebrities, will be present.

From this prominent gather- ing there has been chosen a number of stars and directors to stage a festival of gaiety and splendour. Even the orchestra will be arrayed in checkerboard costumes.

The Ball Committee, headed by Mr. Sargent, includes Fred Niblo, Joseph De Grasse, Wil- liam Beaudine, William P. S. Earle, William Seiter, Harry Franklin, Phil Rosen, Douglas Gerrard, Wally Van, William Duncan, Jack Ford and James Hogan.

The public is invited to attend the Ball.

With two companies in full sway and a third production in prepara- tion the Christie organization is as active as a hot water bottle in the Old Soldiers' Home. Neal Burns, supported by Vera Steadman and Bud Fine, has begun a comedy whose theme seems to be that a man can be popular even if he is a Second Lieutenant. Jimmie Ad- ams, supported by Duane Thomp- son, has reached the mid-way point in a production which is being di- rected by Harold Beaudine.

By FRANK MAYO

There are tricks in all trades. Tricks of the lawyer, the doctor, the merchant, the thief. And now the movies are acquiring tricks that will class players with all the others above mentioned.

Many old-time players claim that sincerity and personality will dominate any scene. And yet, a young actor who recently signed a five-year contract with a famous production company is known essentially as a "trick actor." That is, he is a past master at "stealing the picture."

Those who maintain that acting ability and screen personality alone are the beacons to success are quite enraged at the trick actors. It is their contention that too many tricks have a tendency to make a player a mere automaton jerked by tricks and mannerisms.

And so the merry war goes on.

For instance, there is a famous actress who will allow no woman in the scene to be dressed in white but herself. Another woman in white would detract the attention of the screen audience, and she simply will not allow it.

A short time ago a well-known matinee idol had a trick of having a streak of gray hair roll back with the smooth black hair from his high forehead. This was his copyright, as it were. One day an extra insisted on using the same trick. He was released.

The keenly experienced screen actor will not overact, but neither does he ever loaf while he is being photographed in a scene. No matter how much the acting affects the star he will also make it affect himself. By some mannerism or trick he will try to attract the audience-yet-to-come to see his shadow.

One of the most famous of the older actors, whose name is a household word, is never seen without his cigar, the end of which he chews impatiently or else smokes volcanically or spasmodically.

He always moves when he speaks a title, thus eliminating the possibility of being taken out of the picture and the title used instead.

It is well known on any picture lot that the inexperienced screen actor has no chance with the more adroitly experienced one. The latter will "hog the camera" every time.

For purposes of illustration: The two of them will be talking in a scene. Suddenly the experienced one will step backward casually. And, if his action passes unnoticed by the director, the completed film will register him in full view while the inexperienced actor in the foreground will show sideways and indistinctly before the camera.

In a tense moment the experienced actor w attract the attention of the audience by unfo ing a white handkerchief. A simple thing—l it focuses all eyes his way—and by a trick memory his name might be impressed on mind by so simple an action when that of star is forgotten.

The story is told of two old-time actors tryi to "steal the picture" from each other in a ta ing scene. First one would step backwa rather casually, then his fellow talker wo also step backward rather casually also. Pl ing a game that each knew well, they began the very foreground of the scene, and en up at the rear of it. It happened to be a p ture being directed by Erich von Stroheim, watched the scene with an amused smile, a then said, "Come on, tricksters, now both sti still; you are not playing golf!"

There can be no doubt that mannerisms, not tricks, can be made to register with the p ture-loving public. Call it individuality or w you will, it is that something by which the pl er is best remembered.

Of one thing I am certain. The extra pla knows more about acting than the experien actor. Years under the lights have a tende to make the latter humble. For really, there much to learn about screen acting, and a v short time in which to learn it.

his assistant director, suggested.

"Double? Say, don't be dumb. I've been waiting for two weeks to get a crack at this scene. Just duck your head and look out for splinters, that's all. Because boy, when I hit that ballyhoo stand it's going to stay hit."

Hundreds of extras playing in the scene ducked for cover when Hoot came "flying thru." No one was hurt, except the star himself who received a deep cut on one hand.

Fifteen freight cars, two locomotives and other railroad equipment are in use by the Clarence L. Brown company near Fort Bragg in Northern California, where scenes for Virginia Valli's new starring vehicle, "The Signal Tower," are being filmed, according to Pliny Horne, cameraman, who has just returned to Universal City from the location site.

Horne was with the company shooting "runaway train" scenes at Auberry, near Fresno for several days and after a couple of days at the location site near Fort Bragg "cleaned up" all of the scenes requiring him.

A portable signal tower, around which the central interest in the story is woven and in which many of the major sequences take place, was built in the studio and transported to the north country. It has been set up at a siding along the railroad tracks between Fort Bragg and Willetts.

The company, which includes, besides the director, his first and second assistants, Charles Dorian and Ernst Laemmle, a cast of six persons and a production unit—carpenters, electricians and property hands—of about twenty-five persons, stays at the Noya River tavern and goes to work each morning by a speeder. Lunch is eaten under the giant Redwoods which flank the railroad tracks.

"The Signal Tower" is Miss Valli's first big starring feature since she finished work in "A Lady of Quality."

The nurses and staff at St. Vincent's hospital gathered to enjoy a performance, in the hospital assembly hall, of "The Ramblin' Kid," Hoot Gibson's latest Universal feature play. Gibson, the star, appeared in person. The studio orchestra that played through the filming of the piece, directed by Henry Cohen, composer of "Canadian Capers" and "Are You Playing Fair?" and more lately "Just Remember," played for the picture. It was a gay party.

And two floors above, attended by a special nurse, and recovering from serious illness, lay Edward Sedgwick, the man who directed the picture, and who only recently returned to the studio, still in a wheel chair, to view the final scenes of "Courtin' Calamity," the picture he started when stricken by illness.

The story came to light with Sedgwick's return from the hospital. Ill as he was, the director, grateful for the care given him at the hospital, arranged with Gibson for the show. The entire facilities of the studio were placed at his disposal, and he was host for the evening—two floors removed. Sedgwick, stricken by toxic poisoning caused by an injured tooth, lay between life and death for six days. In the meantime Gibson himself directed the picture.

Edward Sedgwick adorned a bed in St. Vincent's hospital for two weeks and between operations hummed bits of melodies. If he was too weak to hum he thought up a new tune to hum later.

He is now working with Henry Cohen, his studio organist, in converting the bits of melodies into a hospital bedroom ballad entitled "I Wonder-When-I'm-Going-to-Get-Another-T-bone-Steak Blues."

The Universal director, whose versatility extends over a varied field of writing, acting and composing, has written and directed many of Hoot Gibson's most popular pictures and has composed many "best sellers" in the field of popular music.

Between scenes he makes up lyrics to melodies composed by Cohen. The two recently wrote "Just Remember," a foxtrot ballad now extremely popular.

During the filming of "Courtin' Calamity," Hoot's latest starring feature for Universal Sedgwick became very ill from poisoning from an infected tooth. For weeks he has had nothing to eat except milk toast, poached eggs and tea. He craves steak mightily, and loud is his mournful wail when it's time to eat and his nurse brings him his milk and eggs.

Sedgwick is now back on the set in a wheel chair, guiding the filming of the final scenes in the picture. Gibson handled the directorial megaphone during the regular director's absence.

Hoot Gibson, famous picture star, was married yesterday at Universal City to Josie Sedgwick. This marriage gives Hoot th estudio record for weddings. He has been married twenty times in the past two years; among his brides are Laura La Plante, Billie Dove, Esther Ralston, Mildred June, Louise Lorraine, Mary Philbin and others.

And strange to say, his wife doesn't object. Because of course, they are just moving picture weddings—climaxes in his various pictures which always end with a wedding. Hoot holds the record on the lot, therefore, as a celluloid bigamist!

The new picture, in which Josie Sedgwick, in elaborate wedding gown, appears as a blushing bride in the final fadeout, is "Courtin' Calamity," a lively story of adventure with a Wild West show. Miss Sedgwick, a sister of Edward Sedgwick, the director, and well known for her work as the leading lady in "Jubilo" and other feature pictures, can claim quite a few weddings on her own account—Will Rogers and others.

When the cameras grind Edward Laemmle directs pictures.

When the cameras are idle and the lights are dim Eddie Laemmle directs a vaudeville act for his troupe.

Which is to say that officially he's Edward, motion picture director, member of M.P.D.A. and all of that. Unofficially and naturally he's Eddie, "one of the boys."

Laemmle is now directing Billy Sullivan in "Girls Will Be Girls," the third round of a new series of "Leather Pushers," being made at Universal City.

Off stage, enshrouded with cigar smoke, Leo Zahler plays the organette and Jack Levine saws melody out of a violin.

A scene is shot and Eddie leaves the set while the cameras are set up at another angle. Then Eddie speaks to Kathleen Myers, pretty blonde who is the girl of girls in "Girls Will Be Girls," playing the romantic lead opposite the star.

"Have you seen my violinist do his dancing act? Come on, fellows, let's have some jazz and a little dance. Step lively, Jack."

And Levine, despite his protests that the bards of the studio stage are rough on leather, does a "fiddling-scene act" which wins the plaudits of the troupe, a smile from the pretty blonde and a handful of Havanas from Eddie. Leo does facial contortions in time to the music and produces wierd melody from the little organ. Clyde De Vinna, cameraman, looks on amiably, finally suggesting, "All ready, Mr. Laemmle." And Edward goes back to work.

Is Exposing Fortune Tellers

Stuart Mack of the Balshofer Studios, has made three two-reel episodes of "The Everyday Mystery," a serial dealing with fake spiritualist mediums and fortune tellers, and is now filming the fourth episode. There are twenty-six episodes to the serial, and Mr. Mack has put forth complete expose of the methods of how spirits are produced as well as the many sleight-of-hand tricks that are employed by these mediums in gaining the will of the public. These episodes are each two-reels long and are a complete drama but yet are connected together.

Lola Patti stars in the fourth episode now being made, this story deals with a young and susceptable high school girl of sixteen, who has heard the other girls tell of the fortune teller and the many things they were told, and she also decides to have her fortune told, and as she knows her mother will not permit such a visit, she goes alone. She is surprised that the Madame knows her name and knows the three questions that she had written on a piece of paper, which is in her hand. She is too young and unsophisticated to know that the Madame has played a trick on her, and that she holds "blanks" in her hand, and the Medium holds the questions she wrote.

Of course, it is easy for the fortune teller to tell her everything, and in the course of events the foolish young girl tries to follow the lines set for her by the unscrupulous medium, who has sent many girls to ruin.

This is the first time in the history of motion pictures that such a picture has actually been made, and Mr. Mack has worked for some time on these stories, having written them and printed them years ago, and studied them out true-to-life in order to produce them so that the full value would be brought out.

Your Question— and its Answer

QUESTION—"My brother who is here on a visit admits he was once cured of Neuritis, but he argues that Chiropractic is good only in nerve diseases. I differ with him. Is he right or wrong?"

ANSWER—He is absolutely wrong. In some communities where Chiropractic is not well represented and where the public has not been educated to the true value of the Science, the belief still exists that Spinal Adjustments are applicable only in the so-called nerve diseases. As a matter of fact all diseases except those of certain traumatic origin are nerve diseases. Were this not a fact the realm of Chiropractic usefulness would be limited. It is not limited, at least no one has yet placed a limit to its usefulness. Our experience in handling all forms and kinds of sickness has taught us that fully 90% of the various diseases of mankind can be adjusted successfully under Chiropractic methods.

THE THANKS WE OWE

Thursday is Thanksgiving Day. It is a consecrated annually-observed twenty-four hours which antedates the founding of the motion picture industry by many hundreds of years, yet an occasion when many of us might well dedicate a few hours of reflection and the offering of thanks for what we have attained since we last paused, at the same time one year ago.

The motion picture industry has much to be thankful for this year, for it has applied itself in earnest during the past few months in anticipation of that golden period of progress and prosperity that we shall enter upon with the new year, and of which we have noted indications in the fitful activity prevalent in the studios this season. True, things are rather quiet now, but as we said before, preparations are being made for to-morrow's onslaught, and we must all gird ourselves for the encounter so we may offer our entire strength to win the victory. Particularly should we be thankful that general business conditions have improved in our profession to such a great extent in the past two years; we should be thankful for the advent of new and capable eecutives and artists, each and every one of whom is bending every effort to emblazon the name of the cinema art high on the walls of the Hall of Fame; we should be thankful for the fine pictures that have been made this past year, and last, but not least, we should be thankful that the majority of films have evolved from factory-made productions to works of art and that they are winning wide-spread recognition through capable and efficient distribution and exhibition in the foremost sections of the world, and that the independent, as well as the big magnate, is enjoying his present-day success. We should also hope for more team-work in production, during this period of thanksgiving, for our combined efforts will certainly spell victory where disruption and discord within our ranks will only have a tendency to destroy our morale and break down the fabric of our past endeavors. And now, with the announcement of a big new financial institution designed to serve the motion picture industry exclusively we should give thanks that at last the film business will function within itself as a complete unit, unhampered by outside and oft-times unfriendly powers.

We of "Camera!" have particular occasion for giving thanks at this time for the rapid growth that has come to us within the past year; and we have further cause for thanksgiving because of having achieved that for which we have been struggling in the dark for so very long. This Thanksgiving will bring sunshine to us that we shall reflect to you when the time comes. On the first of the year we shall tell you what it is, and then we shall all join hands in one grand paean of thanksgiving for the attained ideal. All in all, this Thanksgiving Day should be replete with joyous gratitude in every quarter of filmland. We are, all of us, on the threshold of the Great Era.

Corinne Griffith, acting the leading feminine role in Goldwyn's Charles Brabin production, "Six Days," by Elinor Glyn, is showing at the Alhambra Theatre.

Mary Pickford's triumph "Rosita" starts its second week at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre. "Rosita" shows Mary Pickford in an emotional role, an alluring woman whose fascination attracts even the King of Spain. Bordering on the spectacular, with gigantic settings the picture does not rely alone on the various elements of a beautifully and perfectly produced photoplay. The story is the thing. The thrilling adventures of Rosita, the little street singer of Spain forms the basic of the love tale that binds together beautiful scenes. The supporting cast includes Holbrook Blinn, Irene Rich, George Walsh and Charles Belcher who were directed by Ernst Lubitsch.

This week at the Hillstreet marks the return of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Thev offer their popular sketch "The Poor Rich Man."

Another feature will be Nonette. She will offer a wide diversified program with Harold Solmon at the piano.

Charles Harrison and Slyvia Dakin with Billy Hogue in their act "The Three of Us" are also on the bill.

Bob Anderson will present his famous Polo Pony.

Cantor and Neilson will provide harmony with a number of songs.

Completing the vaudeville will be McSovereign who has a very entertaining act.

The feature photoplay will be Glenn Hunter, in "Youthful Cheaters."

A magnificent musical setting has been written for Jackie Coogan's latest picture production, "Long Live the King" which is showing at Loew's State Theatre, by Victor Schertzinger, the director of the picture.

The entire musical score as prepared by Mr. Schertzinger is being synchronized to the picture by Arthur Kay, conductor of Loew's State Concert Orchestra, who will augment his personnel to fully bring out every graphic tone description of the picture.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame," Universal's picturization of Victor Hugo's great novel, is showing twice daily at the Criterion, and from all indications it is slated for a long and successful run. Wallace Worsley, who directed the production, has had splendid co-operation in that some really remarkable settings have been provided, and his handling of the dramatics of the story has brought out all it's punch and power. Lon Chaney, cast as the hunchback, gives a performance that completely overshadows his well-remembered creations in "The Miracle Man" and "The Penalty." Patsy Ruth Miller, Ernest Torrence, Eulalie Jensen, Brandon Hurst and a score of others of considerable note make up a cast that is everything that could be asked. An atmospherric prelude entitled "The Bells of Notre Dame," lends a bit of color to the opening of the picture and proves a pleasing novelty. The Symphony Artists, with Adolf Tandler conducting, use "Mignon" as an overture, and give a special music score arranged by Tandler that is an important and colorful part of the presentation.

Whether the Baby Dolls are referring to their admirers or to themselves remains to be unraveled during the presentation of their latest musical comedy. "They Like It," at the Burbank Theatre this week. At any rate the show promises to be one of the liveliest affairs in their young lives. Lee "Bud" Harrison, George Clark, Gene Darby, Grace Hutchinson, Wm. McKee and all the rest of the cast will be much in evidence and the Baby Dolls on the illuminated runway promises optical thrills.

At the end of the seventh box of cigars, Theodore Roberts ran out.

They were making "To the Ladies," which shows this week at Grauman's Metropolitan, directed by James Cruze.

"I know how it is myself," remarked Cruze as he rolled a cigarette.

"Don't know what I would do without a cigar nowadays," Roberts mused, adding, "I am certainly in the position of Barrie's character in 'Lady Nicotine' who is referred to as 'smoking in camera.' Paraphrasing another passage in the book, I might say that 'I smoke for the sake of my audience.' Certainly audiences have come to look for my cigar as much as for me.'"

"Well," remarked Cruze as the cigars needed for the work in hand arrived, "people who see this picture will not be disappointed."

"I'll say they won't," the actor commented as he lighted up the first cigar of the eighth box consumed in the filming of the picture. "If they ever stopped making cigars, guess I would have to stop acting!"

There is more truth than fiction in Roberts' statement. His cigar has become a definite part of his screen character. The Theodore Roberts cigar is almost as famous, perhaps as Theodore Roberts. Audiences look for it and Theodore Roberts without a cigar would be almost like Hollywood without a motion picture studio.

In "To the Ladies" the veteran actor plays a piano manufacturer. Two of his employees, Edward Horton and Arthur Hoyt are after the job of manager and the influence of Horton's practical, ingenious wife, played by Helen Jerome Eddy, in getting her husband his promotion, is the theme of the picture, which is adapted from the recent Broadway stage success.

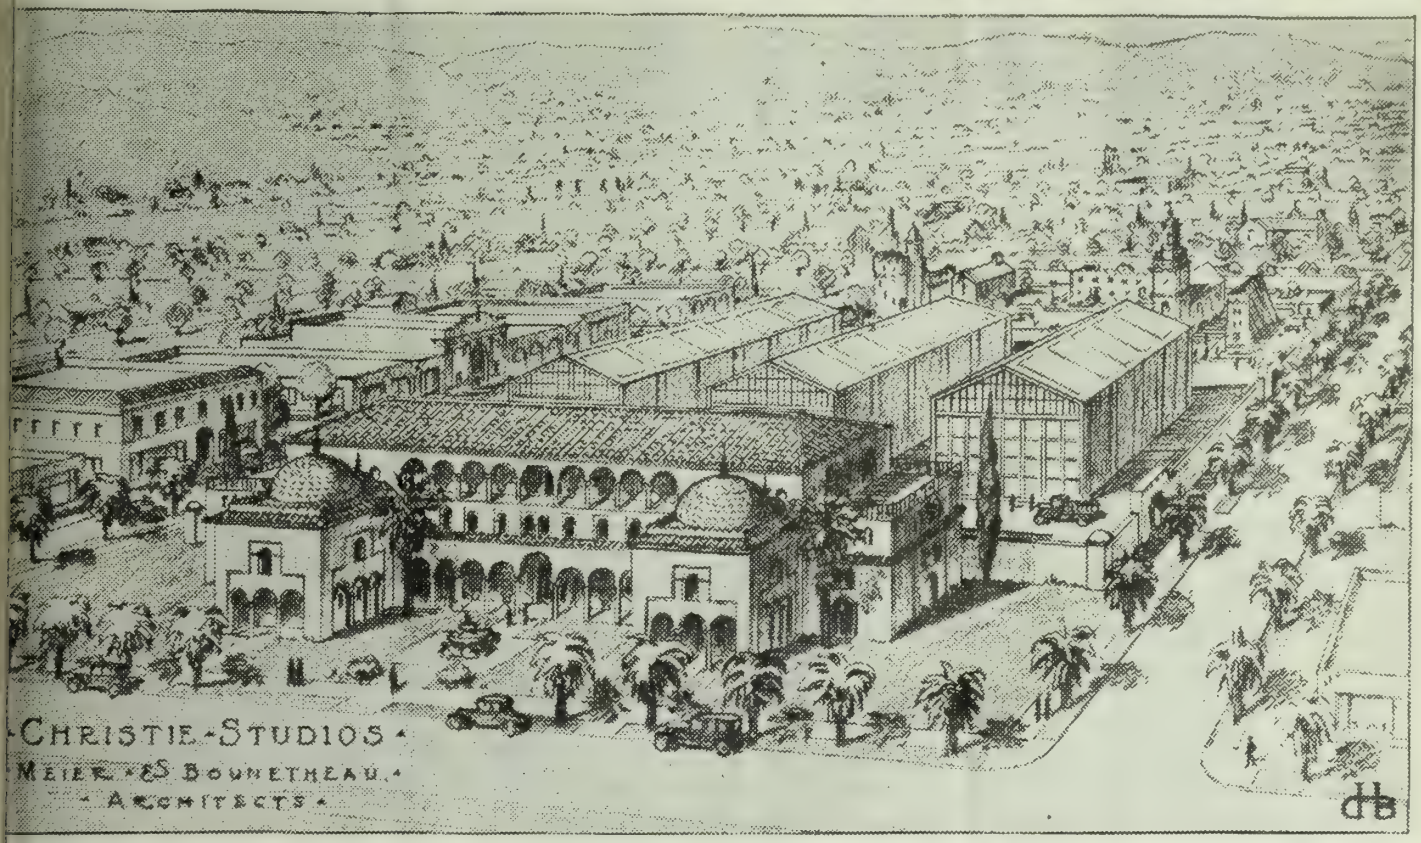
The Comic Haven Moves



With the passing, at a date in the near ture, of the historic Christie studios, an arged program of picture making is an- unced by the Christie organization, ough Charles H. Christie, general man- er, who is also at the head of the realty ierests of the firm.

"Our new studios which are to be built in Westwood section" states Mr. Christie, ill be the result of our need for more eage on which to expand in the making feature-length pictures as well as a reg- r annual program of two-reel comedies, a d which we never intend to desert.

"We have not decided whether the feature-length pictures will be straight comedies or of the comedy-drama type, but it is known that we will star one or two of our own comedians in these features. It is likely that Dorothy Devore will be the first of our comedy stars to be chosen for a feature-length picture."

"The new Christie studios, which will be built on a tract of forty acres fronting on Santa Monica boulevard just beyond the junction of Santa Monica and Wilshire boulevards, will not be the largest nor the most expensive in the world, but will be built with the best facilities for comedy work. We delayed the addition of another covered stage at our present studio, pending plans for this new one, although we needed the additional stage room some time ago," said Al Christie, who is in charge of all productions.

"Our present product now scheduled for the current year of distribution is twenty two-reel comedies, with five each for the four stars including Bobby Vernon, Jimmie Adams, Dorothy Devore and Neal Burns.

"In the meantime, while our production plans are taking shape, we are subdividing 180 acres of the 230-acre tract which we have acquired in the heart of Westwood."

PUBLIC OPINION

Editor's Note.—Mr. J. D. Cahill of 2101 West nroe Street, Chicago, an ardent reader of amera!" has just sent me a copy of the edi- ial page of The Chicago Tribune dated No- mber 7th wherein that worthy newspaper has blished, in their department entitled "Voice the People," similar to our own "Public Opin- ," a letter from Mr. Cahill entitled "De- ndardize the Movies." Because of its intrin- worth it is reproduced herewith:

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—Just as a sporting position I would suggest that Famous ayers-Lasky, and in fact several others of e larger producing companies, take a ten nths layoff instead of ten weeks. During e last two years the movies seem to have ne to seed. There has been a deadly meness in the feature pictures; the ever esent forest fires and other mechanical rills, the last minute rescues of helpless iidens from fearful visaged villains, and, in the "big" pictures, the continual dragging in of the French revolution. The movies are becoming as standardized as hairpins.

It would be fine if the independent producers were allowed to furnish the screen entertainment for a time at least. The most entertaining pictures ever produced were from the studios of Griffith, Sennett, and Chaplin. "The Birth of a Nation," "Mickey," and "The Kid" are the real classics of the screen and they were made in studios where the expert accountant does not hold forth. If nepotism and other forms of favoritism are eliminated from the Hollywood studios there will be no need for any reduction in the salaries of real actors and actresses. The movie going public does not care a rap about Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky, and the other moguls of the industry. It is the stars who count.

JAY DEE CEE.

One of our number has passed from our midst. He has gone, leaving behind him a record of splendid achievements in the profession and a beloved memory that we shall cherish for all time to come. These things that he has bequeathed to us speak more eloquently of him than any mere words of ours might. He has answered the call of the Great Director on whose Set we must all appear sooner or later, and he has been taken from us in the prime of his manhood, standing upon the threshold of great success. With a sense of duty that was rare and tenacity that was amazing he sacrificed all to complete his task. To Allan Holubar, gentleman and motion picture director, "Camera!" pays full tribute. He was an asset to his profession and one who commanded respect from his fellowmen. To the bereaved family we extend our sincerest and most heartfelt sympathy and express our desire to be of any possible assistance now and in time to come.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco, Calif.,
November 22nd, 1923.

The Gerson Pictures Corporation have not only produced four pictures up to date, of their present series, but have developed a charming romance in the company, which will have its culmination on Thanksgiving Day in the marriage of Helen Howell, attractive second-woman of the organization and Frank Capra, assistant director. In spite of the offer of the company to give the happy couple a big studio wedding, the great event will take place at the bride's home, and the presence of only her near relatives, but all the members of the cast and staff are taking a great interest, and showering the bride and groom with gifts and best wishes.

Milton Gardner, vice-president of Goldwyn, and Victor Seastrom, director, returned to the South on Monday evening after a couple of days here. Ray Moore, head director of location for Goldwyn, stayed on thru the week completing the work of looking up locations in and near San Francisco for the picture to be put into work by the organization. It will be a screen version of a novel "The Captain of His Soul," a story largely of this city, to be directed by Victor Seastrom. Production will begin at an early date, and about a week of location work will be done here.

The Belasco productions of San Francisco and Los Angeles will begin work about December first at The United Studios on their big screen version of Aaron Hoffman's stage success "Welcome, Strangers." James Young will direct, and several well-known people have already been signed for the all star cast including Dore Davidson of "Humoresque" fame, playing the lead, Noah Beery, Florence Vidor, Robert Edeson, Virginia Brown Faire, Willard Mack and Fred Butler; with several other very prominent players under consideration, whose names will be announced a little later.

Louis B. Mayer, the producer of "Pleasure Mad," the screen version of the Blanch Upright story "The Valley of Content." arrived with his company of stars in San Francisco on Saturday morning, where they were welcomed at the station by the chief of police, a reception committee, and a band, and escorted to the city hall where they were received by Mayor Rolfe. They came to town to be present at the world's premier of "Pleasure Mad" at the Warfield Theatre, and on Saturday and Sunday, Mayer, the authoress, Blanch Upright, and the players Norma Shearer, Huntly Gordon, Mary Alden and William Collier, Jr., appeared in person in connection with the showing of the film, which met with a very cordial reception.

"Irish," the brindle bull-dog who won screen laurels in "Half-A-Dollar Bill" recently filmed by the Graf Productions, became the proud mother last week of four pups, but sad to say three of them only lived a few days. So now "Irish" is spending all her devotion on one small puppy.

Seymore Zeliff, who will direct the pictures to be made by the Intriped Company on their voyage round the world, and his wife have arrived in San Francisco. They expect to remain here till the refitting of the company's fine big three-masted schooner is completed, and the expedition is ready to set sail on January fifteenth, on their voyage of more than a year.

Tom Gibson, and the company making a series of five reel action melodramas under his direction for the Gerson Pictures Corporation, returned last Wednesday from a week of location work in the mountains of La Honda. They reported successful work, and comfortable camping conditions altho they were an hour's drive from the nearest telephone. Thirty-five members of the cast and staff comprised the party. The present picture is a story of the secret service, being shot under the working title of "Getting Her Man." Ora Carew is the featured player, supported by Jay Morley, Hal Stephens, Helen Howell, Eddie O'Brien, Ted Oliver and others.

Ruth Renick, pretty film star, who has just finished work in Jackie Coogan's latest picture "Long Live The King," and Mrs. Frances Deaner, publicity woman, have been among the guests at the Plaza Hotel the past week. They are not in San Francisco on business but only to enjoy a little holiday in the fresher air of our c by the Golden Gate.

"Scaramouche," Rex Ingram's masterpi opened at the Capitol Theatre on Sun night, where it came as the second of season of super-feature films, following six-weeks' run of "The Hunchback of No Dame," which closed on Saturday. Sca mouche" is being presented with an el orate prologue, and was welcomed at opening by a packed and most enthusias audience. The big film is a worthy exam of Rex Ingram's great art, and its drama story, fine acting, masterly direction, a costly and elaborate production unite make a picture that cannot fail to ple even the most exacting audience. T "Scaramouche" opening at the Capitol also the Western premier of the hi cinema drama, and its run here bids f to be a long one.

Barbara La Marr, famous screen beau was a guest at the St. Francis for seve days last week.

Attended by very little publicity Marjo Rambeau McGoughy, famous stage favori was granted a divorce from Hugh Dilm McGoughy, her second husband, by Super Judge Graham in this city last week. M Rambeau married Hugh Dilman McGaug in 1919 some little time after her divo from Willard Mack, and has been separ from him since 1922. Mr. McGoughy w represented by counsel, but did not c test the case. The grounds were deserti

RECESSIONAL

God of our fathers, known of old
Lord of our far-flung battle line—
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

The tumult and the shouting dies—
The Captains and the Kings depart—
Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

Far-called our navies melt away—
On dune and headlands sinks the fire—
Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!
Judge of the Nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

If, drunk with sight of power, we loose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe
Such boasting as the Gentiles use,
Or lesser breeds without the Law—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

For heathen heart that puts her trust
In reeking tube and iron shard—
All valiant dust that builds on dust,
And guarding calls not Thee to guard.
For frantic boast and foolish word,
Thy Mercy on Thy People, Lord!

Palmborg's Paragraphs

(Being one of a series of impressions of film folk and cinemaland anecdotes as written by a motion picture insurance man. By C. F. Palmborg, special analyst and Hollywood representative of the New York Life Insurance Company).

The late Wally Reid was one of the most lovable and popular screen actors. His natural charm and personal appeal, made him one of the greatest artists of his kind. His popularity was universal for he appealed to the young and old. The youngster adorned him, the school boy and girl idolized him and the older folks admired him. He was the typical American youth.

I found him equally as charming off the screen, just a great, big, grown-up, wholesome boy. Before meeting him, I had the impression that he was a happy-go-lucky chap, who would be difficult to bring into a serious interview. For my business is serious as it deals with the stark realities of life and it requires unselfish, serious thought.

Perhaps the two vivid impressions I have of him, which stand out above all others in my mind, give a deeper insight into his character, han anything I might say.

He and his company directed by James Cruz and Cullen Tate were taking scenes from "Charm School" using Pomona College as the setting. Lila Lee and about forty other young girls were walking about the campus and going in and out of the dormitory and class halls. Wally, with his cap on "hind side fore," driving a sporty grey roadster, dashed madly up the drive-way and came to an abrupt stop in front of the girl's dormitory. Soon he was surrounded by girls and more girls and bowing, smiling, laughing and chatting with them a stranger would swear that he was a young college lad of great popularity, without a care in the world.

Then I saw him comfortably installed in a big chair, in his old home on Morgan Place. He had been reading a book which he held in his hand. His small son Billie was romping on the floor with his collie. In the next room his charming wife was moving about attending to household duties. Wally leaned forward interestedly as he asked for details about the insurance. He called for his wife and together they figured out th eamount it would be necessary for his family to have. He wanted to be assured that the contract was binding—he wanted to be sure that he was getting the best. He was very serious as he went over the contract and I will never forget this remark of his as he stood up and put his hand on my shoulder, "While I am here I know they will be taken care of, but who knows what might happen if I were not here. Knowing that I have this estate ready and waiting if it is ever needed is going to be a great comfort and relief to me, Palmborg, and anyway I need to be made to save a little bit, for after all I intend this will be a nest egg which my wife and I will enjoy later in life."

I took his application then at which time he was in perfect health. The doctors report showed that he passed on A No. 1 medical examination. Two years later, to the day, I was about the sad business of getting proofs of death. His wife told me that during his illness his insurance policy was a great comfort to him and he mentioned it many times. His one regret was that he had not taken a larger one.

He has gone, but he left us many pleasant memories. The public remember him as a dashing, daring, smiling, care-free boy, but his family, his friend and I know that he was a devoted, thoughtful unselfish husband and father. Although he is not here, he has left his wife and Billie proof of that devotion.

THANKFULNESS
By Eric Mayne

A nation that sets apart a day for United Thanksgiving establishes its appreciation of the blessings of life.

To the man who grasps the fullness of life, every day is a day of thanksgiving.

We should not become so accustomed to receiving benefits that we forget to acknowledge them.

Our vision of life is, at the best, imperfect, and sometimes our disappointments call for deep thankfulness.

One of the greatest expressions of thankfulness is to bring happiness to the lives of others.

A thankful heart is the dwelling place of the Almighty.

Gratitude for little will increase our cause for gratefulness.

In remembering the blessings we have, we shall forget to pine for those we have not.

The reward for a good deed done is the gratitude that we were able to do it.

A proud man is seldom grateful because he never thinks he gets as much as he deserves.

There is great music in the songs of Thanksgiving.

We have two great causes for thankfulness—that which we have, and that which has been withheld.

Culver City is to become the racing mecca of the Southwest. And the clubhouse of the Southern California Jockey Club is to be the social and atletic rendezvous of the Southland.

These are the aims of Dick Ferris and other associated with him in building the "betless" race track just back of Goldwyn Studio, where a site of 140 acres will be devoted to the racing activities planned by the club, which will open its first 100-day meeting next month.

Because if the interest manifested in it by the society, motion picture and sporting folks of Los Angeles, the Culver City track seems destined to fulfill all dreams that have been woven about its promotion. Owners of noted racing stables have pledged their support toward its success and some of the famous horses of the country are to contest for speed king titles on its one mile course.

Construction men of all kinds, with scores of mule teams and tractors, are now at work on the tracksite, rushing the building to completion. The grading of the race course and erection of part of the stables have been given precedence in order that early comers may be able to house and work out their horses. The grandstand, seating 10,000; the clubhouse, the fencing and the steeplechase course will be completed in time for the opening, which will be around Christmas Day.

The Culver City track will be the effective bid of Los Angeles, California and the Southern California Jockey Club for a place in the sun, as its completion, in connection with the new Tanforan track near San Francisco, will enable Eastern horsemen to ship their strings to the West for the Winter instead of keeping them in idleness or sending them to less favorable climes.

In consequence, the Culver City track is expected to become to the Southwest what Brighton Beach is to New York, Pimlico to Maryland and Churchill Downs to Kentucky. The membership of the jockey club has been limited to one thousand and the membership has been selling like hot-cakes, some of the Southland's most prominent society, motion picture and sporting folk having already enrolled.

With the exception of Tanforan, the Culver City track will be the first elaborate one built in the United States since the automobile came into vogue. On this account, it will be one of the finest in the country, with ample parking space provided for the thousands of machines, which will have convenient means of ingness and egress.

Fast electric train service will carry the Los Angeles visitor to the track in eighteen minutes, while automobiles may travel there in about the same time over five smoothly paved roads. T. P. Jacobs, of San Francisco, is in charge of the construction wo and he has promised Dick Ferris that t track shall be the fastest in the wor It is to have a seven per cent pitch and t course proper will be built with chu that will permit seven furlong races w only one turn.

The infield will furnish the steeplecha course, which will be made an extreme stiff one, with water jumps and hazar A polo field and tennis courts also will laid out and these are expected to beco the rendezvous of crack polo teams a champion tennis players.

When completed, the Culver City stabl will house 1,000 horses. There also w be adequate buildings to house their tra ers and care-takers. The large clubhou is to stand to the right of the grandsta so that its porch will afford an excelle view of the starts and finishes. The cl house will have large and small dini rooms, also a dance floor. Its culsine w be the best possible and the jockey cl expects it to become the rallying point the elite of society circles, the movie wor and the sporting fraternity.

GREAT M. P. D. A. FUNCTION!

NATIONAL CITY INTERESTS WILL AID PRODUCERS

Propose Big Film Bank

According to authentic reports emanating from New York, plans are afoot to organize a national bank of the motion picture industry which will be capitalized at about $9,000,000. It would be designed to serve the film interests of the country exclusively, with facilities to take care of every financial phase of motion picture production, distribution, and possibly, exhibition.

It is understood the project has received the hearty endorsement of leading film men and that it will receive co-operation from practically every big organization in the field. If such an undertaking should ever materialize it will be one of the biggest and finest forward steps the cinema world has ever known, for it will mean the unfettering of the studios from the hands held by Wall Street powers, and the subsequent artistic progress of motion pictures everywhere.

Reliable reports have it that one of the big figures in the promotion is the National City banking interests of New York. A complete report will be submitted to the parties interested within the fortnight, and a rapid decision should be forthcoming immediately thereafter.

NAGEL TO NEW YORK

Conrad Nagel has been loaned by the Goldwyn studios to Distinctive for one picture, to be made in New York, according to announcement from Abraham Lehr, Goldwyn vice president in charge of production.

Nagel, who is just finishing the role of "Paul" in Goldwyn's production of "Three Weeks" will leave this week for New York with Mrs. Nagel.

The picture in which Nagel will appear is to be directed by Albert Parker for the Distinctive company, and will be released by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan.

John McKenna, who used to look after Will Rogers' interests around the theatre while Rogers was with the Ziegfeld Follies, has joined the Hal Roach Forces.

LIKEN FILM MAN TO GIANTS OF INDUSTRY

What would Charles Schwab or Henry Ford do if either should take full charge of the motion picture industry? This is an interesting question which may be answered at last, according to friends of W. F. Wood, vice president and general manager of the United Producers and Distributors, the newest million-dollar film concern, and, who, they claim, shows all the traits of a great business genius from whom it is safe to expect a leadership such as inevitably would extricate this big industry from its present economic entanglements. Mr. Wood, it is said, has taken charge of the affairs of his company in a manner suggesting dynamic energy insuccessfully consuming a vertiable revolution.

"There will be no waste and we shall know to a penny precisely what a motion picture will cost and what it bring back in money before we will permit a single camera to be started," was one of Mr. Wood's first statements. "If others wish to engage in this field as if they were playing at a game they may do so, but we are going to conduct every department of our organization on the basis of strict sound business as it has been proven sound in other big successful industries. There will not be anything less in our business policies."

Speculation has long been rife as to the possibility of the film industry ever developing an outstanding captain who would be worthy of comparison to a Carnegie and many have been of the opinion that until such a leader did come forth, there would be no cessation in certain unwholesome trends which have infested the making and distributing of photoplays from the inception.

"It will take a man with a lot of courage and with a lot of money to back up his courage to ever revolutionize this strangely populated realm," recently declared a prominent magazine editor.

The members of the Board of Directors of the United Producers and Distributors issued a statement upon elevating Mr. Wood to the position of executive control of this firm to the effect that he had been selected in the belief that he is the man with the requisite courage as well as the business sagacity, and, in order to make his qualities of leadership potential, he has been backed by almost unlimited financial resources.

The United Producers and Distributors will start real activities on December 1st, when the organization will move into their own building erected especially for it, and, simultaneously it is expected that most of the ten producing units it will control in Hollywood will get under way then, making pictures of the sort for which there is a definite demand from the public, a demand which has been ascertained accurately through a unique system wherein distinct managers throughout the country have co-operated with thousands of exhibitors in securing the opinions of countless picture-theatre patrons. The minimum income from each production will be fixed with precision before the filming process will be started and the actual cost will be set likewise. All the money necessary for all activities is available beforehand and henceforth the producer will be relieved of the worry as to how he is going to pay his bills and can therefore concentrate his attention on improving the cinema art as an art.

"We are making this business purely a commercial one so far as its business department is concerned and we proceed upon the strength of no theories, only business facts and figures counting with us," Mr. Wood adds. "Thus we will make it possible for the actual creators of screen entertainment to devote themselves exclusively to developing the art visualizing more and more to the liking of the very general public."

Under the terms of a general order, Mr. Wood issues to each producing unit the interests of the smallest exhibitor are conserved to the minutest detail and through this exceeding care in expenditure, it is considered certain that motion pictures of a higher quality than ever can be made on a basis whereby any and all exhibitors can earn an increased profit even at reduced admission prices.

It will probably be a concensus of opinion that if Mr. Wood can succeed in giving the public better pictures for less money, and still maintain his whole organization on a dividend-paying basis, he will prove himself a business genius of the type of Schwab or a Ford. At any rate, his career will be watched with keen interest by the public as well as by the individual exhibitors throughout the nation.

Will Dance As Slated

Latest reports indicate that the Seventh Annual Ball and Masquerade slated to be held at the Biltmore Hotel on Thanksgiving Eve, November 28th, will be presented as originally announced.

For the past few days there has been some uncertainty as to whether or not the M. P. D. A. function would be given, as there was some confusion relative to the permit to be procured from the city for the dance festival, and a statement was issued from city headquarters to the effect the affair would not be held. Evidently things have been amicably settled.

Fred Niblo, who will act as the pacemaker of the evening, will stage "Captain Applejack."

Exchange Head is Here

George A. Skinner, vice-president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., arrived Monday from his home and headquarters in New York for several weeks stay in Los Angeles.

Mr. Skinner will survey the studio situation in general, with particular attention to conditions pertaining to one and two-reel subjects, which are the specialty of his organization.

This is Mr. Skinner's first trip to the Coast since the Jack White and Lloyd Hamilton corporations have acquired exclusive rights to the Fine Arts studio, and he will spend some time there conferring with executives of the two companies, and observing progress in the making, for release through Educational exchanges, of the Hamilton, Mermaid and Juvenile series of two-reel comedies.

FINISHING "FIGHTING BLOOD"

George O'Hara will shortly have another diploma in his hands. He could call it his master's degree, for in the thrilling "Fighting Blood" series in which he has been starring for a year and a half, he has had to make it "snappy" and be master of difficult and tricky situations in his work before the camera.

Now the hero and idol of countless fans all over the country, when the star was signed for the vehicles by H. C. Witwer, which are causing a furore wherever they are shown, Mr. O'Hara was comparatively speaking, unknown. But he had a valuable diploma with a most significant name on it—Mack Sennett—at whose famous school that makes actors ready for anything, he had spent three years filling every department before he entered the acting game. Before he left Mack Sennett's he had to his credit a varied assortment of characterizations which he had played juvenile leads in countless one-reelers and in the big features.

To concentrate on a role day after day that ran into weeks and months, has been a feat in itself and while O'Hara, since he began making these pictures, has gained fifteen pounds, he admits it has been a strenuous contract. He has fought twenty-three two-round fights that consumed two days of photography per fight, donned 250 "changes" in ward robe, and in motoring to locations for the two series of pictures had showed a gasolene record that would have given him in equivalent terms two trips to New York and back.

There have been long days and some night shots that have gone into the screening of "Fighting Blood" and yet the company was like a big family and mingled with the hard work has been a lot of good times. There will come a pang at separation which is nearly due for Mr. O'Hara is now on his twelfth vehicle, a few days more to see the completion of these popular pictures in which the star has made a big name.

PARALLELS FAMED STAR'S CAREER

Jackie Vernon, former eastern juvenile, hails from the same town as the late Olive Thomas. It is located about forty miles from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Jackie, like Olive, started his professional career in the east before coming west, only he started in Chicago while she began in New York. Vernon claims that Miss Thomas' success gave him the inspiration to tackle screen work, and he hopes to achieve the same high place in filmdom which she won. It is certainly evident that he has started on the right road, and he should soon be clambering up the ladder at high speed.

McDOWELL UNDERTAKER AGAIN

Nelson McDowell has been cast for the part of the undertaker in "The Sheriff of Tombstone," an H. H. Brown production, direction of Al Rogell.

McDowell played the undertaker in "Oliver Twist" the "Town Scandal" and a number of other productions.

It is rumored that he is to play the featured undertaker role in at least two bi gproductions next year.

Gregg Toland, the well-known cameraman, has returned from a trip to San Francisco where he was filming exteriors of the Bay City and Golden Gate.

Likens Radio to Camer

"It's just like a first appeara before the camera after a long on the stage."

That is Carmel Myers' comm on her reaction to her first " pearance" on a radio progr She sang three songs at broadc ing station the other night.

"The absence of an audie makes one feel strange and necessary," she said. "You k that you can be heard, but can't be heard. And you don't anyone.

"Acting before the camera, know that you can be seen can't be heard. Any you don't anyone.

"I did a lot of useless little steps as I sang my jazz songs the radio and put all the expres into my movements and my co tenance that I could. Just as actress who has long been on stage speaks her lines out l when she first appears before camera."

Renowned as Dying Act

Spottiswoode Aitken was most "dying actor" in films w he first started with D. W. Gri at the old Biograph Studios. Ai did a death scene in the first Griffith pictures in which he peared. It got to be quite a at the Griffith Studios for the o players to approach Aitken say "At what time do you die d Spotty?"

Aitken did his first death s in Griffith's "The Battle," an now cast as a sea captain in Stromberg's production "The Patrol," where he dies on the of a vessel with his boots on.

Aitken also passed out as captain in Fred C. Kusse's pro tion of "Superstition."

Gilbert in Hatton Sto

John Gilbert has started on a new picture at the Will Fox Hollywood lot in "Just Broadway," an adaptation Frederic and Fanny Hatton their well known stage play of name. Marian Nixon, who finished work as Charles "B Jones' leading lady, in "Cu Fireman," will play opposite Gilbert. Pierre Gendron, rec arrived from New York wher played in the forthcoming Wil Fox release, "Does It Pay?" been cast for a prominent role Trilby Clark, Ben Hendricks, and others in support of the Edmund Mortimer, director John Gilbert in his last pic "The Wolf Man," will wield megaphone for "Just Off Br way."

No Shutdown for Bug Studio

The big studios of Hollywood may close down to let production catch up with demand, but the bug studios will keep going without interruption. So says Louis Tolhurst, scientist and microscopist, who is making the "Secrets of Life" series for Principal Pictures Corporation.

Wintry days, that stop so much employment throughout the world, go and come in Hollywood and its environs, without in the least affecting theactivities of those tiny folk that are the objects of Tolhurst's scientific study.

The ant's brothers and sisters of the screen who call themselves human (even if sometimes they don't behave that way) may find themselves consigned by Messrs. Lasky, Fox, et al., to a period of hibernation and rest, but the Ant, even during the winter, is no sluggard in Southern California; neither is the Butterfly, the Spider, or the humble, humorous Doodle bug, which last performer is the latest to seek and find fame on the screen in Tolhurst's unique cast of motion picture stars.

Educational Films has contracted for the release of this "Secrets of Life" series, which when completed will consist of twelve subjects.

Earl Metcalfe has completed his role in "The Heritage of the Desert" which Irvin Willat directed for Lasky.

MAKE-UP EXPERT WITH FLYNN

Interpreting one of the most difficult roles in his long screen career, Lucien Littlefield has commenced work for Director Emmett Flynn, in "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model," at the Goldwyn studios.

Though the part of "Mosley" in the old Owen Davis melodrama lasts on the screen less than five minutes, it is extremely difficult. The actor will be called upon to express every human emotion from extreme sorrow to joy. He will wear three "make-ups."

DISPUTE SENNETT CLAIM

Mack Sennett, that discoverer of pulchritude and talent, claims he has found a second Charlie Chaplin. In view of the cold reception accorded second Mary Pickfords, second Jackie Coogan, et al, we wonder at his temerity in making such an announcement.

Harry London, former vaudeville comedian, in Sennett's so-called "find." Langdon is under contract with Principle Pictures Corporation for a series of comedies, the third of which having been finished, the comedian was loaned to Sennett by Sol Lesser while the latter went to Europe.

So impressed was Sennett with Langdon's screen personality and new brand of comedy antics, that he comes forth with the interesting announcement that Langdon can capably fill the gap left by the world's greatest comedian when Chaplin went in for drama.

After two pictures for Sennett, Langdon will return to the studio of Principal Pictures Corporation to begin work on a five reel feature comedy based on the musical comedy success, "Listen Lester."

Landis in Virile Role

Cullen Landis will gratify his fans who never want him to grow up, in his starring vehicle "The Ridin' Kid From Powder River" where the cow puncher he will portray is young enough to be in the juvenile class. Mr. Landis is now making arrangements for this first starring appearance and has engaged Robert Ensminger to direct the pictures.

Al St. John has purchased himself a new box of makeup and started grinding on his new comedy at the William Fox Hollywood lot, "Happy Days." Jean Arthur, who supports John Gilbert in the William Fox special, "Cameo Kirby," has the lead opposite the star. Others in the cast include Johnny Sinclair and Bill Freeman.

Maurice Hochberg, after a vacation of a month, has returned to his old post as film-cutter in Jack White's comedy organization.

Pauline Garon In New York

Pauline Garon, diminutive screen actress, who has attained renown as "filmdom's flapper," scoring personal triumphs with Richard Barthelmess in "Sonny," in Cecil B. De Mille's "Adam's Rib," in Frank Borzage's "Children of Divorce," and numerous other film successes, is now in New York City on a short vacation. She is taking in all of the shows along the east-side rialto and is also visiting the scenes of her first endeavors in the world of drama. She may make a picture there, having been made several offers, but as yet she has come to no decision. In any event she will soon return to Hollywood, where her family is at the present time. Prior to her departure for the east Pauline completed one of the principal roles in Hobart Henley's "The Turmoil" which was made at Universal City.

Claims Veteran Honors

History surely does repeat itself, says George D. Baker, whose screen productions have made him a familiar figure throughout the dramatic world. And he cites as an instance the fact that he is making his one hundredth and one picture and that it is "Revelation," which he first made eight years ago.

When the world-famed Alla Nazimova enacted the leading role, which is being played in his new photodrama by Viola Dana. Pausing in the midst of his new production of "Revelation," Baker went back through the years and came to the conclusion that he was legitimately entitled to the honor of being a veteran in the motion picture industry, now the fourth largest in the United States.

MISTAKE LOUISE FOR REDSKIN

Louise Fazenda writes from Yuma, Arizona, where she is playing a featured role in the Ince production "The Galloping Fish" that the "no visitors" rule isn't operating. Probably the first to stand in line when the picture is shown is the Southwest will be the natives of a Mexican village, twenty-eight miles from the location, who have forsaken the attractions of bars and gambling to watch the picture being made. Twice during the week the entire town looked on and again when the company worked nights and Sunday.

Other visitors are the native Indians. Picture making seems interesting to them, but some of the processes are vague to the comedy queen who says:

"The funniest thing happened the other evening. We girls went into the cafe to eat before we took our make-ups off. Of course our faces are colorful, to say the least, with our vivid lips and the colors above our eyes. I'm using green and the other girls, blue and as we came out the door a huge Indian buck was passing in his bare feet and blanket. On sight of us he stopped dead still and stared, his eyes popping. It occurred to me that heprobably thought we had war paint on and was ready to swing his tomyhawk!"

Often the hero has laid his fortune at Carmel Myers' feet—on the screen.

But for the first time she had that flattering compliment paid to her in real life last week. Opening a much-stamped envelope with a Berlin postmark on it, she found seven and a half million marks—the entire fortune of Carl Heinemann., "Once this represented nearly two millions of dollars of your American money," a note in careful English told her. "Then I was wealthy. I had servants, land, a castle, automobiles, a luxurious living. Today it is worth perhaps twenty-five cents, barely enough to repay you the expense of sending me a photograph of your beautiful and much admired self."

But between the date of mailing the note and the date of its receipt the mark had depreciated. The seven and a half millions is today worth, if anything, something less than one-twelfth of a cent, according to J. M. White of the foreign exchange department of E. H. Schick & Co., brokers.

Has Become Real Fighter

Louise Lorraine, the dark eyed young leading woman in the "Fighting Blood" prize fight stories is a great advocate of boxing for women as a means of athletic development.

When Miss Lorraine was engaged as leading woman in the "Fighting Blood" stories a trifle more than a year ago, she had probably never seen two boxing matches in her life. But after playing the leading feminine role in the "Fighting Blood" stories in which she had to apear in the press row at the prize fight arena numerous times and also at the fighter's training quarters, Miss Lorraine began to take a great interestin the manly art and started putting on the gloves with George O'Hara, Leach Cross, Joe Rivers and other boxers who enjoyed teaching her the rudiments of the game.

Miss Lorraine proved an apt pupil and it was not long before she said she noticed a great improvement in her physical condition. "It's great!" she said, after finishing a three-round "go" with Leach Cross, "I enjoy my work before the camera ever so much better since I took up boxing," she continued, "and I do not tire nearly so easily."

Francis McDonald, who attained fame through his characterization of Gecko in "Trilby," is now enacting the heavy in Monty Banks' first five-reel comedy-drama. Upon finishing this engagement McDonald will play the heavy in Tom Buckingham's "Arizona Express," a special for Fox.

Finish Desert Picture

With the completion of the interior of the desert tent scenes, George Archainbaud has completed actual shooting for his first William Fox special, "The Shadow of the East," at the William Fox West Coast Studios, Hollywood. Frank Mayo, Mildred Harris, and Norman Kerry divided honors in these last few scenes. Other prominent players in the cast include Evelyn Brent, Bertram Grassby, Edythe Chapman, and Lorimer Johnstone.

TALMAN COMPLETES HART ROLE

Lloyd Talman has just finished a part in William S. Hart's latest picture "Singer Jim McKee." Llyod is studying for an operatic career and while on location at Sonora the high altitude proved such a splendid tonic for his vocal cords that his quite frequent outbursts of tone won him the nickname of "Caruso." We are looking forward, with great expectation in local playhouses, as a singer. One of his most notable screen portrayals was an Allan-a-Dale with Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood."

WARRENTON WILL FILM TULLY'S

Gilgert Warrenton who will, together with LeRoy Carpenter, do the camera work on "Flowing Gold," Richard Walton Tully's next offering for First National, "shot" a great deal of "Enemies of Women" and "Little Old New York," for Cosmopolitan.

Enthusiasm For Graf

Max Graf, supervising director of Graf Productions, left San Francisco a short time ago to attend to business for his company in the East.

He stopped off at several exchange centers en route, and reports that Graf Productions now being distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation are selling exceptionally well and that they are being met with enthusiasm whereever they are shown.

At these points Graf gave a private screening of the latest Graf production "Half-a-Dollar Bill," and, according to his statements, the exhibitors and exchange men consider it the finest contribution this company has yet offered to the screen.

While in New York, Graf expects to consummate plans for expansion that his company has had under way for some time and to make his final arrangements for the filming of "The Unheavenly Twins" in which the Duncan Sisters will be co-starred. He is expected to return to San Francisco before the holidays in order to start filming the next picture early in January. In the meantime, the production reins in San Francisco have been taken up by Louis Graf, executive head of Graf Productions who is now looking after the preliminary work for the next Graf picture.

PRAISES WRITER

Lois Zellner, well known screen writer, has been engaged to edit and title "Then You'll Remember Me," the Lawson Howard production which Miss Zellner also adapted from the Robert Walker story. When he announced the engagement of Miss Zellner, Mr. Howard stated that he considered the scenarist to be the logical editor of any picture.

Arabs Started Gum Fad

At last the origin of chewing gum has been discovered.

In George Archainbaud's production, "The Shadow of the East," now being made at the William Fox Hollywood lot, with a cast including Frank Mayo, Mildred Harris, Norman Kerry, Evelyn Brent, Bertram Grassby, and others, hundreds of Arabs were engaged for the desert scenes. These Arabs excavated from the desert sands small, round pebbles, which they placed in their mouths and kept there. This pebble stimulated the glands and saliva flowed with the same ease that it does when one chews gum. Desert tribes enlisted pebbles for this purpose long before individuals and Mr. Wrigley came along and taught the American public the pleasure of gum chewing.

FILM DAY SCENES AT NIGHT

Exterior daytime scenes were filmed at night for the first time at the Goldwyn studios.

The scenes were directed by Alan Crosland for his film version of Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," and the settings on the big Balkan castle were photographed at night and artifically lighted.

Weird, impressionistic effects planned by Crosland and Cedric Gibbons, art director, could not be obtained with natural lighting, so all the exterior scenes, with more than 700 extras, were filmed by the light of hundreds of monster "spots."

The effects obtained in the scenes were made after the plan of Gibbons to create mood and atmosphere for the action by settings and by lights and shadows.

BATHING BEAUTIES RETURN

Mack Sennett promised a long while ago that the bathing girl would return, although in a different atmosphere.

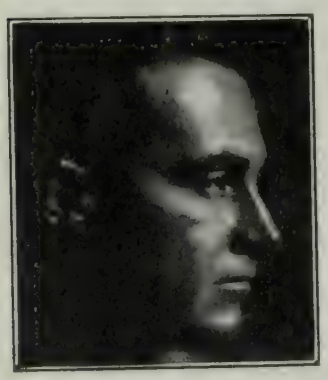
Mr. Sennett is keeping his promise, and ere long proof of it will be seen on the screen in a two reel comedy special, titled "Trifling," a very appropriate title for the type of story which features Harry Langdon, with Alberta Vaughn in the leading ingenue role, and Jack Cooper, Dot Farley, Irene Lentz and Vernon Dent, playing the other important parts. The direction will be credited to Earl Kenton.

For the "Trifling" cast, Mr. Sennett has selected fifteen of the most beautiful young ladies possible to locate in Southern California. Several of them have won prizes in the various beauty and brains contests which have been sponsored by newspapers and magazines recently. Chiefly among the prize winners are Eugenia Gilbert, for whom so much publicity has been given of late; Miss Cecile Evans, a five-time winner; Elsie Tarron, who won the "Most Perfect Figure" contest last summer at Santa Monica Beach; Gladys Tennyson; and Mary Akin, a late arrival from Chicago, where she enjoyed the distinction of being the most beautiful girl in the mid-west metropolis.

The balance of the cast, though they have not as yet had any medals pinned to them, are in line for first honors.

Unlike other pictures in which a fancy bathing costume was the signal for envious attention, in the present forthcoming Sennett comedies, the bathing girl will be called upon to do something other than stand around as atmosphere. A pretty face and an attractive figure without talent, will be considered no longer. An applicant for a place in the new Mack Sennett beauty brigade must possess talent. She must act rather than pose. The girls so far chosen, have all had previous experience. They must be able to swim, ride, drive a car, and to be otherwise athletic.

Offering such an imposing cast as this mentioned, is the best evidence of Mack Sennett's earnest intention to give the screens of the world a newer and higher class of comedy entertainment than they have ever had before.



A striking portrait study by Henry Waxman of Harold Austin, leading man, who plays the title role in Laurence Trimble's forthcoming Strongheart production "The Love Master" which was filmed in the Canadian Rockies. The lighting Waxman has employed in this study reveals, to the fullest dearee, the classical features, sympathetic expression, and other notable attributes which distinguish Austin from all others.

Robert Edeson, one of the veterans of the stage as well as of the screen, is playing the part of the Commandante in the Fred Niblo production "Thy Name is Woman."

Flames Peril Actor's Home

Having fortunately escaped the forest fires, Lloyd Hamilton's Laurel Canyon home, to which he moved on returning from his last trip to New York, was near to becoming food for flames when the comedian awoke, a night or two ago, to find his room full of smoke. Arousing the household, he located the fire in the garage, which, in the fashion of hillside homes, occupies the lowest story of the building. Live coals had fallen from the hearth in the living-room to the base of the chimney and ignited some inflammable material nearby. When the alarm was sounded the blaze had reached proportions which threatened the whole structure if another ten minutes was lost.

By hard work of the bucket brigade, while the volunteer salvage corps carried the mattresses and rugs downstairs and threw the furniture out of the window, the fire was brought under control, and it was found that little was lost save a few dollars in damage, and the best part of a night's sleep.

Dorothy Seay has been playing the part of a little Spanish girl in "Thy Name is Woman," under the direction of Fred Niblo.

Bebe Daniels in Shakespeare

Bebe Daniels is to play Shakespeare!

The popular star has just annexed her signature to a contract with Bennie Zeidman whereby she will play the leading role in a modern version of the Shakespeare comedy classic, "The Taming of the Shrew." Miss Daniels was loaned to Zeidman through the courtesy of Famous Players-Lasky.

Needless to say Bebe will enact the role of the Shrew, and also needless to say she is looking forward to the portrayal with no little enthusiasm.

"I have always wanted to do something like this," said the charming young lady in speaking of the role. "I am a great lover of Shakespeare, as is every actor and actress, and I've often wondered if I should ever have the opportunity to enact one of his famous characters."

Zeidman holds a contract with Principal Pictures Corporation for a series of feature productions, and "The Taming of the Shrew" will be one of the biggest offerings he will give that organization for distribution.

The contract between Zeidman and Principal for a series of feature productions was entered into upon the return of Sol Lesser and Michael Rosenberg, president and secretary respectively, of the company.

"The Taming of the Shrew" will be made at the Garson Studios, due to the recent return to Principal Studio of Baby Peggy, whose first production for Sol Lesser will begin within two weeks.

According to Zeidman, his picture will be made on the highest possible scale, and the cast will contain many of the biggest names in the business. Due to the slack in production right now, Zeidman has been able to procure some very desirable people for his cast.

CANNON WITH McLEAN AGAIN

Raymond Cannon, light comedian and erstwhile Griffith player, is at work upon the adaptation of the stage play which Douglas McLean will next produce for Associated Exhibitors. Cannon has acted in the same capacity on the three latest McLean productions.

HELEN WITH MONTY

Helen Ferguson makes an appealing heroine as leading woman for Monty Banks in his five reel feature, "Racing Luck" for Grand-Asher, now being made by Herman C. Raymaker. Both she and the star will have plenty of work in the film and among other things have to do some interesting Italian folk dances, which they have practiced assiduously.

Frank Mayo, Mildred Harris, and Norman Kerry have finished work in George Archainbaud's first William Fox special, "The Shadow of the East."

Smile Won Hi Part

Ralph Lewis, who is now getti his own producing company orga ized, was engaged by D. W. Gi fith for his first big part in p tures owing to his ability to sm sincerely.

Griffith had spent days trying find an actor with a sincere sm for one of the big roles in his B graph picture "Pippa Passe adapted from Brownings gr poem of the same name. Ra was introduced to Griffith by mutual friend and when the f mer smiled, extended his hand said "Very glad to meet you, Griffith," the great director imm diately noticed Lewis' sincere sm and hired him on the spot.

Lewis, who has had quite an tensive career on the legitim stage, then deserted the footlig for the screen and has been act for the screen ever since.

Fanny Warren plays the beg woman in "The.. Hunchback Notre Dame," now at the Crite Theater, and contributes a formance worthy of inclu among the screen's outstand portrayals, even though small its scope and limited in its ta of versatility. Miss Warren i trouper of many years' experi and has many notable successe her credit. Her role in the W sley picture should give added petus to her endeavors in e lishing real reel recognition.

PRISCILLA WILL HA PARTY

Little Priscilla Moran's birthday comes the latter par this month and she's going to a regular kid birthday party can bet she's not going to for any director that day as had to when Jackie Coogan his party last month and couldn't attend. There will be than twenty little guests. A gician will entertain the kids in addition her father has a prise in a grind organ and key, the delight of all small Sets are being erected in Wilshire oil fields, near La Avenue for Richard Walton ly's epic of the oil industry, "F ing Gold," from the Rex B novel of the same title. The duction will be directed by Jo De Grasse.

CALAIS IN "BEAU BRUMMEL"

An impressive sight was the filming recently of a street scene of Calais in the 1800 period, for production of "Beau Brummel," starring John Barrymore and being produced at the Warner Brothers studios under the direction of Harry Beaumont.

The street covers half a block, with curbings and cobble stone pavement—one entire side of which is lined with houses typical of the period.

The scene was the occasion of the King of England's visit to Calais and the parade thru the gaily decorated streets. A company of soldiers with drums and flags; mounted horsemen of the Tenth Hussars, the King's favorite regiment, in brilliant uniforms; and six hundred peasants lining the street to pay homage to the King, waving flags and cheering, as well as the King himself in his royal coach (portrayed by Willard Louis) made the procession an imposing one—and a scene that will be one of the high lights in the picture.

Mr. Beaumont is being assisted in the filming of the picture by Frank Straver. The photoplay is being handled by David Abel.

"AMERICA" FOLK NOW GYPSIES

Now the movies have given a modern twist to "gypsying." The caravan of gay wagons has become a private train of Pullmans. Instead of fortunes being told, time is being spent to enable D. W. Griffith to visit the various historical sites in Virginia for taking scenes for his next production, "America."

A train of five Pullmans has been put at the command of Griffith to travel wherever he wishes, and the older families of Virginia are his guides.

G. Watson James, of Richmond, Virginia, national historian of the Sons of the American Revolution, has been enlisted to accompany Griffith.

One of the principal locations visited is the Byrn Mansion at Westover on the James River. The society women of Richmond composing the Little Theatre League, are acting as extra people for the scenes requiring presence.

All the historic estates along the James River will be photographed, including particularly the Shirley Carter home, where the tenth generation now lives.

Vanted Insane to Compose

Some of the recent songs haven't made a hit with Col. W. N. Selig, who declares himself a devotee to classical music. In discussing the popular "Yes, We Have No Bananas" at the Selig Zoo the other day, Colonel Selig said it reminded him of a story he once heard about a Chicago music publishing firm.

"I have just thought of an easy way to get rich quick," said the president to his directors.

"Fine," shot back the vice-president. "What's the idea?"

"We'll pick out some good lunatic asylum and get the inmates to write songs for us."

Director Loses Valued Aide

Sidney Franklin, noted director and producer, has lost a valued aide in Millarde Webb who has taken the presidency of the newly organized Priscilla Moran productions. Webb has been associated with Franklin for the past five years as production manager and lately co-director and has been closely identified with such notable successes as "East is West," "Smilin' Thru," "Dulcy" and other features. Webb will direct little Priscilla, in the talented child star's feature films, in addition to holding the presidency of the corporation which is backed by local bankers.

Virginia Valli made her first appearance in motion pictures in a three-reeler called "Ruggles" produced at the old Essany studios. She played the part of a stenographer.

Mix Horse Injured

Tom Mix is very busy these days dividing his time between working on his newest picture, "Ladies To Board," now being made at the William Fox West Coast Studios, Hollywood, under the direction of Jack Blystone, and visiting his famous co wpony, Tony, who is at Mixville under a veterinary's care.

Tony and his owner, the noted western star, were both severely injured recently in a premature explosion up in the big timber country back of Santa Cruz, California. Both rider and horse were filled with bits of flying rock, and so badly lacerated was the pony that more than twenty stitches were taken in the animal's side and hip.

Tony, undeniably the best known horse in America, is recuperating rapidly, but that does not prevent the constant attendance of Mr. Mix, who finds time to run out to Mixville twice during the day and always in the evening, as has been his custom for years. Mr. Mix never retires at night until he has visited Mixville and personally seen that the sixty and more horses kept in the corral and stables there, are properly provided for.

Although he is always to carry scars from the wounds received in the explosion, Tony will be able to resume his work in Mix pictures in anothe rweek or so.

Eugenie Besserer, brilliant emotional actress, who will soon be seen in two of the season's finest screen portrayals, as Marty in "Anna Christie," and as Nina in "The Rendezvous."

Going East For Stories

Upon completion of "Torment," his newest M. C. Levee picture for First National, Maurice Tourneur will leave for a short visit to New York.

Mr. Tourneur's chief reason for his Eastern trip is to purchase new stories. He will look over a number of Broadway successes with the hope of obtaining some well known plays for early production.

"Torment" is now nearing completion at the United Studios and Tourneur expects to have it cut and titled within the next few weeks so that he can get away as soon as possible. He will probably take the master print of the production with him to show to First National executives and exhibitors in the East. Arrangements for the national premiere of this film will also be completed by the director in New York.

The newest Levee film directed by Tourneur offers a dramatic subject with some sensational touches involving reproductions of the Japanese earthquake which figure in the story. Among the players who appear in this photoplay are Owen Moore, Bessie Love, Jean Hersholt, Joseph Kilgour, Maude LaForge Morgan Wallace and George Cooper.

Claire MacDowell again plays a mother-role. This time in the Fred Niblo production "Thy Name is Woman." Miss MacDowell is the mother of Juan Richardo, a young soldier, the part assigned to Ramon Novarro.

RANKIN SIGNED BY FINEMAN

Arthur Rankin has been signed by B. P. Fineman, the producer, to play an important role in Theda Bara's first production since her return to the screen. Rankin has just completed a prominent part in "Discontented Husbands."

EDITH ROBERTS SIGNS WITH MAYER

Edith Roberts has been signed by Louis B. Mayer to play an important part in Fred Niblo's "Thy Name is Woman." Miss Roberts, who has been in New York for more than a year fulfilling a contract with Distinctive Pictures returned to Los Angeles only a few days ago especially to begin work in the Niblo feature. Negotiations for the services of Miss Roberts have been going on for some time.

The part assigned Miss Roberts is a vital one. As Dolores, a dainty little Spanish girl, she will be given greater opportunity in an emotional role than at any time during her picture career.

FINIS FOX PREPARES

Finis Fox, independent film producer, he returned from New York and has again taken offices and stage space at the Hollywood Studios. While in the East, he arranged to release his latest picture, "Bag and Baggage" through Selznick. Fox returned to the Coast via Panama and while en route wrote a story, temporarily titled "A Woman Who Sinned," which he will film at once at the Hollywood Studios.

CONDEMNS "FARMING OUT"

When the "farming out" of players at big profits is discontinued the high cost of film production will come down.

This is the contention of Conway Tearle, popular leading man, who offers an interesting angle on the high cost of picture making and large salaries supposedly paid to actors, directors and others in the industry, which has not been touched upon to date.

"A practice that has contributed largely to the high cost of movie making and which must be eliminated if minimum production costs are to be attained, is the 'farming out' of players to other companies at large profits," says Mr. Tearle.

"A player signs a contract for one year at $500 weekly. The company with whom he contracts, then rents him out to other organizations for $1,000 a week. This doubling of the actor's salary over night is not the doing of the player nor does he receive any more than his originally contracted salary. Huge profits have been made in this way for some and huge additional expenditures have been charged to pictures as a result of it.

"There are quite a number of players who are appearing on the screen under long term contracts at a fixed salary, contracts ranging from three to six years. Frequently these players appear in pictures made by companies other than those with whom they have contracted, at salaries double and even treble the amount the players themselves are receiving. Very seldom, if ever, does the player share in this extra salary but frequently, when things slow up, they are asked to cut their original salaries.

"A player's salary should gradually increase with his box-office value and his abilities. Because a player received $500 a year ago is no reason why he should not receive $1,000 today, provided his drawing power and popularity warrants it. The player however, who is under a long term contract is unable to share in any material increase in his popularity. This is why many of the most prominent artists are 'free lance' players and refuse to sign up for any extended period with an organization.

ITALY IS LOCALE

A scene in Italy, before the hero leaves home to come to America, forms a sort of opening chapter to "Racing Luck," which Monty Banks is now making for Grand-Asher. It is a five reel melo-dramatic comedy and Herman C. Raymaker is director. The characters, settings and the customs of the "old country" are to be faithfully portrayed with the attendant humor and merrymaking.

"The great tragedienne, Annette Adoree, has entered the boudoir of her home after leaving the theatre, the scene of her many seasons of successes before the footlights.

"A crowd from the audience, admirers of her great talent and beauty has followed from the theater to do her homage. The muffled roar of their cheers float thru the window on the midnight breeze. It was her last appearance before her beloved people for on the morrow she is to wed; wed an impoverished nobleman so as to insure for herself a position of refinement and security after the many tempestuous years of her career.

"Her maid removes her cloak—she sinks languidly in a chair before the fireplace and memories of her many past lovers float before her in a vision, "Dreams of Love."

"Her first, her very first, lover slowly materializes, a visionary manifestation of her troubled brain and stands before her. He is the great actor————."

But, Ah! more would be telling and the great heart interest would be lost. The play, tense, thrilling but withal having a delicious vein of humor running through its entirety is the great European success, "Dreams of Love," a fantastic comedy-drama by Armin Freedman and will be given at the Fine Arts Theatre, on the evenings of November 27th, 28th and 29th, and a special Thanksgiving matinee, under the direction of Lawrence Underwood.

Ary de Leoni and Rosamonde Joyzelle will assume the principal roles, this being Mr. de Leoni's American debut after many successful seasons abroad, both on the legitimate stage and before the screen. In this play he essays four separate and distinct characters, that of the great Jaques Miller, stage manager and impressario and of the three former lovers of the actress, Annette, which latter role is excellently handled by Rosamonde Joyzelle.

Ary de Leoni is a young Italian nobleman, who, years ago laid aside his title to take up the profession of dramatic art, and will without doubt soon become as popular in this country as he now is abroad.

Seldom does the amusement loving public have the opportunity of greeting a more lovable, a more forceful and a more versatile actor than Mr. de Leoni. He is a delightful Latin type likened by many to Valentino both in mannerisms and features.

He comes to America direct from the Theatre Coliseo, Buenos Aires, and the Theatre Municipal, Rio de Janeiro, the Royal and Metropol Theatres, Vienna, Comic Opera, Berlin and others where for many seasons he portrayed feature roles.

Miss Rosamonde Joyzelle is the beautiful and talented young actress who for two seasons was leading woman with Frederick Warde in the San Gabriel "Mission Play" and for the past three seasons played the role of the Mother Mary in the Hollywood "Pilgrimage Play." A list of her recent criticisms ,one and all speak only in terms of praise and her appearance in this play "Dreams of Love" further insures the success of the production.

Miss Laura Winston, likewise in the cast, is an artist of rare ability, having for the past number of years played important roles on the legitimate stage and for a time was at the head of her own company. Of recent years, however, she has been appearing before the screen at the local studios. Her mother roles particularly have won the heart sof the public.

Lovers of Terpsichore and music will find delight in the specially arranged number, "Divertissements of the Ballet," presented by the renowned Janeski Robenoff and the Robenoff dancers. H. J. Tandler, conductor and composer, will conduct his petite symphony orchestra.

Altogether, a most unusual and delightful evening's entertainment is in store. A blending of the dramatic talents of the old world and the new, intermingling the cream of Terpsichore with the harmonious melodies of the masters of both the present and the past.

HAMPTON EAST

Jesse D. Hampton, producer of "The Spoilers" one of the outstanding successes of the year, has departed for New York City where he will confer with several authors regarding future screen stories. He will be in the East three weeks.

Has Right Angle on Comedy

"Make the audience feel like crying first," is Buster Keaton's paradoxical formula for getting laughs.

"Dramatists build their action up to a grim climax and then relieve the tension with a bit of humor. The laughter following on this relaxation is more violent than the funniest gag in a straight comedy. This struck my attention while I was attending the theatre not long ago, and I wondered why. The answer was easy.

"The relaxation following the tension of the climax sets up a reaction amounting to a state of hysteria. The audience must find an outlet for its emotion. It is a case either of laugh or go mad. So the audience laughs. When you stop to think it over the bit of business by which the laugh is gotten is not always or even necessarily funny.

"It occurred to me that this fact could be made to serve moving picture comedy purposes. So I tried it in "Hospitality," my latest comedy. My scenario staff, composed of Jean Havez, Joe Mitchell and Clyde Brockman, prepared a highly dramatic episode to precede the thread of the comedy plot, and episode of the strongest kind of drama. In fact, it was melodramatic.

"With this melodrama to pave the way, we believe the spectators will be in a more receptive and sympathetic mood toward the main story of 'Hospitality.' It should be as effective I believe as anything could be short of hitting the spectator over the head with a slapstick club."

IS GOLF BUG

Mervyn LeRoy, clever screen juvenile soon to be seen locally in "Little Johnnie Jones," has joined the throng of golf bugs who compete for space on the new Griffith Park links every Sunday morning at six o'clock. Mervyn states that these pre-dawn risings have taught

WILL RETURN

Robert Ober, prominent screen actor and stage director, writes from San Francisco that he will return to Hollywood within a week. Mr. Ober recently presented the first showing of Maud Fulton's "Punchenello" in the bay city.

STRAINS TEA THROUGH SWATTER

Freckled-faced Mickey's mother is worred about him. She says he never steps out of the character he plays in Hal Roach's "Our Gang comedies. The other evening she asked him to pour her a cup of tea. Mickey hied himself dutifully to the kitchen and returned in due time with the tea.

"It looks so dark, Mickey," remarked his mother.

"You don't care do you, ma. I strained it through the fly swatter."

Starting Baby Peggy Pictur

Sol Lesser, president of Princip Pictures Corporation, announce that Baby Peggy's first feature pr duction under her three year co tract with that organization, wi be an adaptation of "Captain Ja uary."

"Captain January" was writte by Laura E. Richards, and is on of the most famous of children books, ranking in popularity wit "The Five Little Peppers," and th Alcott books.

"It seems as if 'Captain Jan ary' was written especially for li tle Baby Peggy," says Lesser i discussing his selection of this boo as her first picture under his bar ner. "The child in the story ha all the sympathetic characteristic that we are so anxious to bring ou in Baby Peggy, and which hav hitherto been unsuspected in th light comedies in which Peggy ha been seen."

Lesser is determined to surroun his new star with the best tale obtainable in the making of he pictures. Eve Unsell, clever free lance writer, who recently finishe work on "Lon Live the King, with Jackie Coogan, and "Shadow of Paris," with Pola Negri, ha been engaged to collaborate wit John Grey on the scenario fo "Captain January."

Edward F. Cline, whose recen achievements include picturizatio of "Circus Days" with Jackie Coo gan, George M. Cohan's "Th Meanest Man in the World," an Harold Bell Wright's "When Man's a Man," will direct Bab Peggy in her first starring pictur for Sol Lesser.

"Captain January" will go int production within two weeks.

Vulgarity Condemned

Finis Fox, who has just starte work on his latest feature "Th Woman Who Sinned," appeare before a number of exhibitor's or ganizations throughout the Unite States just prior to his return t Los Angeles to ascertain the wants and don't wants in motio pictures. "The members of eac organization that I talked to wer a unit in declaring that they di not want films with any suggestio of vulgarity whatever," said Fin "They said they wanted love st ries, but they wanted them clean.

"The costume play is in vogu but many exhibitors seem to fe that it's appeal will soon be pas ing out and that American films o American people along the lines o "Main Street," "The Gold Dig gers" and "Ruggles of Red Cap will gradually grow more an more in popular favor. The ex hibitors all over are wild to se cure good comedies and comed dramas. They also want the so called sex drama but, they want presented in a dignified, whol some manner with the story tol subtly, rather than obviously."

"Buck" Hard at Work

Charles Jones, having taken a detailed rest following completion of his last picture, "Cupid's Fireman," has started work again at the William Fox West Coast Studios, Hollywood, on a new production, "Not A Drum Was Heard," from Ben Ames Williams' Saturday Evening Post story of that name, adapted for the screen by Beaty Hobart. William Wellman will direct.

Heading the supporting cast is Betty Bouton, leading lady who appeared in the William Fox special, "You Can't Get Away With It," directed by Rowland V. Lee, and with John Gilbert in "The Exiles." Frank Campeau, most hissed of villies, will care for the dastardly end of the story. Others in the cast are, William Scott, Rhody Hathaway, Al Freemont, James Wang, Frank Weed and Micky O'Ban.

"Not A Drum Was Heard," a western romance is said to be replete with thrills and intense dramatic situations, offering Mr. Jones numerous opportunities for the kind of portrayal that has established him a prime favorite with the motion picture public.

Scores in Coogan Film

Dramatic critics in the East have heralded the role of Vera Lewis as the Archduchess Annunciata in Jackie Coogan's production "Long Live the King," as one of the most notable characterizations of the year.

Miss Lewis scored a distinct success on the legitimate stage before taking up her work in the silent drama.

For several years she was a member of the D. W. Griffith stock company, during which period she gave a remarkable performance in "Intolerance" as the philanthropic sister. Griffith once said that there were very few actresses on the screen who had the regal bearing with dignity and tone in every movement as did Vera Lewis in registering deep emotional feeling and blending the tragic with the pathetic. Vera has no superiors in the silent art. She wears her clothes like a Princess.

Her most recent pictures aside from "Long Live the King" are "Desire" with Metro and the "Marriage Market" and "Innocence" for the Waldorf productions.

In private life Miss Lewis is the wife of Ralph Lewis who is also very famous on the screen.

BEAUTY AWARD GIVES IMPETUS

Virginia Brown Faire, First National featured player, loaned by that organization for a featured role in "Welcome, Stranger" was the first to be signed of the all-star cast for the Belasco production. Miss Faire has been given to understand that the role of "Esther," the Jewish girl which she will enact, has a great deal of drama in it for her and that it will do much for her advancement.

Since coming to the Coast following the winning of a beauty contest offered by an eastern "fan" magazine, Miss Faire has been steadily advancing to an enviable position in the screen world and recently had the reward of sincere and conscientious work in being signed by First National on a long-term contract.

Loving her work and being possessed of great ambitions, Miss Faire has been untiring in her determination to have her screen delineations on a sure technic. Of her it is said that she is always in command of the right tempo for each scene and that she has never been known to let it "sag."

"Coming into the lime light from practical obscurity by winning the beauty contest only served to inspire me to greater effort with every role entrusted to me," she declares. "I determined to know tempo and the pitch of a characterization and to keep my work smooth and consistent, instead of making a false splurge and peter out as so many do who have no end in view. My end is growth."

Miss Faire will shortly be seen locally in "Thundergate" which is now showing in the East, scores of letters coming to her daily commending her work in this picture, her first following her contract.

MONG IS NO CHINK

Because of his name and also the fact that he has essayed numerous Chinese roles during his long and varied career as a cinema featured player, William Mong is kept busy denying the rumor that he is an Oriental.

Scores of fan letters arrive at Mong's office each month and a fair majority of them contain the query, "Is it true that you are Chinese born?" Mong wants it distinctly understood that he is 100% American, having been born in the city of Chambersburg, Pa.

Mr. Mong's next screen performance will be in John M. Stahl's "Why Men Leave Home."

Babylon and Egypt and Greece—ruins of the Acropolis and the Parthenon—Jerusalem in its glory—capering breezes on the Mediterranean—the booming of the surf on a rock-bound coast—the stagnant waters of the River Jordan—olive trees on a brown hillside—Mecca and Damascus—mosques and minarets silhouetted against a multicolored twilight sky—the languid fragrance of Holy Land Flowers—the exotic lure of Far East countries.

George Bookasta is a Syrian boy. Despite the fact he first saw the light of day in this western land, he is essentially of those colorful folk who inhabit the lands bordering the far eastern shore of the Mediterranean. His expressions, his gestures, and his demeanor are reminiscent of those romantic folk about whom the history and legend of Palestine and Asia Minor has been woven. His very person and his unique characteristics bring to one's mind thoughts of the stories and historic chronicles that have emanated from Mecca, Damascus, Jerusalem and other renowned centers of ancient Far East dominion. He is of a race of people who have written glowing chapters in the annals of the world, a persecuted, yet courageous tribe.

The editor has known George for some time, and he is fully convinced that he is an artist in embryo, awaiting only the chance to emerge into the sunshine of Opportunity to definitely establish his right to inclusion among the accepted starlets of cinema rank. And this chance is bound to come soon; it is inevitable, as inescapable as the dawning day, for this lad has a spark of genius that only awaits some guiding hand to nurture it and draw the flame therefrom. One so young who can so indelibly impress himself upon the minds of eminent folk is of a certainty destined for the worth-while things of life. Of a truth his talent must find some outlet, a silver-sheet expression. Keen, alert, intelligent, obedient, yet maintaining an unrestrained carriage and mode of conduct that is highly commendable for one of so tender years, he is an example that many further along Life's road might study to advantage.

That George Bookasta should come to the cinema was foreordained. Else why should he have been gifted with a personality that so easily meets the exacting and high standards of the shadow stage? His mimicry is finished to the 'nth degree, and his other acting needs only the refining touches which experience, time, and good leadership will bring. Given a suitable and sympathetic role this boy will win plaudits of international magnitude, for he has the stuff and he can put it across. He has the soul of the actor and the artist, and when all is said and done that is all that is essential—understanding. He can dance, in a boyish way, but his forte is acting; not comedy, or comedy-drama, but straight drama, something with human interest and great appeal.

"Rosita" afforded him a small chance, but his biggest and best to date. He hardly rose above the atmosphere, if one is to consider the position he enjoyed in the cast. But if one is to consider the heart and soul he put into his work, bearing in mind that he is as yet just a little man, then it is safe to say he arose to great heights in that picture. But it is not sufficient; he will never win his spurs on such, and therefore he is building day by day to bring closer the realization of the Big Chance. When it comes George Bookasta will not be found wanting. He will substantiate and redeem the faith which his many friends have invested in him. We shall watch with great hopes and expectations, sure of the ultimate outcome.

In An Edendale Garden

By FERN DUVAL

We found her in her garden. Judged alone, that garden would have been a superlative, breath-taking, almost indescribable accomplishment. Surrounding the actress, it was a fitting harmony; unusual, but quite naturally so.

She was severing dead leaves from a clump of old-fashioned cosma. Thus occupied and attired in a simple white frock and sandals with loosened curls, she emanated the spirit of enduring youth without for a moment missing the dignity of the great artist, who, arrived at middle-life as years are counted, has long studied the Plan and found it good.

Then Eugenie Besserer greeted us and the enthusiasm and vitality of this woman who has been called "the Bernhardt of the screen," was astounding.

We could not refrain from praising her lovely little home, her really exquisite flowers, and it was easy to discern that much of her heart was in that Edendale hillside. Having been introduced to Beach, a tremendous dog, and Furry, a wee kitten, having viewed the surrounding countryside from every carefully planned vantage point, we got down to pictures and their production. It was a privilege to watch Eugenie Besserer's enthusiasm for her home swing to her work without abating a wit—drawing apparently upon a boundless source. Again, we found that she was a generous "approver," given to criticism only when it could be made constructive. She stated "I care greatly for my picture work and consider myself wonderfully fortunate to have had in so short a time two such significent roles as Nina in "The Rendezvous," and Marty in "Anna Christie." Parts that mean much are not as frequent as one would like, therefore, very valuable when they do offer themselves. Nina I like better than anything I have done since mad Kate in "Light in the Clearing," although perhaps doesn't quite achieve the scops of Rosy in Griffith's "Scarlet Days," and Mar who has read "Anna Christie," and realized her dramatic possibilities? I joyed every instant of each part.

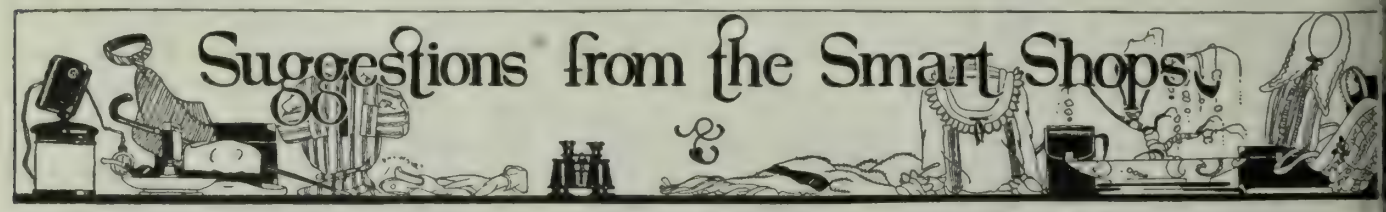
"How do I like to make pictures? I yet to talk with an old Griffith player doesn't lean toward his methods and h my favorite photoplay builder, altho wonderful strides have been made by a the really big producers. Why, whe think of the early Selig days when we out a photoplay a week"—she broke off a merry chuckle— "it just proves prog to the cynics, that's all," she concluded

Other subjects were touched, upon— foster children, some dozen little w whom she has lifted along to useful tions in life, while, according to her admission, she has learned more than has given; her two tiny grand daugh now at least with a dramatic future; life's companion, the man she marrie fourteen years of age. Then a brief sk of her career—a debut at nine with Mau Barrymore, her own company and fin an eight-year engagement with Selig, whom she was featured in "Whe Woman's Forty," "The Smouldering," other productions.

When we went from the presence Eugenie Besserer, we carried somet along—a faint, intangible something we felt rather than classified. It had n of the essence of greatness.



Cruger's, the New York shop on Forty-fifth street just off the Avenue, is now showing an excellent selection of tweed overcoats, importations from Scotland.

Cullingsworth of New York, at 12 East 46th street, are showing sack suits made up in imported worsteds, Saxony, tweeds, and cheviots. They are very reasonable in price and have attained great popularity with men there.

Hickey-Freeman of Rochester, New York, have announced a new overcoat for the coming winter. This renowned establishment has created a thoroughly showerproofed coat that has the appearance of the regulation tailored coat.

It is interesting to note how the smart shops have gained in popularity in the past few years, that is, in their appeal for the public at large. One of the busiest of these establishments in Los Angeles is that of Petrie, Inc., on West Sixth street opposite the Metropolitan Theatre. Here one can always find the smart and novel in men's custom-made and ready-made suits, shirts, and overcoats and the finest in accessories such as cravats, hankerchiefs, golf hose, knit jackets, etc. Being under the management of young men this shop is open to new and progressive ideas in wearing apparel, yet never sacrificing good taste for the sake of novelty alone. This shop is patronized by a great many film men, and its cinema clientele reads like a screen blue book.

Desmond's, of Los Angeles, are agents for John Shannon's Clothes, for imports. This renowned coatmaker created a very unusual, free-swinging o coat of finest woolen that marks a some radical departure in coat construction. S pockets are featured and the collar is and deep. The sleeves are loose, and general build of the coat permits of long easy strides. It should find especial f with motorists as it doesn't have that ir ting tendency to hug the knees.

Whalley-Ford, Ltd., of London, bootmakers, have a shop on East Forty-fourth street, featuring imported footwear. It is the rendezvous of those fond of British-made shoes.

Whether you desire a gown for that coming ball or a sport outfit for that game next Saturday you'll find that "something" in a Betty Croft Creation that distinguishes the master achievement from the reasonable, too! And the fortunate thing about it is that Miss Croft will rent you these outfits as cheerfully as tho you were purchasing them. It's the little residence at 1843½ Cherokee Avenue.

Without Influence

Screen ingenues, beware! Belle Green is in our midst and she has an ambitious look in her eye. She arrived here several weeks ago from New York, where her sister, Dorothy Green, was known as one of the films' most popular delineators of vampire and adventuress roles, appearing with such notables as Marion Davies, William Farnum, and Irene Castle, having been associated with the Fox, Cosmopolitan, Lasky and the old World Film organizations among others. Dorothy came to Hollywood several years ago, when she first appeared on the screen and made a picture with Marshal Neilan, entitled "The Country Boy." About two years ago she retired, following her marriage to a prominent New York attorney and since that time the responsibility of advancing the family film fame has been shifted to sister Belle.

She has played in several musical comedies and dramatic productions in New York, but this did not have a very great appeal for her, and she decided to break away from it all and come to California and enter film work. Her big ambition is to follow in th efootsteps of her sister and attain the same renown in her particular type of roles as Dorothy previously enjoyed as a portrayer of exotic characters.

Concerning this she said: "Of course, I realize that Dorothy's influence in the East would aid me to a great extent, but don't you understand that it is not pleasing to be known through life simply as the sister of 'So-and-So?' I would much prefer to work diligently in order that I may appreciate any success I may achieve, and know that it has been attained solely through my individual efforts. At the outset it may prove rather difficult, considering the ready competition in my roles but I am endeavoring to prove deserving."

The Universal Megaphone

By Arthur Q. Hagerman

Cabaret football!

It isn't an expression, it's a game, evolved by Hoot Gibson and his cohorts in a big cafe scene of his latest Universal feature, "Courtin' Calamity."

Altho the picture has been in production nearly a month the cafe scene, now in the filming, furnishes the key action to most of the important sequences in the entire play.

It is here that a college youth, though b his parents to be an anaemic, effeminate chap, proves himself a regular miniature cyclone on wheels. This is Hoot's role and when he and his gang arrive at the party the tempo of the place increases to runaway speed.

When things get dull Hoot proposes a football game. Using a derby hat for the ball the gang takes the dancing crowd like Grant took Richmond. It looked for a while as if—then the police arrived.

"That's a little too soon for the cops, isn't it Ed?" Gibson asked Edward Sedgwick, his director. "If you'd given us another couple of minutes we'd have had the place weel wrecked."

"Don't worry about that. We're not ready to strike this set yet," said Ed.

"Courtin' Calamity," an adaptation by Raymond L. Schrock of William Dudley Pelley's popular Saturday Evening Post story, relates the adventures of an Eastern college lad who leaves the home fold for a sojourn with a Wild West show. The play is a dramatic comedy, crammed with action.

"What's the next shot?"

"Say, you're shooting drammar, not pool!"

Which, translated means that the cameraman was ahead of his director, playing for position.

Hoot Gibson, directing scattered "clean-up" shot around a wild west circus in his newest starring feature for Universal, "Courtin' Calamity," took members of his troupe and his cameraman on a marathon hike the other day at Universal City.

Nearly one hundred shots, mostly closeups and individual action scenes, were filmed during the afternooon. Virgil Miller, ace cameraman of the Gibson unit, ground out footage while speculating on how far he'd have to walk for the next locale.

Virtually the entire cast figured in the final scenes of the circus stuff, including besides Hoot, Josie Sedgwick, Charles K. French, Harry Todd, G. Raymond Nye, David Torrence, W. T. McCulley and Pat Harmon.

"Courtin' Calamity," is a screen version of the popular Saturday Evening Post story of the same title by William Dudley Pelley. It was adapted to the screen by Raymond L. Schrock and scenarized by E. Richard Schayer.

Edward Sedgwick, regular director of the Gibson unit, has been seriously ill for seve weeks, but has directed principal scenes the picture from a wheel chair.

Dorothea Wolbert, known particularly her work in Hobart Henley pictures other Universal screen offerings, is play a principal role in support of Jack Hoxie "The Drifter," which Robert North Br bury is directing for the Universal Pictu corporation.

Another player of interest in the cast Frank Rice, who graduated into acting i rather peculiar way and achieved consid able success in odd characterizations. used to be a mining engineer and a very s cessful one. He went to live in Los Ange and was attracted to pictures. His exp ence in western sections and mining ar led him naturally into moving pictures the West. In "The Red Warning," a Ho picture filmed a short time ago, he recei excellent comments on the characterizat of an old miningman.

The Hoxie company is on location Sonora, California, where mining country picturesque and vivid. Margaret Morris the leading role opposite the star. The st was adapted from acques Jaccard's "H Rock."

Robert McKim, who for several years stood out among screen players as one the most popular "heavies," has been selec for the heavy in "The Drifter," the new J Hoxie starring vehicle which the Univer Pictures corporation is producing with R ert North Bradbury directing. McKim play the role of David Kincaid in the st which was adapted by Isadore Bernst from Jacques Jaccard's magazine st "Hard Rock."

Other players to be in the cast are Ma aret Morris, who just finished playing Pete Morrison in a chapterplay, "The Gh City," Dorothea Wolbert and Frank Rice.

The company has left for Sonora wh the exteriors of the picture will be They will be there ten days.

Too many cooks may have played ha with the proverbial consomme, but too m Murphys have raised hob with the po system at Universal City.

Every day the mail arrives crowded letters addressed to "Mr. Murphy." there are three of them—all receivers much mail. Martin Murphy, one of the p duction managers, receives dozens of lett daily. Joe Murphy, alias Andy Gump, ceives fan letters galore as well as busin letters regarding his realty operations. Chas. Murphy, superintendent of the also has a wide correspondence.

initial attached except their own. The result, the actor and zoo expert are kept busy running back and forth with "opened by mistake" mail. Martin Murphy, production manager, passes the morning rush hour sorting his own business mail out of letters demanding photographs in the character of Andy Gump—Joe's mail—and recipes for curing spavins of heaves—intended for his namesake among the lions and tigers. The zoo superintendent opens letters proclaiming the virtues of new brands of paint for scenary, and plastic for making marble pillars for sets. Altogether it's a merry time when the mail arrives.

The postmistress at Universal City suggests that correspondents address the Murphys as "Actor Murphy," "Animal Murphy," and "Production Murphy" to avoid mistakes!

"Hospital gymnastics" are Reginald Denny's method of keeping in condition while in bed, encased in a plaster cast as the result of the automobile accident in which the Universal star suffered a broken pelvis.

Denny, star of "The Leather Pushers" until the last series saw Billy Sullivan installed as his successor, and now star of Jewel productions, has always lived an outdoor life, and gone in for strenuous athletics. Flat on his back, lack of his usual exercise worried him. He feared he could not keep in shape. His physician of course forbade any movement while his broken pelvis was knitting.

Finally Denny hit on an idea.

"My ars aren't hurt, and they're not in a cast," he proclaimed. "I can exercise them, anyhow."

He enlisted the aid of Edgar Kennedy, who has played opposite him in his fight pictures, and Kennedy obtained and exercising-machine, consisting of two handles fastened to elastic bands. This was suspended from the ceiling over Denny's bed. The actor, reaching up, grasps these and operates the exerciser just as it is done in a gymnasium.

"Even that much exercise does me a lot of good," says Denny.

"Anyhow, it keeps him happy while he's laid up," is Mrs. Denny's opinion.

"Wildcat Allen" and "Battling Osborne" mixed in for a lively round at Universal City during the week. This is the last of the fistic encounters that have marked the recent productions at the big studio, and a climax of the Bribbon-Rawlinson bout, the O'Malley melee and the big scrap of Billy Sullivan of the "Leather Pushers."

The battle marked the climax of "The Ghost City," Universal's new chapterplay,— co-starring Pete Morrison and Margaret Morris. Alfred Allen the noted character actor, did battle with Bud Osborne, the heavy villain of the play. Allen, cast as the rich ranch owner and father of the heroine, played by Margaret Morris, proved a scientific boxer, too. Osborne still bears the marks of the encounter.

In the picture the rancher discovering the duplicity of his neighbor, is supposed to administer a severe drubbing to that worthy. Osborne was instructed to fight back, when Jay Marchant started the scene. He did. Allen "waded in." The result was a fistic conflict that delighted the director, marked up the "heavy" and made one of the livliest scenes in the picture.

"Bring on your Rawlinson's, Denny's, Sullivan's and O'Malley's," quoth Allen when the fray was over.

"You pack a powerful wallop," was all Osborne said.

Through the illness of Edward Sedgwick, the director, Hoot Gibson has blossomed forth as a director for the first time. Gibson directed the rodeo scenes in his picture, "Courtin' Calamity," awaiting Sedgwick's return from the hospital.

Rosemary Cooper, who will be remembered for her articles about the beginner in motion pictures which were published in the Los Angeles Examiner some time ago, has been engaged by Emory Johnson for his next production. She was seen in his latest release "The Mail Man," which has just concluded a run at Loew's State Theatre.

Harry La Verne has returned to Hollywood after a short vacation in Chicago and other eastern cities. Prior to his departure for the east La Verne completed one of the principal roles in Roy Hughes' "The Man from Thundergap."

Your Question—and its Answer

QUESTION—"I suffer with continual colds, first in my head, then in my throat and bronchials, and often the lungs are affected. If you can cure me, how long will it take?

ANSWER—You certainly owe it to yourself to have your spine so aligned that susceptibility to colds can no longer exist. The time required to bring about this change is dependent, not upon the severity, character or location of the cold, but entirely upon the time required to correct what is causing the cold. From experience we know that colds come only when the organs of elimination are not functioning properly. These organs include the lungs, skin, kidneys and bowels. Your susceptibility to colds will cease to exist when these four great channels of waste elimination are doing their work as Nature intended. From an examination of your we will be able to give you definite advice as to time required.

A recent arrival from the New York stage and screen, playing ingenues.

Hollywood, California,
January 21, 1921.

Mr. C. F. Palmborg, Special Representative,
New York Life Ins. Company,
909 Garland Bldg.,
Los Angeles, Calif.

My dear Mr. Palmborg:

I wish to thank you for increasing my insurance by the $50,000 policy you have just secured in the New York Life.

In buying this policy in the New York Life I feel that I have invested a portion of my income in the safest possible security for my family in event of my death, and for myself later in life. The best is none too good for my family now, and, therefore, the best in life insurance should protect them in event of my death.

I appreciate the efficient manner in which you have handled this matter for me, and will be very glad to recommend your personal service in the New York Life.

Very truly yours,

Wallace Reid

"Permit"

Two nights ago, on Thanksgiving Eve, the members of the Motion Picture Directors' Association and other folk of filmland gathered in festive conclave at the Biltmore Hotel to celebrate their Seventh Annual Ball and Masquerade, an annual function that has always occupied a preeminent position in the social life of Los Angeles for its brilliancy and refinement. The elite and distinguished of the cinema profession had gathered there to do honor to the men at the helm of film production and to join them in a few hours of merrymaking designed to bring a much-needed recess between the long and tedious days of labor that had passed and that were to follow. The joy of the occasion was contagious; everyone reflected, in happy countenances and buoyant mood, the spirit of the event. Smartness and beauty was the keynote of the affair, and the idle banter that passed to and fro, and the numerous exchanges of courtesies and compliments, mirrored the joy and complete accord of the participants. It was, in short, a most inspiring assembly.

Then, when the dance was at its height, in walked the law and called for silence. The uniformed gladiators, champions of the city constitution, called for a halt in the festivities, and informed those present that they must cease their merrymaking, for they did not have a "permit" to carry on in such a manner. Orders had been issued by their august majesties, the Police Commissioners, that the members of the Motion Picture Directors' Association and their friends must cease their playing and go home, for it was past the midnight hour, and did not the city constitution say "Thou shalt not dance after midnight?" In this manner did the guardians of the peace of the city of Los Angeles dictate to these motion picture people how they should conduct their social affair. If they had intended to hold such a gala occasion they should have sent one of their representatives to the stronghold of the civic powers at least ten days previous and obtained from them permission to dance.

An exceptional bill is promised Hillstreet patrons next week beginning with the matinee Monday with Virginia Pearson, famous stage and screen star as the special headline feature and a diversified program of Orpheum circuit standard acts.

Virginia Pearson will present a one-act dramatic play, "The Second Chance," written by Sheldon Lewis, who is also a member of her supporting company. The playlet tells a dramatic story dealing with the present crime wave and is said to be rife with thrilling incidents and tense situations.

William Demarest and Estelle Collette are also featured offering a musical oddity, "Strings and Stringers," in which they sing, talk, dance and play stringed instruments.

Anothe rfeatured entertainer is Joseph K. Watson, a modern monologist who discourses on humorous biblical events and timely subjects.

Harry Jolson, brother of the famous Al. Jolson, is an operatic blackface comedian who has developed the family trait of unique entertaining methods.

The Stewart sisters, petite dancing girls, and their orchestra of feminine jazz musicians will offer a novelty musical and terpsichorean divertissement and the Stealey brothers, Danish athletes and acrobats will complete the vaudevilie portion of the program.

The feature photoplay offering will be "Money, Money, Money," starring Katherine MacDonald and the screen program will also include "Say It With Diamonds," a Carter DeHaven comedy; "The Steel Trail," a Wm. Duncan chapter play; Aesop's Fables and the Hillstreet International News.

"Why Worry" continpues to delight Harold Lloyd's admirers at Grauman's Rialto Theatre. The comedian's two sided partners, Jobyana Raylston and John Aasen, the young Norwegian giant, come in for their full share of applause.

Cecil B. De Mille's "The Ten Commandments" which opens this week at Hollywood's Egyptian Theatre is pronounced as the masterpiece of the season's offerings, a big spectacular production with a cast which includes many bright names of filmland.

It is just a wild tumult of joy and applause that meet those talented stars, the Duncan Sisters, in their own show at the Majestic Theatre. Never in all the naughty, joyous life of Topsy has that deathless character been played, I am sure, with the mischievous gusto and verve which Rosetta brings to the role—and never was there a more hug-able, squeeze-able, hold-on-your-knees-able Little Eva than Vivian. This pair alone are worth the price of admission, as they always are, no matter whats how they are in nor how much that show costs. They are the golden laughter Gold Dust Twins.

Several new numbers, songs and dances, have been introduced by the sisters, and there is a very young, very lovely and accomplished terpsichorean, Harriet Hoctor, who wins much applause.

Harriet Bennet is about the sweetest, charmingest-voiced prima donna we've heard in many a long day, and grows on us each time we see her, while Aimee Torrianni as Chloe, continues to please mightily, even though it does seem too bad she hides her attractiveness behind a black make-up.

"Topsy and Eva" is a pure delight.

"Pioneer Trails," at Clune's Broadway is a vivid page from our early history and its appeal is universal. This David Smith triumph tells a story of the early west, when the man with a quick draw and ready courage ruled. It portrays skillfully the life of the period when men and women were drawn into the unknown wilderness by the lure of gold and is replete with thrills and human touches as well, as an absorbing romance of charm.

Every detail of the picture has been given careful consideration by a staff of experts and the cast includes such artists as Cullen Landis, Alice Calhoun, Bertram Gressby and Otis Harlan with probably a thousand others in the spectacular scenes.

From all indications, Universal's production of Victor Hugo's famou sclassic, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," is due to establish records for a downtown Los Angeles run. Since its opening at the Criterion theatre two weeks ago, the production has been playing to capacity houses, with hundreds turned away at every performance ,and there is no sign of a let-up in the rush to witness the picture. Wallace Worsley, the director, has scored a triumph of artistry in "The Hunchback," and Lon Chaney, in the title role, has given a performance to the silver-sheet that is due to be talked of for many years to come in the profession, and that will be long remembered by the public as one of the most thoroug characterizations that has ever graced the screen. Patsy Ruth Miller, Ernest Torrencc, Brandon Hurst, Norman Kerry and all the other principals in an exceptionally large and famous cast score personal triumphs. Settings, lighting, photography, the huge mob scenes, all are on a scale of magnificence that is unusual even in these days of super-features. The presentation at the Criterion is on a scale of magnificence fitting the subject. For the atmospheric prelude, the belfry of Notre Dame Cathedral, with the huge bells, is reproduced, and blending with their chimes comes the far-off sound of organ and choir, apparently in the Cathedral hundreds of feet below. The score, especially arranged for the production by Adolf Tandler, conductor, has been arranged to fit the tempo of the picture and greatly enhances the dramatic values of the screened play.

A Treatise on Cinema Waste

th the producing activities of 1924 must cor the elimination of waste in the making of fil if we are to cut down the high production cos which curtailed producing the past fall.

st what is and what is not waste in motion pic re producing is something that can be ar ed until the end of all things. If time and m y is wasted, in the literal sense of the word, an through this apparent waste a situation or an dea is made possible that greatly helps to pu over the picture, then that is not a waste af all. What to the hardened business man m at times seem waste, may in reality be the so ce of a great creation on the part of the ar t.

a business where intangible factors that go make up the product are necessary, such as the making of motion pictures, it is im- ble to entirely eliminate waste. In an en- te rise where weather conditions must be ga bled with, where personalities play such an im ortant part in the quality of the product, and w re artistic creations become part of the sell- in values, there will continue a certain amount of waste.

owever, there are various physical factors th contribute to the success and production cos of pictures. Any waste resulting through th misjudgment or mishandling of these phy- si properties is inexcusable.

here is no reason why a set or a series of se should not be ready on time. There is no ex se for insufficient lightning, or for delays in ar anging locations involving inactivity on the pa of the producing staff and players. There is o cause for waste motion in the physical ha dling of the routine business of picture ma ing.

trange to say, a great percentage of waste in . past has resulted not through weather con- ons, not through accidents, but purely ough lack of business application to the busi- s end of picture making.

here is no reason why a company should rt shooting and then lay off for days while e director plans other scenes. There is no son why a player should be placed on a ary and then kept idle for weeks before he rts actual work. Nor is there any excuse the building of sets at the eleventh hour ecessitating overtime work on the part of hun- ds of men—and then having that set lay un- d for days.

n the production of Maurice Tourneur pic- es, for instance, the entire working schedule aid out before a single scene is shot. Play- start work when they go on salary and stop with the conclusion of their actual engagement. We can tell a week in advance on what day certain sets will be photographed and on what day location trips will be made. This and other information we have on hand before we start shooting a scene just as a builder has his complete plans figured out before he starts laying a foundation.

Producers adopting these methods are eliminating waste as much as it can be eliminated in this business. This, however, requires facilities and organization which, as far as the average independent producer is concerned, are not always at his command. A great many independent producters start shooting before they know what the shooting is all about.

The institution that has at its disposal the services of an organization and the facilities to handle the business end of producing for the independent producer will save money not only for the producer but for the distributor and the exhibitor as well for they all must share in the costs made at the source.

To render such a service and to render it more efficiently than any other institution should be the aim of everyone in the industry. To give the usual facilities means merely another studio; to give greater facilities and money saving innovations is to offer the producer more than the physical studio.

The very building of a studio requires more thought than most people seem to realize. When the present interests and management of the United Studios took over the plant this fact was first considered. Since that time changes and renovations have been in progress. Today, after spending $800,000 and much time and thought we have what we believe to be the most scientifically laid out plant in existence today.

To save waste motion entire buildings have been moved for several blocks, departments have been altered so as to place them where they are most needed. In fact, the entire physical machinery of the plant has been changed about so that money may be saved producers.

Equipment has been discarded by the ton, and modern improvements installed. Labor saving devices of every description have been purchased and every step taken with one thought in mind—save money for the producer in making his pictures.

We did not do this because we were "good fellows," but because of sound business reasons. If we can increase our business by means of saving money for the producer we are merely another example of the doctrine that service pays in this business just as in any other.

A studio to be of greatest service to the producer must carry expensive organization as well as a tremendous line of material properties that are used in picture making.

As to organization, our chart is the best illustration of how our plant operates. First the office of President carries with it the entire supervision of the plant. Next comes the general manager directly responsible for the individual departments.

The Planning Department is the heart of the organization consisting of the Chief Planner and schedules, the Material Man, the Purchasing Agent, the Planners, the Job Chasers, Stage Space Assigner, Storage Manager and Employment Manager.

In the Construction Department are the mill, the staff shop, paint and paper shop, plaster shop, carpenter and labor departments. Under the Property Superintendent are the furniture men, the set dressers, property men, electrical fixtures, draperies and wardrobe units.

Under the electrical superintendent are in addition to the electricians, the blacksmiths, tinsmiths, plumbers and maintenance and repair men. In the accounting department are experts handling finances, contracts, time-keeping, billing, store accounting, and adjustments.

By Arthur Q. Hagerman

After spending nearly seven weeks on loca- n in the redwood timbered hills of Northern lifornia, with a deserted summer camp as eir refuge and a high-powered radio as their ly source of entertainment, Director Clarence own and the Universal company that is as- ting him in the filming of "The Signal Tow- have returned to Universay City to complete e remaining scenes of the picture.

The "Clarence Brown Special" which trans- rted the party to and from the location seven ndred miles from the studio, carried Mr. own's first and second assistants, Charlse Do- an and Ernest Laemmle; Virginia Valli, who starred in the production; the cast of players, cluding Rockliffe Fellowes, Wallace Beery, J. rrell McDonald, James O. Barrows, Dot Far- ley and Frankie Darro, and production aides and workmen to the number of forty. Attached to the Pullmans were four cars of equipment, including two big electric generators, a massive battery of lights and a full-sized collapsible signal tower, with interlocking semaphores and switches.

Of the six weeks the company spent in the hills near Fort Bragg, three weeks were given over to day work and three weeks to the taking of the many night scenes. The camp at which the company was quartered consisted of a small inn and some tiny bungalows, and ordinary comforts were at a premium. The cold was intense and the food not over-inviting until Mrs. Brown, who accompanied her director--husband

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 26th, 1923.

Annette Kellerman, and her husband James R. Sullivan, arrived in San Francisco a few days ago on the steamer Tahiti from New Zealand. During their stay of more than two years in Australia and New Zealand they have been engaged in the making of some unique under-water films, starring Miss Kellerman, and arranged and directed b her husband. Much of the work was done under the surface of the ocean, with the camera encased in a diving bell, and the fair star gambolling among the fishes.

William Russell, of Western fame, returned to San Francisco the last of last week to be present at the big football game on Saturday, and have another look at the races at Tanforan.

Walter W. Bell, as director, will begin work almost at once on a series of six five-reel westerns, to be made at the studio in Niles where Bronco Billy used to work, with exteriors on a nearby ranch stocked with twenty-five hundred head of cattle. Merrick and Cohen are back of the project. The cast has not yet been announced.

For the first time in San Francisco's moving picture history two of the big down town theatres are giving duplicate programs, for last Saturday Charlie Chaplin's notable film, "The Woman of Paris," opened at both the California and the Granada Theatres. The duplication is being carried out in every detail, even to the musical numbers and the joint appearance at both theatres of Paul Ash, and Max Dolin, who motor from one theatre to the other to keep the program going. The picture met with a most enthusiastic reception from great crowds, and bids fair to carry on its unusual record in New York and Los Angeles. It is reported that Charlie Chaplin himself came quietly to town as the guest of Don Lee, to be present at the first showing here.

Andre Ferrier and his company of players at La Gaitie Francaise, last week gave two charming performances of Moliere's famous play "L'Avara." Ferrier and his associated company are specially worthy of mention, because in a simple and unpretentious way at their little theatre on Washington Street, they are giving a season of French plays, and giving them so artistically, with so much real dramatic abiliyt, such quaint settings, and such beautiful diction, that they stand out in contrast to many of the rather poor offerings of the larger theatres. Charles Fallon, well known to the picture world, is a member of the company.

Max Miller, head of the Stereoscopic Production Corporation of this city, has sold outright for a good price, the film of "The Pair of Hellions" filmed by the company last spring, co-starring Ranger Bill Miller and Patricia Palmer. Mr. Miller is now making plans for the filming of some further pictures, to be shot largely in Sacramento.

Priscilla Dean came to San Francisco the latter part of last week for a little holiday, and to be present at the big Stanford-University of California game on Saturday.

"Eight Bucks," the picture made recently by the Rellimeo Films from a story by Fred Win-damere, and directed by him, has been releas under a special arrangement to the Americ Legion, to be shown at their posts all over t country. The story is one of the readju ment of a returned veteran of the World's W to the ways of peace, and is reported to be interesting and human story well played by cast headed by Raymond McKee.

Bowditch Turner, best known to the fil world as "Smoke" is not only appearing at t Capitol theatre in "Scaramouche," but is in o midst in person playing with Francis Bushm and Beverly Bayne in a headline sketch at t Golden Gate Theatre this week. "Smoke" enjoying this engagement, which lasts only tw weeks, for it is a change from pictures and he says, a chance to "show them he can something besides act before a camera." In t sketch, which is called "Poor Rich Men," gives an excellent performance as the Bo shevist.

One of the most modern plants on the coa for the designing and erection of stage sce ery, is to be erected at once on Tenth Stre beyond Bryant, by the Rothschild Entertai ments, Inc. It will be a fine reinforced concre building, two stories and a basement, with tower eighteen feet wide by sixty feet hig building contracts have already been let.

Joseph M. Schenck with Sol Lesser, H. C. A thur, Jr., and Abe Gore were all in San Fra cisco last Thursday on business connected wi the West Coast Theatres, a combination form only eighteen months ago but which alrea owns and controls over a hundred theatres.

"Fore!" and Vic Talks

By FANCHON ROYER

We have interviewed several of the well known "difficult" celebrities and many of the "accommodating" ones, confronting them across dinner, dressing and card tables, in hotel lobbies, limousines and other highly recommended locations for the semi-official tete-a-tete. But we never walked a golf course with one until we sought and surprised Victor Potel, one of filmdom's best known comedians, at precisely the moment when he was himself pursuing exervice and relaxation on the Griffith Park Links. It soon became apparent that his quest was as grimly important as ours and—so we elected to trail along.

The tall, thin comedian teed off determinedly and—let it be stated—in a most promising manner which brought a very slight degree of satisfaction into his bland, unruffled countenance. Then, as we followed up the play, he turned his attention easily and it was to be perceived that here was a man who could concentrate—in seconds.

We questioned him about his chosen field, screen comedy and, remarkable as it may seem, this self-professed actor whom we have quickly discovered to be in no sense the clown, suggested by memories of his early slapstick roles, played an excellent game with no material pauses in the discourse which followed.

We already knew that Victor Potel had abandoned slapstick after creating one of the most famous of the first comedy characters. (This was Slippery Slim, the delight of early juvenile fans, who appeared for several years in Essanay's Snakeville series). He now told us why.

"I began to realize some eight years ago that the most justified and welcome comedy in the catalogue was comedy relief in feature plays.

It was the cleanest cut and most human, and even then we were breaking away equally from nonsense and old time melodrama toward the realism which is now the keynote of popular literature and drama."

So a foresighted fun maker changed his course somewhat and landed first in Mary Pickford's "Captain Kidd, Jr." and then in dozens of full length serious photoplays through which he rollicked with that same abandon that had already rendered him a universal favorite. Prominent parts with Nazimova and in all-star productions increased his scope and established a niche of his own in the scheme of picture things.

We had arrived at the eighth hole before Victor Potel registered a kick. It's just possible that an extra "put" for the seventh was somewhat responsible for the brief rebellion of th genial spirit, but the expression was significa nevertheless.

"The greatest flaw in the turnout of o standard directors today is their small know edge of this comedy we have been discussin They feel that they need it in their plays, b many of them are afraid of it. Breaking up dramatic situation with nonsense is a tickli job, I admit, but the man who undertakes t direction of a photoplay without absolute sure of such technique is a bit premature in his a pirations, it seems to me. A laugh after a te is the more valuable of the two moments, b nine cases out of ten it is the laugh that deco ates the cutting room floor when they must 'g down to footage.'

"Another instance of inexcusable comedy ne lect is illustrated in the favorite remark of half dozen directors, 'Vic, (or Bob or Bill Jerry) come on in here and do your stuff—let see how funny you can be,' and this with previous plans for situation, characterization contrast. Pointless clowning is rarely valuab in any production and I'd like to go on reco as protesting the lazy carelessness of the sever directors who indulge in it. When the heroi weeps a reason is provided, out of justice to t story, her performance and the audience's i telligence. The same should hold good wi the comedian, who needs perhaps more su tlety and a far greater psychology than the artist."

We pondered this last for a moment as w contemplated the ninth hole neatly accomplishe Slippery Slim had deliberately repossessed hin self of the little white object which had occ sioned my recent travels, and now with glance at the descending dusk, remarked chee ily, "Guess that'll be about all."

TIME
By Iona Atkeison

A tear, a smile, a little strife,
A joy, a pain—so goes this life;
A laughing child, a morose man,
A worker does the best he can;
An idler laughs, resounding roar,
And time goes on, just as before.

A lover sighs, a cynic sneers,
A simple-simon laughs and jeers;
A thinker sits in thoughts profound,
An earthworm crawls along the ground;
A fighter evens up his score,
But time goes on, just as before.

Relentless time controls all men,
Day follows night, night comes again;
We try to doctor all our woes
As round and round the cycle goes;
We want to stay on life's grim shore,
But time takes us like those before.

Palmborg's Paragraphs

(Being one of a series of impressions of film folk and cinemaland anecdotes as written by a motion picture insurance man. By C. F. Palmborg, special analyst and Hollywood representative of the New York Life Insurance Company).

Robert Agnew, the actor has always interested me. I have long admired this youth with his glowing, winning personality. His flashing smile and beaming eyes always radiated a feeling of happiness within me. I have heard numerous ones of the fair sex declare that he is the handsomest of them all and I often wondered if he would prove as attractive in real life. Therefore when business affairs necessitated a call upon this young man, I looked forward to meeting him with a great deal of pleasure.

I was not disappointed, for I found an exceedingly good looking, alert, clean-cut chap of charming sincerity and an absolute absence of egotism. And right here I wish to state that this lack of egotism which I find among the motion picture people in general, is worthy of notice and praise. The adulation wealth and fame they receive might well turn the head of anyone, but as a rule I find them decidedly modest. Many a business man would do well to take a lesson from them in this respect.

Robert Agnew is not one who talks about himself. He does admit that his work is a joy to him and I marveled at his tireless energy. I had occasion to call upon him about nine o'clock one morning and found him in his car ready to start for the studio. He was so brilliant and sparkling as ever and eager to be off. Later his mother told me that he had worked until threeo'clock that morning and all the night, the night before—that he had a bad cold and she knew that he was making a great effort to refrain from coughing in her presence, as he realized that she was worried about his condition. "But that is Robert," she added, "Always thinking of me instead of himself."

And that is an index to his character—unselfishness. During my numerous conversations with him, his mothers welfare was always foremost in his mind. His interest in my business—life insurance—was due to his devotion to her. He wanted to make sure that she would always have plenty, in case anything happened to him. He is not a lad who lives only in the present. He is looking down the long road of years to come and planning for the future and any contingency which may arise. His intelligence and ability to reason and think have caused him to realize that the time to plan for the future, is while the present is bright and rosy and not to wait until a time when it is to late.

So through his love for this sweet, little bright eyed, brown eyed mother, Robert Agnew unselfishly works and plans for bigger things. Quite naturally she adores him and glories in his success and I feel that her love and faith in him have played a large part in this success.

Although young in years, he holds an enviable position in the motion picture world. With the benefit of a few more years of added experience, I predict great things for him.

I do not profess to be a dramatic critic, for that is not in my line, but I do recognize a loveable character when I see one. There are certain types of actors who appeal to the public and Robert Agnew is one of these types. He has that indefinable "something" which reaches out to the individual and causes him to feel that he knows him, and knowing him he understands him.

So as an "outsider," I predict a brilliant future for this ambitious, talented youth and will watch his future with great interest. May we see more of him!

Philosophy

FRIENDSHIP
By Eric Mayne

Friendship cannot be defined; it is an indefinable and invaluable force essential to the realization of life.

A man may exist without friendship, but—he does not live.

Like all the great forces of life, Friendship is wrapped in mystery. From unexpected sources, and in strange ways it comes to us. We need wisdom to choose the true from the false.

Friendship cannot be bought; and if we seek Friendship for an end, we shall find the end sooner than the Friendship.

He has the truest friends who strives to make himself worthy of the smallest tokens of friendship.

In the Apocrypha we read—"A faithful friend is a strong defence, whoso findeth such an one fyndeth a veritable treasure." A saying worthy to be printed in any book.

Confucius tells us, "There are three Friendships which are advantageous; Friendship with the Upright, with the sincere, and with the man of much observation." Wise words, deserving our deepest consideration.

Indiscrete friends wreck friendships, and unworthy friends are the shadows that walk with us in the sunshine.

One of the uses of adversity is that it often shows us where our real friends are to be found.

Love and esteem are the first principles of friendship and to bring happiness into the lives of those about us is the best way to promote friendship.

Friendship destroys enmity in the individual, and when the League of Nations becomes a League of Friendship, there will be great hope for a brighter world.

"The friends thou hast,
And their adoption tried;
Grapple them to thy soul
With hoops of steel."

people ever hesitated to give their full and hearty support to other people's social gatherings that had called upon them for entertainment or co-operation? Have THEY ever cried "permit" when some civic enterprise came to them in charity's name and asked their aid? Have they ever conducted themselves in such a manner as to warrant this absolutely uncalled-for and insulting interference from the city of Los Angeles or any of its public officials? THIS WAS NOT A PUBLIC AFFAIR! It was simply an affront to the motion picture industry, for a similar event continued until long after midnight in another section of the city, WITH THE FULL KNOWLEDGE OF THE POLICE. It was, as Fred Niblo stated, "a rank discrimination against the motion picture industry," and it is now high time that the film people arise and declare their rights. We have been subjected to abuse and insult from numbskulls and crackbrains too long, and it is now up to us to reveal the insidious and sinister discrimination against us being made by the long-hairs who pull the strings behind our city government and pretend to be the public opinion of Los Angeles' people.

It is high time that the police of this city were put to some worth-while task.

How about the traffic situation?

How about the auto thefts?

How about the bank holdups?

How about the criminals running amuck?

There's plenty in this city for Mayor Cryer, Chief Vollmer, and other public officials to attend to along police lines before they presume to walk in on a private dinner-dance being held by the motion picture directors or any other cinema folk and dictate as to their hours and form of entertainment, and to add insult to injury, allow other entertainments of similar nature to continue unmolested. The antagonizers have given as their excuse the fact they are trying to rid Los Angeles of "night life." To be frank about it this is a tremendous joke. Try to find the "night life." Furthermore, if they are desirous of shutting down some public dance hall because mother's daughter is running out all the time, let them follow the right course in doing so, and not assume the audacity of stating that the Directors' Ball is akin to a public dance hall. There will be no bums at a ten-dollar-a-head entertainment.

In the meantime that "permit" . . . "permit" Los Angeles to be rid of auto thieves . . . "permit" Los Angeles to be relieved of the terrible traffic congestion . . . "permit" Los Angeles to be cleaned of depraved criminals dashing around loose here, a menace to life and property . . . "permit" bank holdups to cease . . . and last, but not least by a long shot, "permit" the members of the Motion Picture Directors' Association and their friends to enjoy their little friendly congregations in peace. It only comes but once a year.

If not we will carry the issue to the finish, to the one deciding factor, if necessary . . . the polls. At the coming elections the voice of filmdom will be heard in protest, and it will be a clarion cry for the preservation of free speech, justice and liberty that is as much due film folk as others. Los Angeles MUST HAVE government "of the people, by the people, for the people," and we of Hollywood are included in that "people."

What's your answer?

Will you . . . "permit?"

BUILD HUGE BUCCANEER FLEET

Representing the largest naval investment and the most picturesque undertaking of its kind ever recorded in motion picture history, a fleet of five large vessels of the Sixteenth Century type will be completed shortly by Frank Lloyd, independent producer - director, for his production of Rafael Sabatini's "The Sea Hawk" for release as a First National picture.

The five ships, ranging from 90 to 192 feet in length, one with a poop deck 52 feet above the water line, are now being constructed for Mr. Lloyd at the shipyards at San Pedro, California, under the supervision of Fred Gabouri, recognized as filmdom's leadnig authority on ship construction and periodical technique. Mr. Gabouri has been loaned to Mr. Lloyd by courtesy of Buster Keaton, and, assisted by more than three hundred draftsmen, mechanics, riggers, carpenters, electricians, sailors and common laborers, he is building a fleet which when completed will recall the Pacifi c expeditions of Balboa, Magellan and Cabrillo, more than three hundred years ago.

Producer Lloyd will produce a majority of the scenes for "The Sea Hawk" on the high seas and during the rainy season. To meet every emergency all of the odd vessels are being made seaworthy and equipped with motor power, and it is expected that those who participate in the action before the Lloyd camera will have some exciting experiences at sea.

One of the ships will be a duplicate of an English frigate of the early 1500s. From the top of the mainmast to the anchor, rudder, the bulwarks and the galleys, the minutest details of Sir Oliver Tressilian, time will be duplicated. Another ship will be a Moorish galleass, another a Moorish frigate. There will also be a pirate craft and a Spanish galleon. The Moorish frigate will be manned by more than two hundred oarsmen, four to six to an oar, and the other vessels will have oarsmen in proportionate numbers.

While Mr. Gabouri's men are working night and day getting the big fleet ready to take the water, Mr. Lloyd, with Harry E. Weil, his general manager, is preparing the filming schedule and the cast. Filming is expected to begin in December and last until late in April. Despite a list of candidates numbering over a hundred, the man who will play "the sea hawk" character still remains an enigma.

DICKER FOR NEW O'HARA SERIES

George O'Hara, who has just completed the second installment of the "Fighting Blood" series, has been so successful in these thrilling pictures that are showing all over the land that he may appear once more in a series of pictures to be adaptd from some popular stories of college-boy life, with the hero an athlete. On the other hand, he may be featured in some dramatic productions at the R. C. Studios. O'Hara is receiving offers all the time, but when he makes his decision he will choose the vehicle that will mean the most for his future. He is ambitious to develop a well-rounded technique, which is his first concern.

Chester Bennett has promoted Douglas Dawson, who has acted as his chief assistant for two years, to the office of manager of production.

GERAGHTY WILL STAY IN EAST

Thomas J. Geraghty is now in New York editing "Pied Piper Malone," Thomas Meighan's latest vehicle, which Mr. Geraghty adapted from the Booth Tarkington story, supervising the screen production. Instead of returning to Hollywood as he had planned, Mr. Geraghty will begin work shortly on adapting the next starring vehicle of Gloria Swanson, so is not likely to be home for the holidays.

SENNETT'S MOTHER IS HERE

Mrs. Katheryn Sennett, mother of Mack Sennett, arrived in Los Angeles from Danville, Province of Quebec, Canada, Tuesday afternoon to visit her son, the well-known producer.

It has been the custom of Mrs. Sennett over a period of several years to spend the winter months in California, returning to Canada each year late in April. Mrs. Sennett will make he rhome in one of the down-town hotels for a short while.

Noted Star Passes Away

Martha Mansfield, world-famous film star, is dead at San Antonio, Texas, as the result of severe burns sustained during the filming of "The Warrens of Virginia" there, in which she, attired in an elaborate dress, was playing the part of a southern belle.

It was while waiting in her automobile for the scene to be shot that a lighted match caught fire to her apparel. She was immediately enveloped in flames. She was rushed to the hospital where she died soon after.

Miss Mansfield was as well known on the legitimate stage as on the screen, and was declared to be the nation's most-photographed person. She was divorced a short time ago from a Chicago banker.

COMEDY CZARS PROFIT-SHARERS

That a novel profit-sharing plan for the actors, actresses and other employees associated with the Christie Comedies has been worked out was announced today by Al Christie.

The novel part of this plan is the fact that the money-making proposition have nothing to do with moving pictures, but with the realty interests of the Christie brothers and their associates.

While a list is not given, it is said that those of the Christie organization taking part in the reaity company which has been formed, include directors, actors and others from various departments of the studio, and that these interests share alike with the Christies, according to the ratio of the individual investments.

All of the Christie staff have been encouraged to invest their money in Los Angeles real estate, certainly a wise move in the light of the unusal development which is going on at the present time. And it is said that the Christie Comedians regard the heads of the company as shrewd investors, and therefore are following their lead and putting their money into Los Angeles lands and houses.

PSYCHOANALYZE BABY PEGGY

Baby Peggy, five-year-old film star, underwent a test in psychoanalysis last week at the hands of Madame Fowlkes-Haun, international lecturer, psycho-analyst and teacher.

Mme. Haun was so impressed with the precocity of Baby Peggy that she begged permission to use the results of examination in a proposed lecture tour she will make throughout the United States this winter.

"Baby Peggy," says Mme. Haun, "has the greatest speed of mind action I have ever seen in a child of her age, and I have made tests of hundreds of children throughout the world. This child can learn in one year what the average child would need five years to acquire. That is because Baby Peggy is being daily trained to use her subconscious mind through the mental suggestion she receives in her picture work. The ordinary child uses only the objective mind."

Mme. Haun put Peggy to a severe test in concentration. The child was told to fix her eyes on a given point and not to remove them until told. All means were used to try to divert Peggy's attention, without success; even when the studio dog was called into the room Peggy's eyelids fluttered for a second only, but her eyes remained fixed on the mark.

Mme. Haun was truly astonished at the results of this test and pronounced Baby Peggy as possessing one hundred per cent concentration powers.

"With every one of her brain cells constantly being developed, Baby Peggy can excel in anything she attempts," Mme. Haun continued. "Her acting ability, great as it is, may not be her greatest talent. As her mind expands her creative power will develop, and she will begin to do things of her own accord, to create. Peggy shows no signs of repression, which proves she likes the work she does. Repression manifests in the physical make-up, and to me Baby Peggy appears to be about perfect in that respect."

Mme. Haun spoke a few words of caution to Mrs. Montgomery, mother of the famous starlet.

"Do not allow Baby Peggy to become aware of her talents. This would check her development. Give her only the praise that is given to any child that has done good work, such as 'that is very good, thank you.' As Peggy grows older teach her that she is not superior to other children, that all children are naturally talented, but that she is especially fortunate in having had her talents discovered and developed."

Baby Peggy will have another week of playtime before beginning work on "Captain January," which will be her first feature production under her new three-year contract with the Principal Pictures Corporation.

STAGE EXPERIENCE NOT ESSENTIAL

Much has been said anent the importance of stage experience for the motion picture actor, yet Lloyd Hughes, who has just finished the male lead in Zane Grey's "The Heritage of the Desert," is one of the prominent screen players who has never appeared on the stage.

"While stage experience helps, the fact that a person has not appeared in the 'legitimate' is no reason why he or she cannot achieve success on the screen," says Mr. Hughes, who has been one of the busiest 'free lance' players in Hollywood during the past year.

"Many veterans of the stage find that they must unlearn most of their theatrical tricks when they appear before the camera. It seems to me that a person who starts at the bottom in pictures has just as much chance as the established theatrical actor who obtained his schooling on the stage, if not more so.

"Some of our most popular players have never appeared behind the footlights, and I feel that the stars of tomorrow, on the screen, will come chiefly from within the present ranks of the beginners now in Hollywood."

Mr. Hughes himself is a striking illustration of his contention. Born in Bisbee, Arizona, and the son of a locomotive engineer, Hughes received his education in Los Angeles. While attending the Polytechnic High School and working as a Hollywood butcher boy after school Lloyd decided to become a movie actor.

Without any "pull" or letters of introduction that might help him, Hughes, after many disappointments, finally obtained work as an extra at the Metro studio. Starting thus at the very bottom of the ladder, he worked his way up, and within two years he was playing important parts.

King Vidor gave Hughes his first acting opportunity as the juvenile lead in "I'm a Man," a two-reeler. In this film the young actor had an opportunity to show what he could do, and his efforts won him recognition among producers. Another important part that helped Hughes up the ladder was his characterization in "Hearts of Humanity" for the late Alan Holubar.

When King Vidor received his opportunity to make his first big production, "The Turn in the Road," he selected Hughes to portray the male lead. Followed portrayals opposite Enid Bennett, Viola Dana and then a year's contract with Thomas H. Ince, appearing in some of that producer's most successful plays. As Mary Pickford's leading man in "Tess of the Storm Country" Lloyd won wide popularity. Since then he played the leading male role in "Are You a Failure?" "Her Reputation," "Born of a Cyclone," "The Heritage of the Desert" and other prominent pictures.

Lloyd Hughes' rise to fame was methodical and natural. He did not become famous overnight. He received a thorough schooling in pictures, and to-day is one of the sought-after actors by producers in Hollywood.

Capek Drama For Theatre

"R. U. R.," the weird melodrama by Karel Capek, will have its first showing west of New York with the opening of the play at the Fine Arts Theatre, 730 South Grand Avenue, on Monday evening, December 3rd. It is the second of the productions being presented by Frances Goldwater under the direction of Willamene Wilkes and Dickson Morgan.

The play, dealing with the manufacture of mechanical human beings, is a brilliant satire upon our mechanical civilization. Karel Capek, who is admittedly one of the most original of the modern playwrights, has chosen the grimmest, yet subtlest, arraignment of this strange, mad thing called the industrial society of today. The play works out to a thrilling melodramatic climax that leaves the audiences spellbound.

Miss Wilkes has chosen a splendid cast headed by Kyra Alanova, Katherine Van Buren, William Raymond, Franklin Pangborn and twenty others including Frank Dawson, Jerome Collamore, Inez Lowe, Joseph McManus, Billee Leicester, Wharton James, Carroll Nye, Carl F. Kroenke and Max Pollock.

Family of Star Hoofers

Sure, they did marathon dancing fifty years ago, only it was a solo affair in those days!

Although Jack Lloyd, who appears with Lloyd Hamilton in "Lonesome," never saw his father win a contest, he saw him, as an old man, demonstrate a skill in clog dancing which could hardly be equalled among the star "hoofers" of the present day.

Lloyd senior, known to the English stage as Ike Vernon, for eight years held the world's championship in the Lancashire clog, defeating all comers to his native Manchester. The awards were made on endurance as well as style, and Vernon's record was one hour five minutes of continuous step dancing, at the end of which time he was so exhausted that it took him several weeks to recover completely.

But, true to tradition, whenever Dad saw little Jack begin to shake a leg, he picked up a ruler and told him to stop it, now! So Jack said it with song, in English vaudeville and American musical comedy, and then went into the movies!

KNOWS WHY MEN LEAVE

"I can tell you why men leave home," announced A. P. Younger, known in the haunts of the screen literati as Bill. A. P. is one of the few men in Hollywood who never has left home. He has just written an original story, based on Avery Hopwood's play "Why Men Leave Home," for John M. Stahl, and has gathered a lot of interesting data on the subject from the unhappily married. That's one's of the reasons for Bill's success. He chooses subjects which provide an unlimited scope for research.

"A man does not pack his Gladstone and make a dignified exit when his wife, in a fit of whimsy, throws the kitchen stove at him," insists Bill. "In the first place, that's one of those big vital affairs in life that must be faced—if her aim is good. In the second place, he's probably unconscious and can't run.

"It's the little things that make the big scandals—that drives the T. B. M. to figuring how much alimony he can afford and dividing it by half. Just let the lady of the house systematically forget to put clean towels on the rack and watch her husband's dust as he hot foots it to his lawyers.

"Or let her begin reading the newspaper over his shoulder just as he is discovering that his pet stock has fallen 10 points. These are the domestic tragedies that make Greek drama seem as cheery as Pollyanna on a particularly glad day," concludes Bill with the gesture of the man who knows.

At any rate, these are some of the reasons that promise to make Stahl's production of "Why Men Leave Home" an amusing analysis of the matrimonial complex.

Mickey McBan is one proud kid these days! He is on location at Sonora, California, with the "Buck" Jones company from the Fox studios, directed by William Wellman, and has been presented with a complete western outfit by the star. It consists of chaps, boots, spurs, quirt, bandana, beaded vest, cuffs, and Stetson. To top it all they have a Shetland pony for him there and he is being taught to ride by one of the cowboys. One of his stunts is lariat throwing and Mickey is an expert in this, especially when it comes to lassoing a chicken. He will return to Hollywood some time within the next three weeks in company with his mother who is in Sonora with him.

GETS MADRID SHAWL

Carmel Myers, featured in "The Slave of Desire" is the recipient of the first Christmas gift to arrive in Hollywood.

A Spaniard with a penchant for doing both his Christmas shopping and shipping early, and evidently an ardent admirer of Carmel, sent her a pretty shawl from Madrid.

SCANS NEWSPAPERS RELIGIOUSLY

Few people really digest the contents of daily newspapers as does George Melford. The motion picture producer reads every section carefully and makes notes of interesting events. Quite often he gets ideas from these notes which become integral parts of his photoplays.

A peep into his notebook of this week's news reveals:

Funniest story: Man, about to be tried for violation of the Wright Act, is freed when evidence, a jug of homebrew, explodes.

Saddest: Priest in San Francisco holds up traffic while he prays over dying youth run down by street car.

Finest: Divorced wife, given custody of child, sees former husband's heart breaking because of separation from baby. She agrees to let him have their child half the time.

BOASTS GREAT STAGE ANCESTRY

The movie actor with the oldest theatrical lineage has been found.

He is Conway Tearle, popular stage and screen player.

While at first blush, this might tend to start something among actors who can trace their theatrical ancestors back for many years, it appears that Mr. Tearle's claim will stand unprotested when it is found that his mother's family, the Conways, have been actors since 1712.

Thus for over two hundred years the ancestors of Tearle have entertained audiences. It is safe to say however, that more people have seen Conway Tearle, through the vast circulation of the screen, than have seen all his ancestors combined.

Mr. Tearle's grandfather, William Augustus Conway, was the greatest Shakespearean actor of his day—in 1850. Conway Tearle was five when he made his debut on the stage in "Damon and Pythias." With the exception of the two years he spent as a professional boxer in England, he has been an actor ever since.

Contrary to the popular belief, Mr. Tearle is a born American and not an Englishman. He is a product of "Little old New York" and moved to England with his parents at an early age. He received his education in England while engaged as an actor and received his lessons much along the lines now practiced by movie kiddies—between scenes.

And than every once in a while there is a missive that tells of a lost mine or buried treasure to be gotten for the price of a little expedition into some faraway place and if Mong will finance the adventure he will be rewarded with millions of dollars in gold and jewelry.

SCANS HISTORY'S PAGES

With a modesty that is racially characteristic, despite the exaggerated sketches with which we are all familiar, American motion picture producers have, it seems, filmed the history of practically every other country before our own.

Now, however, we are reading of a number of projected pictures that will be based on various interesting highlights of American history. We have had "The Covered Wagon," Griffith is now making what promises to be an epic of the Revolution, and Barthelmess is filming a Nathan Hale story.

Two large producing firms in Hollywood have offered Wanda Hawley the principal female role in their forthcoming picturization of episodes from our own history. Both stories are laid just before and during the Revolutionary era, and as a consequence, Miss Hawley is collecting a bibliography of Americans and studying with great earnestness and zeal.

Like all of us who have occasion to go back to it after we get out of school, she is finding a wealth of romance and drama with which our own history is embellished, but with which few of us are acquainted, in the glamour of knowledge of the French Revolution, the Cromwellian uprising and other incidents of European history, whose chief attraction is that their locale is three thousand miles distant.

HYPNOTIZES WITH ACCORDION

Music hath charms to soothe the savage beasts; but it takes an accordian to make Freddie go thru his paces. Such is the experience of Syd Chaplin who is now in Yuma, playing the featured male role in Thomas H. Ince's present production, "The Galloping Fish." The title part of the story is being created by Freddie, a trained seal.

Many of Syd's scenes are played with the amphibian. In one of them he tries to put the seal through its paces but it refused to listen to his commands at all. Accordingly, Syd tried the influence of the studio orchestra. He even bought a harmonica and tried that—but to no avail. Finally, Syd had the inspiration—an accordion; it worked worked like a charm and now the seal goes through his stunts just as a well-trained movie actor should: with just one rehearsal. Thus keeping down the overhead, that dread bugaboo of the motion picture industry.

Incidentally, Syd threatens to bring his accordion home!

Under the supervision of Dick Jones, Roy Del Ruth is holding daily rehearsals with a new comedy unit, expecting to be in production with his company in a few days for the screening of a special situation comedy story, for which a carefully selected all-star cast has been assembled.

Would Alter Old Epigram

Although King Baggot denies that he is considering the modernization of ancient epigrams, he gave an inkling of his thoughts in that direction during a discussion on literature at Universal City the other day. Baggot agreed that Aesop, Epictetus, Marcus Aurelious and other fathers of epigrammatic thought had a keen insight into human nature, but he insisted that the saying of "a word to the wise is sufficient" doesn't "get across" in these days.

"Possibly it is because the people of today do not give sufficient thought to the meaning of a word," said the famous director who will handle the megaphone on Mary Philbin in her next picture, "The Inheritors," a Super-Jewel production, "or it may be that oft-repeated sayings fail to impress us, but if I were writing a book of max ims I'd make a word to the wise is sufficient read something like this: 'A word to the wise speaks more than volumes to the foolish."

McDONALD FILM TO NEW YORK

William Beaudine, who directed "Misunderstood," the latest Tarkington story, has supervised the editing and titling himself at the Hollywood Studios and the prints will be forwarded to New York within a week, fo rFirst National release in January. Ben Alexander, of former Penrod fame, is again a featured player in this J. K. McDonald production.

SOCIETY QUEEN IN SEA STORY

Martha Marshall, one of the most beautiful of the younger screen actresses, has her first important part in "Superstitution," a sea story now being titled and edited by Louis Weadock at the Hollywood Studios for Creative. Miss Marshall comes from the younger social set of Chicago, where her family has been prominent for years. In "Superstitution" she and Marguerite de la Motte divide the feminine acting honors, while the male cast includes John Bowers, Edward Burns, Joseph Dowling, Caesare Gravina and Spottiswoode Aitken.

MUST BE EDISON STOCKHOLDER

An amateur photographer wrote to the Hollyood Studios to ask the amount of light needed to film scenes on interior sets. Harry D. Brown, supervising engineer of the studio had the question put to him, and replied simply: "Not very much is needed. On the Russian throne room set in Halperin's 'Souvenir,' a medium sized set, we had on about 1,200,000 candlepower." Brown, who installed the Universal City lighting plant, evidently thinks in big terms.

LIVES ARE SIMILAR

Jack Jungmeyer, prominent writer and Los Angeles manager of a leading newspaper syndicate, and Carmel Myers discovered a common bond during the course of a recent interview granted by the motion picture star ot the news writer. Both were children of a minister. Both spent their early years as models for other youngsters and were forced to repress their spontaneous desires and act as befitted the tradition of their families. They talked for hours of the things they had wanted to do as youngsters and had not been able to do until they grew up.

"One reason so many ministers' daughters turn to the stage or screen and so many ministers' sons became writers or actors is because they have to live within themselves, to suppress their natural expressions, for many years," the news writer declared. "When they are released from their bondage, naturally they have much stored up within themselves which they must express."

"You are right, emphatically right," came the quick reply. "I have known that ever since I emerged from the limitations that bound me. But never before have I found anyone who understood just what I meant."

Craufurd Kent, who is playing the heavy in Richard Walton Tully's screen version of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold" for First National, was once a marine underwriter in London.

DOT LAUGHS LAST

For years Dot Farley, known to moving picture patrons as star, leading and character woman(also an interpreter of ingenue characters, has laughed at the idea of being associated with Mack Sennett pictures over a period of eight or nine years, without even once being requested to appear in a bathing suit.

Some thought there were good and sufficient reasons for her not appearing as a sea-going actress, while the lady herself admitted to "perfect form." Well, at any rate, and to shorten the story, Dot is laughing louder now than ever, for after all these years she has finally been asked to don the beach attire, and Oh! boy.

Dot stands out in the cast of "Trifling," the new Sennett two reel comedy special, like a million dollars. We can just imagine what envy she would have created among the former Sennett bathing girls, had she so appeared in competition with those who have since become stars.

MOORE VICTOR IN BEARD TOURNEY

"Let your beard grow."

This was Maurice Tourneur's order to Owen Moore, Jean Hersholt, Joseph Kilgour, Morgan Wallce and George Cooper recently. The beards were necessary for a sequence in "Torment," M. C. Levee's newest First National film depicting the characters of the story as they appear from day to day when entombed in the vaults of a bank in Japan following the earthquake.

The following morning Morgan Wallace appeared on the scene with a thick stubble on his face.

"I'd like to see someone beat me in beard growing," was Wallace's reply to the murmurs of admiration over the rapid growth of his hirsute adornment.

"I'll beat you," exclaimed Moore. "Watch out for me tomorrow."

The next day Moore appeared with a beard. And what a beard! It dangled to the ground and got twisted around his legs when he walked. It would have made the Smith Brothers green—yes, even red—with envy.

"No one can beat me as a beard raiser," exclaimed Moore, adding: "Not as long as there's a bed mattress in the house."

I. W. Irving is selecting a cast for his first proto-drama for the United Producers and Distributors, the working title of which is "Devotion." Gladys Brockwell, Sheldon Lewis and June Norton are among his first choices.

A real Italian restaurant has been reproduced for "Racing Luck," Monty Banks' first five reel feature directed by Herman C. Raymaker. There are many such in New York where the scene is laid. The red table covers, the typical crowd, minus only the "vino de pasto" which used to be the most important note, are the characteristics of this realistic scene.

INVENTS NEW MAH JONGG

Alfred Allen, the "Uncle W ley" Sinton of Gene Stratton-P ter's book and screen producti "A Girl of the Limberlost," is inventive genius in addition having been a university profess editor, playwright, author of s eral books and stories, and scr player. CUTTING HIS 425TH PICTURE

Lloyd Nosler, film editor for Fred Niblo has started cutting his four hundred and twenty-fifth picture for the screen. Mr. Nosler is one of the veteran film cutters and for the past seven years has been identified with the film editing end of many of the super-productions.

He joined the Niblo troupe of the Louis B. Mayer company when the director started "The Famous Mrs. Fair." Next he cut "Strangers of the Night" for Mr. Niblo and is now engrossed upon "Thy Name is Woman."

Cutting is a business of its own. There is something mighty fascinating about the hand that controls the entire making or breaking of a picture. And the cutter's hand comes very near doing that. Knowing the proper tempo—putting the right scene in just where it belongs and cutting at the right instant is an art indeed.

Mr. Nosler's work starts with the very first shots of the picture. He is engaged in compiling each day's work—goes over it with the director and by the time the last shots are filmed the skeleton outline put together by Mr. Noslet is an excellent guide for the work which is to follow. The cutter and director then work together, putting the right piece in or taking out as the case may be, until the production reaches the stage for the public to view.

SLUMP GIVES BELVA BOOST

"No, the rumored studio depression doesn't refer to a wave of gloomy pictures," says Belva French, the little blonde actress, who is playing an important role in Victor Hugo Halperin's new production, "Souvenir," at the Hollywood studios. "It just means giving some of us a better chance

"It was a slump that pushed me out of pictures, and now another slump is giving me a boost back into screen work."

Belva was a kid star appearing in Kilroy Britten's "O Daddy" in Chicago at nine years old. After its successful run she was taken back to her home in Louisville, Ky., and put into the Conservatory of Music."

She was with Raymond Hitchcock in his famous "Hichy Koo," featured as an eccentric dancer and "blue" singer. Then came the lure of the camera, but before Miss French was firmly established along came the slump and sent her back to singing. Now, however, she declares she is in to stay—with stardom as her goal.

Dolly Rich and Robert Ramsay are being featured in "Unarmed," a new type of Western written especially for Stuart Mack Productions by L. V. Jefferson, and being filmed under Clayton Grandin's direction at the Mack studio. A series of six similar to this will be made.

It is an interesting coincidence that the grandfather, and other ancestors before him, of Coy Watson, Jr., who is playing one of the principal roles in support of Mary Pickford in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," were born and reared on the old Haddon Hall estate in Derbyshire, England. Coy's makeup of blue eyes, long blonde hair, his pea-gum leather jacket, pointed soft shoes and knitted pants are typical of that country at that time.

Lois Zellner, who is completing the editing and titling of the Lawson Harris production, "Then You'll Remember Me," has received an offer to co-direct a series of her own photoplays to be made by Chinese capital in the Orient.

The brilliant scenarist expects to sail with a Hollywood staff and cast in about six months.

It is expected that Robert Ober, brilliant screen and stage player who is now playing in "Punchenello" at the Columbia in San Francisco, will join the cast of "The Waning Sex" at Egan's before he contracts for his next screen appearance.

Helen Gilmore and Lyle Tayo play with Hal Roach's "Our Gang" in the picture they are now making. They have both appeared in a number of these comedies.

Since no member of the Wampas came forward to play the publicity man and do the fall off the roof, in Jack White's "Film Foolish," the part was given to an actor, Jimmy Hertz. (He says it does, too—where he hit the ground!)

Trench mud has its compensations—in peace time.

At least, so say forty overseas veterans who worked this week in support of Lloyd Hamilton in his new comedy, directed by Fred Hibbard.

The boys had to do scenes in the mud, and although mud can't do much harm to regulation olive-drab, Mr. Hamilton made it the excuse to add to each "Buddy's" check the price of a cleaning bill!

In his new melodramatic comedy of feature length, Monty Banks is suddenly called upon to drive a racing auto and practices hard on a Ford. To his surprise, when he climbs into the racing car it is altogether different and to make matters worse, the villian has locked the gears and sealed the gas supply so that he cannot stop the machine. How he wins out in spite of handicaps forms a thrilling climax. The picture is called "Racing Luck" and is directed by Herman C. Raymaker.

HELENE HAS SCENARIO AMBITIONS

Helene Chadwick, popular Goldwyn star, is about to shine in a new firmament.

Her activities during her recent vacation have just been disclosed. Miss Chadwick has not been horseback riding or boating during her absence from Hollywood, but has been busily engaged in writing her first scenario.

Not content with her achievements as an actress, Miss Chadwick has ambitions to create stories for the silver sheet during her spare time and is now placing the finishing touches to what her friends declare to be one of the most novel plots yet conceived for motion pictures. Collaborating with Helene in writing the story is her mother, who accompanied the actress on her "vacation."

Miss Chadwick has written various essays and poems in the past which have attracted much attention among her friends. She is of the belief that original stories, especially written for the screen, are at last coming into their own.

"The original story is bound to come into its own sooner or later, and I think the time is now at hand when the limited supply of stories that can be screened effectively is smaller than the demand," says Miss Chadwick. "The folly of paying fabulous amounts for stories that mean nothing as far as motion pictures are concerned is appreciated by producers, and good original stories must fill the gap. Players and others in pictures are in a better position to create ideal screen stories than the layman, and I think the time will come when many players will be writing as well as acting for the silent drama."

CREIGHTON HALE IN VAUDEVILLE

Creighton Hale says the value put on the exclusiveness of the actor is entirely fictitous.

"Formerly the actor on the speaking stage left the foot lights and the earth swallowed him up. To be seen with the naked eye was unseemly. Only with the opera glass could he be viewed," he declares.

"Screen actors have always been otherwise. Limitless in the roles they portray, it behooves them to have the widest contacts, for in this way they are bound to extend their knowledge of life. 'Mingle and learn something is a good axion. When an actor has something to offer, the best thing in the world is a personal appearance for it means a connecting link between him and the audience."

Mr. Hale is preparing for the two-a-day in a short vaudeville tour and says it will be a real pleasure to have the direct contact again with the public.

Eugenie Besserer, prominent character artist, has become a serious "real estater." She now possesses three beautiful homes in the Edendale hills. These are grouped about a remarkable terraced garden which is one of the show places of that district.

Theodor von Eltz completed his last scenes last week in Universal's "The Turmoil," an engagement of eight weeks in a leading role as a captain of industry.

BLAME EFFICIENCY MEN

Movie magnates may yet prevent closing the studios.

Producers no longer need wring their hands in despair at high production.

The cause for expensive pictures for which Hollywood has been searching, has been discovered by Conway Tearle, popular leading man.

It's the studio efficiency man!

Mr. Tearle relates of an incident that happened about a year ago. A director ordered two living room sets which played an important part in the story. The contrast of the two rooms was particularly important to some of the big situations.

The director and his players finished work in one room and were ready to move into room number two. But there was no second room.

"There's no sense in going to the expense of building two living rooms—you can take all your scenes in the one," was the efficiency man's explanation.

The company was delayed in its work to the extent of $5,000 before the tangle was straightened out and the players could go to work.

Maurice Tourneur has come to bat with the remedy. "Hire efficiency men to check the work of the efficiency men," says the director.

"Or shoot all efficiency men before you 'shoot' a scene," says another director who unlike Tourneur, has daily "interviews" with an e. m.

QUIET PERFORMANCE ON BRONCO

As a cowpuncher, John Roche admits that he is a good opera singer. Roche is the "Buddy Briskow" of Richard Walton Tully's "Flowing Gold," now in production for First National. Buddy is the awkward, overgrown son of a Texas nester. Yesterday on location, it became necessary for Roche to make a flying leap onto the deck of a broom-tailed bronco, and having really been educated for grand opera rather than for the Tom Mix type of movies, he landed on the critter amidships, neglecting to arrive with a foot on either side of the brute.

The mustang bethought himself of greener pastures or something more pleasant, and in the vernacular of the southwest, "went away from there pronto." Bucking and snorting, over the hills and far away went the fiery steed, with the young actor gamely staying with him, albeit each jolt was being negotiated with the pit of his stomach in intimate contact with the saddle horn.

At last, with a mighty effort, he swung clear of the horse, striking heavily on his head, and was for a few moments stunned, but miraculously escaped serious injury. The bronco, when last seen, was headed toward Santa Barbara, and "still going strong."

As if the god of ill luck had not done his worst for the day, when Roche arrived home from location at night, it was to find that his mother had fallen and broken her wrist while engaged in her housework.

Park Train on TNT Cache

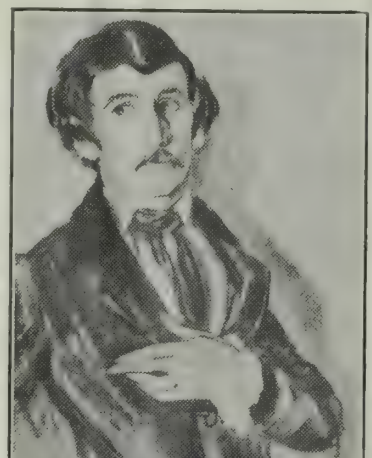
D. W. Griffith returned yesterday from Virginia to his Mamaroneck studios, after photographing scenes on eleven historical spots for his Revolutionary film, "America."

The surrender of Cornwallis was taken in Yorktown on the ground where it actually occurred. More than forty persons whose ancestors were present at the surrender took part in the scenes.

Yorktown gave Griffith a thrill by parking his special train on a siding around which was buried a cache of T N T said by government officials to be valued at two hundred million dollars. This is the army base for high explosives, and the tracking where the train stood was on government property.

Julia Brown, ten-year-old comedienne, who has appeared in eight Universal productions, is now in Sonora, Calif., on location with the Jack Hoxie company filming "The Drifter" under direction of Robert Bradbury.

Marian Nixon, leading lady for Charles Jones in his latest William Fox picture, "Cupid's Fireman," has been cast opposite John Gilbert in his new production, "Just Off Broadway."



An interesting sketch by Russell Iredell of William Moran, noted character actor, as John Wilkes Booth in the Rockett Bros. production entitled "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln." This role affords Moran further opportunity to display his superb artistry, giving to the portrayal a mellowing and realistic tone with which he has been rarely endowed heretofore.

Knows About Abandonment

Ten times has small Bruce Guerin been abandoned for the camera —or, if rehearsals count, 'most a hundred times—for in each of the ten films in which the clever youngster has appeared he has always been cast as a woeful, homeless waif because of his natural skill in portraying pathos. Just now he is playing with Viola Dana in a new picture, having been loaned by Warner Brothers, and, as usual, he gets abandoned while Vi goes off to have a good time with an artist. But Bruce has the satisfaction of being "found" again in the last reel, and the nice party that Vi gives for him then makes up for all the "bandonings," as Bruce calls them, that have studded his silversheet career.

William Blaisdell has been added to the cast of Monty Bank's new five-reeler, "Racing Luck." He plays the proprietor of a big New York cafe, where Monty and Helen Ferguson make a hit with their dances of Italy. Martha Franklin has been engaged to play the mother, and James Donnelly the father of Monte in the picture.

Has Dope on Realtors

Place: Cahuenga Pass at twilight on Sunday.

Characters: Betty Compson, escort and about ten thousand motor cars with drivers.

Miss Compson, in despair: "We will never get over the Pass with traffic blocked for blocks and blocks."

Escort: "There must be at least twenty thousand automobiles on this boulevard. Where do they all come from?"

Miss Compson: "Just the Valley real estate salesmen returning home from work, old deah."

Block Will Buy Plays

Within the next fortnight Ralph Block, former New York dramatic critic and more recently supervisor of productions for Famous Players-Lasky, will leave for New York to negotiate with theatrical producers for the screen rights to a number of current stage successes, which he plans to picturize and direct for next season.

Block has spent more than a year with Famous, during which period he adapted twenty popular stories, books and plays. His most recent adaptation was "The Stranger," filmed under the direction of Joseph Hanaberry, with Betty Compson, Tully Marshall, Richard Dix, Lewis Stone and others in the cast. He also picturized "First and the Last," the first John Galsworthy short story to reach the screen.

LAUD CHIEFS AS EDITORS

It used to be the fashion for the actors and not for the literary members of filmdom to deride the production executives at the various studios. Their financial shrewdness was granted, but their intelligence in other lines was declared nil.

Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin, that busy team of collaborators on originals, adaptations and titles, report entirely varying experience. According to them, the production manager and vice-president of one of the largest companies here, possesses the finest flair for the right word in a title of anybody in Hollywood. A certain other studio manager sat down with them and the director on a particular production, and in a half hour has given concrete editorial suggestions which improved the cutting of a picture a hundred percent. One of our largest producers, with whom they have been associated on a story, reveals an uncanny feeling for meeting the public's expectation in plot development.

Such statements seem almost heretical, and flaunting the literary fashion; but Cowan-Higgin declare that they are based on their own actual experience. So it seems there IS some hope for motion pictures after all!

CARMEL SAYS JOHN BEST

Who is the greatest lover of the screen?

Here's a question that will no doubt start something among public and movie players themselves.

Carmel Myers arises to remark that John Barrymore is the great lover of the silver sheet as well as the stage. And Carmel should know for she has appeared on the screen for nigh going on to five years and has been made love to—on the screen y'understand—by the greatest male "thrillers" in Hollywood.

Miss Myers, who is appearing opposite Mr. Barrymore in "Beau Brummel" at the Warner Studio, has this to say: "Speaking entirely impersonally and professionally, John Barrymore is the greatest lover on the screen.

"This is not said to the detriment of the many talented screen lovers whom I have acted with in recent years. They are splendid—but Barrymore is wonderful.

"There is a certain finesse, a certain polish to Mr. Barrymore's love-making that I have never encountered before among the popular lovers of the screen.

"There is a sureness on Mr. Barrymore's part that I could well understand, to be irresistible. It is indeed rather hypnotic. His is not the wild, passionate flare that takes you off your feet nor is it the mild hesitating kind that bores one.

"John Barrymore could be crowned the Great Lover of the Screen."

Has Pair of Barges

In his role of a little French boy in Viola Dana's new picture, small Bruce Guerin has to wear a quaint peasant costume and wooden shoes. They're so big everybody says: "Shoes, where are you going with that little boy?" "See my boats?" Bruce cries, as he clap-claps about the studio. The other day when Director George Baker called for a scene, the youngster was not in evidence, an unusual thing, as well-trained Bruce always sits quietly in his little chair by the set, playing with his toys. After a search of the studio he was discovered beside the pond in the Metro back yard. One of his shoes was valiantly surviving its duty as a "boat," floating, as Bruce explained, "out to sea," the other having wobbled a last farewell and sunk to the bottom. But it was rescued by an assistant, and, his "boats" dried out, Master Bruce returned to the set. "Anyway," he consoled himself, "one of 'em makes a good boat. An' if I don't like it around here I'll just go to sea, I will."

Jack Mintz and Jack Dawn are assistant directors to Herman C. Raymaker for Monty Banks' feature, "Racing Luck."

"A pair of Jacks," observed Raymaker.

"Yes, we've got openers, anyway," said Monty.

One must be familiar with poker to appreciate the allusion.

New York Xmas for Hughes

New Year's Eve in New York!

Theaters. Crowds. Shops. Tobogganing.

All the joys of a winter in the East.

Cold. Sleet. Slush. Wet feet. Frozen ears. Blizzards.

All the discomforts of the world's worst climate.

These are to be the lot of Lloyd Hughes and his wife, known on the screen as Gloria Hope, this winter.

Born and raised under the clear skies of Arizona, with his youth and early manhood spent in Los Angeles and its incomparable climate, Hughes has never been east of the Rockies. Now he is going—definitely and conclusively he has made up his mind to take the trip.

Sometime in December he will pack his trunk, buy his ticket and get on the train. Several weeks of "playing around" will follow. Then, possibly, a picture or two at a Long Island studio.

In March or April he will return.

Coy Watson, father of Coy Watson, Jr., famous screen kid, and himself identified with the motion picture profession for over a decade, is supervising the wire effects for Douglas Fairbanks' "The Thief of Bagdad."

Crown Jewels in Film Plot

The famous smuggled crown jewels of Russia, which are thought to be hidden in the United States, play an important part in the story of Maurice Tourneur's "Torment," new M. C. Levee photoplay for First National.

Ever since the crown jewels disappeared various sensational reports have appeared in the press throughout the country, the most recent having been caused by the supposition that the jewels were in Los Angeles.

In the Tourneur production replicas of some of the jewels are brought to the United States by a Russian nobleman who arranged to sell the bulk of the jewels, which are hidden in the vaults of a bank in Japan, to Americans.

The Americans turn out to be a ring of notorious crooks who accompany the Russian to Japan. Just as the robbery is perfected the first earthquake of the recent catastrophe wrecks the bank and entombs all the characters of the story in the vaults. With the jewels, the crooks and their victims confined to the two rooms of the vaults and with no nourishment for days excepting the drops of water which trickle from one of the broken pipes, Tourneur weaves the most dramatic sequence he has ever attempted for the screen, it is said. Among the players are Owen Moore, Bessie Love, Josepr Kilgore, Maude George, Morgan Wallace, Jean Hersholt and George Cooper.

HELENE MAY BUILD

Helene Chadwick, after two weeks in Northern California where she spent her vacation with her mother, has returned to Hollywood and has started plans for the building of her own home here.

For the next few weeks Miss Chadwick will be among those absent from the Goldwyn studio and will be busy with architects and builders in planning what bids fair to be one of the most novel homes in Southern California.

Before she resumes work at the studio, Miss Chadwick expects to have the building of her first house, well under way. Among the features planned for her new home by Miss Chadwick are a complete gymnasium, an aviary for a large collection of rare birds, a swimming pool large enough for canoeing and garden in which will be planted trees from all parts of the globe. The home will be electrically heated and lighted, no gas or other fuel being used anywhere in the house.

For more thantwo of her five years, Priscilla Moran has been known as the "hard luck kid" of the movies. Wherever she went a jinx followed her and saddened her with death, disappointment and the sorrows of an average lifetime. At last the jinx seems to be broken. The little star is with her father and is now starting out as the star of her own producing company at the Hollywood Studios.

Figures That Lie By MARGUERITE COURTOT McKEE

Most of us laugh at the man who shudders when a black cat crosses his path, the man who does not play golf laughs at the man who does, and so it goes, folks wear clothes that seem funny to everybody except their owners. Yesterday, good form forbade the wearing of jewels in daytime, especially with street dress and the gown itself was made with attention to ornamental detail. But the up-to-date frock is "as plain as your old hat," and therefore is a foundation for baubles and semi-precious stones, such as (not real) diamonds, crystals, matrix and a thousand colored stones, heavy blues, cool greens and heavenly rainbows, are to be seen circling the throat of the fashionable woman. There are even charming ornaments that may be worn with mourning, the combination of onyx and crystal are proper, or a chain of alternating black and white diamonds.

The raisin growers ask, "Have you had your iron today?" I want to know, whether you have bought your highly-colored wrap for the chilly nights we're having? Don't be afraid to get it loud, tangerine is a safe and sane color if not exactly conservative. And don't forget to buy your Swede hat because they are wearing them in Paris and New York city now. A friend of mine who has just returned from "the other side," showed me some wonderful frocks that made my mouth water. There was one straight frock for wear under a fur coat, made of a novelty woolen material in a warm tan shade, inverted pleats at the sides to give room for walking; the bateau-shaped collar and cuffs and stunning. Smart Parisians are wearing long lines in the daytime and blossom out in stiffened hip-full skirts in the evening.

Things are not always what they seem, even as women are not always as rosy as they are painted, still cosmetics will always enabl woman to keep a stiff upper lip. I think it man and not mirror that caused woman to about her looks. Every woman should k what kind of skin she has and care for it cordingly. Those with oily complexions sh use fluids and lotions. Paste, any kind, t or thin, should always be reserved for the e ning. A heavy make up is not in good t and is only permissible on a very young wom As a woman grows older she should us deeper toned powder, pink faces upon an eld woman might be amusing; at least it is not mode. Women should study the style of face and should then arrange her appeara accordingly. Each of us have a persona and should bring it out. If your instinct c not guide you, go to the large hotels, and st the well dressed women you see there. not exaggerate. Be natural.

Beauty in Elk Film

One of Eastern Canada's most noted beauties is to be given a role in the Renalles production, "The Elk's Tooth," according to an announcement by Clarke Renalle, President and General Managing Director of the corporation.

Under the patronage of Lord Byng, Governor-General of Canada, and other prominent public figures, the Montreal Lodge of Elks staged a five-day Fall Festival, the principal feature of which was the selection of the "Montreal Queen." Through an arrangement consummated between the Montreal Elks and Renalle, the young woman acclaimed queen will be dispatched to Hollywood to undergo camera tests and a role will be assigned accordingly in "The Elk's Tooth.' Production is slated to commence late in January.

Although it is not probable that any of the scenes of the picture will be filmed in Canada, the Montreal Elks did not wait to see what their American brethren would do in support of the picture, but hastened to record their approval and tender their moral support of the production whose main theme carries an eloquent plea for the preservation of the monarch of the forest, the elk. Despite the various conflicting rumors relative to this picture no B. P. O. E. money is behind the venture, nor has any been solicited since the entire project is being financed by Renalles, Inc. However the Montreal Elks were quick to see the value of the film as applied to them and have given it their endorsement, together with a promise of the heartiest moral support. All financial returns from the production will be the exclusive property of the producing corporation, and the fraternity will not benefit a whit insofar as money is concered.

Renalles have just published a condensed novelization of "The Elk's Tooth" which is to be filmed from the story by Mr. Renalle who has been prominent as sportsman, director, author and stage producer for years. Complimentary copies of the book have been sent to President Coolidge and the members of his cabinet, the Governors of all of the States, the Governor-General of Canada and his staff, and to the Grand Lodge and all Elk lodges in the United States, Canada and Newfoundland.

The greater portion of "The Elk's Tooth" will be shot at Jackson's Hole, Wyoming, which is the habitat of the only remaining large herd of elk in this country. The Yellowstone Park authorities are to assist in the making of the picture.

Sings With Shadow Self

The career of Miss Ruth Gillette, dramatic soprano, whose musical voice for several years past has charmed Chicago theatre-goers, has been closely bound up since her arrival in Los Angeles a year ago with Universal's production of Victor Hugo's masterpiece, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," now showing at the Criterion Theatre.

Miss Gillette, after years of study under a number of coaches of note, including Charles La Berge of the American Conservatory of Music, appeared in a number of operatic engagements, and was placed under contract with Balaban & Katz of Chicago, to appear in the Chicago, Rivera, Tivoli and other Chicago houses. A year ago she came to Los Angeles, and since that time has been under the management of the DeRecat-Bostick Company.

Shortly after her arrival here she visited hte Universal studios with friends, and for the novelty, accepted a small part in "The "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which Wallace Worsley was then directing. During the times when the cast were waiting on the set, between scenes, it was the usual thing for Miss Gillette and others to amuse themselves by singing. Her voice attracted the attention of Mr. Worsley, and when singers for the prologue which part of the Criterion presenta were selected, Miss Gillette induced to become one of them. she is now singing the "A Maria" as a solo number, as as in the chorus work, for a ture in which she herself is p trayed.

A large photograph of li Mary Kornman, leading lady Hal Roach's "Our Gang" hangs the Ambassador Hotel. She dressed in the chic riding habit wore during the filming of "De Days," and is shown riding prize-winning horse.

Grace Darmond has comple her work in "Discontented H bands," the Waldorf Product under the direction of Edward Le Saint. James Kirkwood, thur Rankin, Cleo Madison, Carmelita Geraghty are also in cast.

Pierre Gendron, who was author of the successful Broadw farce, "Cold Feet," has been c for a prominent role in support John Gilbert in his new Willi Fox picture, "Just Off Broadwa

Winifred Dunn, scenario editor for Metro, has just commenced her work on the adaptation of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," which Arthur H. Sawyer of S. L. Pictures, will produce for Metro release. Barbara LaMarr will be features in the production as "The Lady That is Known as Lou."

In preparing her script for this famous Robert W. Service poem, Miss Dunn is now collecting a vast library of informational material on Alaska and the Yukon, particularly in the days of the gold rush which are described in this poetical narrative and most of the other Service ballads.

"The Signal Tower," which will be released as a multiple reel faeture, will be completed, after about four weeks of studio work.

Norman Kerry, noted picture actor, whom crowds are acclaiming today for his remarkable characterization in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," is a sad man.

He lost a 170-mile race against Death.

True—it was only a dog that died;—but the blow to Kerry was as severe as tho it had been a close relative. "Boobydoozle," pet oplice dog, favoirte of all his four-footed companions, died Friday night. Kerry, infromed by telephone of the animal's illness, raced from location in the mountains, traveling 170 miles, but arriving only after the animal had breathed its last.

He had promised Universal City officials to attend the opening of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" at the Criterion Theatre in Los Angeles. He went, meeting crowds, accepting congratulations and greeting friends, as he had promised—but he admits his heart wasn't in it.

He loved that dog.

One of the most elaborate wedding scenes filmed in years marked the climax of "Courtin' Calamity," Hoot Gibson's new special production at Universal City. Josie Sedgwick was the bride—her brother, Edward Sedgwick, directed the scene.

The wedding is the climax fo a unique story, revolving about a wild west show, in which Hoot, is the son of an old friend of "the boss," joins the troupe to learn the business, which he does amid many trials and tribulations, finally winning the star cowgirl of the "horse opera."

The picture is replete with thrills and sensations, and punctuated with comic relief in Gibson's adventures on horseback, on the flying stage coach and other Wild West high lights.

A daring automobile race is another feature. Gibson, who at one time in his eventful career was a racing driver, handles his own racing car in this thriller.

The picture also marks Gibson's first effort as a director, for Sedgwick fell ill during the middle of the picture, and the star assumed the directorial reins until he returned from the hospital.

"Courtin' Calamity," now in the editing stage, is one of the Universal-Gibson

Raymond McKee is one of "Camera's most enthusiastic boosters. While in New York, ing the lead in "Down to the Sea in Ships" and making comedies for C. C. Burr he contri a weekly digest of New York film news entitled 'Along the Rialto." Since returning to H wood he's been a very busy man, filling numerous engagements with some of the foremost ducers, but he has still found time to come into our office and lend a hand. Furthermore h done much to increase "Camera's" popularity among his friends and the business men of section.

With this issue his wife, Marguerite Courtot McKee, who played opposite him in "Dow the Sea in Ships" and who is famous in her own right as star of many Seitz serials, begin first of a series of intensely interesting columns for the ladies. Ray will follow with a co of his own, the style of which is yet to be decided.

It is this co-operation upon the part of Mr. and Mrs. McKee and other professional p that distinguishes "Camera" from all other film papers. It is "of, by, and for the people make pictures"; The Digest of the Motion Picture Industry.

It is only comparatively recently that we have taken to analyzing the causes of success of certain pictures, or of certain actors, or of certain producers; and sex appeal seems to be the favorite explanation. Does this also apply to the successful writer in fil mcircles?

Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin, one of the busiest literary teams in filmland, answer an emphatic affirmative.

"Sex conflict is ,after all, the underlying basis of all drama; and we feel that we have this fundamental factor in our collaboration. We argue about a certain character development, come to an apparent impasse, and then re that one of us is naturally upholding the man's end, and the other is just as staun upholding the man's angle. From the r ant discussion we evolve the particular d opment as we believe the sex conflict w work it out."

Herein lies undoubtedly much of the su that Cowan-Higgin have attained. The tude of both sexes is naturally contained their writings, and just ae naturally it gi their picture work a universal appeal whic made them sought after by motion picture ducers.

"specials" widely advertised. David Torrence is one of the principal character players.

Gladys Hulette, who has just finished her part with Perley Poore Sheehan's "Innocent" at Universal City, will take a vacation for several days before commencing a new role. Miss Hullette recently scored heavily in "The Burglar's Kid" with Baby Peggy.

Reginald Denny, star of "The Leather Pushers," "The Abysmal Brute," and "The Spice of Life," who was seriously injured when his motor car turned over on Sunset Boulevard in Hollywood, is reported to be recovering at a satisfactory rate. His injuries were severe and he will be in a cast for several weeks, but attending physicians state that his unusual strength and all-around physical fitness are making his recovery easy.

Hayden Stevenson may play many different kinds of roles, but most of the time he may be found in "The Leather Pushers" unit if "The Leather Pushers" are being filmed at the time. As the crafty but likable manager, who gets his fighter out of trouble and into combat with profitable regularity, Stevenson has created a role which has caught the fancy of the public. He is now appearing with Billy Sullivan, the new star of "The Leather Pushers," under Edward Laemmle's direction.

Robert Hill, who has just finished directing "Jack O' Clubs" with Herbert Rawlinson at Universal City, is working on an original story of his own. It is the adaptation of a magazine story he wrote some years ago.

The mighty hunters have returned!

Sixty of 'em, armed with every conceivable type of shooting-iron from air-rifles to double-barreled shotguns and German Luger automatics, are home from the redwood forests of Northern California, but with nary a bear, or a deer, or quail, or anything else except memories of hard work and very little play.

Not one of the Nimrods is offering any excuses for the utter lack of trophies of the big hunt ,but the blame is being shouldered by Clarence Brown, director of Super-Jewels for Universal, who figured that the company he took on location into the forest near Fort Bragg should give first attention to the filming of the railroad scenes for "The Signal Tower," and let the quest of game be a second consideration.

When Director Brown's production aides, players and workmen learned they would live in the wilderness for at least six weeks, they scurried about to secure some sort of firearm, and those who possessed neither revolver, rifle or shotgun, borrowed them from friends or procured them from the arsenal at Universal City.

summer camp eight miles from location. There are no automobile or wagon roads anywhere near the forest, so the railroad company provided transportation in the shape of trailers drawn by a gasoline speeder. The first morning out everyone was "loaded for bear," and just itching for the sight of a squirrel, or an elephant, or anything that would prove prey for their bullets and shells. But nothing came into view save the giant redwoods, so the guns were piled up for the day. For three weeks Brown worked his cast and aides so hard from sunrise to sunset that no one had any time, or energy, to wander off in search of game or fowl. Then the order came that the next three weeks would be given over to night work exclusively.

"Fine," thought everybody, "we can spend part of our days hunting." But the night sessions were long and hard and the days were given over to absolute rest. The cold was intense at the camp, and when it was rumored there was a lone bear in the neighborhood Assistant Director Charles Dorian looked at the heavy frost on the ground and opined the animal was no doubt a Polar bear. A day or so after Wallace Beery ceased taking a new automatic shotgun to location with him, quail flew within a few yards of the cameras and the whole company saw a deer when there was not even a pea-shooter in the crowd.

The Sunday before the party returned to Universal City, Director Brown held a late afternoon target contest. Virginia Valli, star of the production, bagged a ginger ale bottle with little Frankie Darro's air rifle. Rockliffe Fellowes surrounded a bullfrog all by himself and finished it with a forty-four calibre bullet at three feet and Mrs. Brown nearly caught a fish.

But when the company arrived back at Universal City to learn that the officials were jubilant over the wonderful stuff that Director Brown had gotten on the location, all hands were comforted to think that such a large and well-equipped hunting party had at least accomplished something of note during their sojourn in the wilderness.

Your Question—and its Answer

QUESTION—"I suffer with continual colds, first in my head, then in my throat and bronchials, and often the lungs are affected. If you can cure me, how long will it take?

ANSWER—You certainly owe it to yourself to have your spine so aligned that susceptibility to colds can no longer exist. The time required to bring about this change is dependent, not upon the severity, character or location of the cold, but entirely upon the time required to correct what is causing the cold. From experience we know that colds come only when the organs of elimination are not functioning properly. These organs include the lungs, skin, kidneys and bowels. Your susceptibility to colds will cease to exist when these four great channels of waste elimination are doing their work as Nature intended. From an examination of your we will be able to give you definite advice as to time required.

Hollywood, Calif.

My Dear Mr. Palmborg:

I wish to acknowledge receipt of checks under the two policies in the New York Life which my husband, Wallace Reid, carried with your Company. While each policy was for $25,000 only, I am receiving a check for $25,166.87 on each policy. This additional amount I understand is the dividend which would have come to the policy had my husband lived to the end of the year.

In addition, I am receiving a check for $250.00 on account of the Disability feature attached to the New York Life policy.

This certainly was one of the best investments that could possibly have been made by Mr. Reid in view of the fact that he paid only two premiums on this insurance and I now receive $50,583.74.

I wish to thank you personally, Mr. Palmborg, for the efficient manner in which you have handled this case and the prompt manner in which the whole affair has been taken care of by yourself and the New York Life.

Yours truly,

MRS. WALLACE REID.

Civic Pride

*"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness * * * but when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a sign to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security."*

—THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

Excerpts from this document, one of the most cherished of its kind ever drafted, bear out in unfailing testimony that the city constitution of Los Angeles has not kept pace with the growth of the community itself. For where, may we ask, are we of this city accorded the national right to the "pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness." Life . . . it's only existence. Liberty . . . well that's the joke. Happiness . . . you're talking Chinese. The pursuit part is true, but we're not doing the pursuing; it's the Police Commission. In fact they've been doing so much pursuing in the past few days that the Wampas are about to afford San Francisco the opportunity to burst out in one loud guffaw this coming February. It will be a horse-laugh on Los Angeles; one well earned.

For years there has been spirited competition between San Francisco and Los Angeles. Each city has made amazing progress in its own way, and Los Angeles has attained world-wide renown as the home of the motion picture industry. 'Tis true that the northern metropolis has made many spirited bids for the film studios, but heretofore civic loyalty has forbade any such thing as our removal to the bay city. Los Angeles has of late been sneering at San Francisco because the Angel stronghold had been making such tremendous forward strides, out all of proportion to those being made by its competitor. The laurels, well within the reach of the southern city, have now been supplanted by a very ornate raspberry, and San Francisco, progressive in a metropolitan way and awake to the merits of the cinema profession, has proffered its aid in staging the Wampas Frolic there. It has been accepted and they will dance in 'Frisco for forty nights and forty days if they so desire. If they dance there they may work there. Quite plausible, isn't it? This, however seems to throw the well-known chill into the business men of Los Angeles and frantic last-minute efforts are being made to alter the laws. The damage is not beyond repair, but it's pretty bad . . . pretty bad. The dumbells in the city hall are not ringing; there will be a Curfew tonight.

This week's bill at the Hippodrome is headed by a thrilling rapid-fire drama of the old West, starring that well known hero—Jack Hoxie in "The Marshall of Moneymint," a two-fisted, upstanding son of the plains, in a cyclonic story of knaves and hearts. It is the story of a youngster alone and unaided, rids a little Western town of a band of evil-doers and wins for himself a beautiful bride.

A classy array of vaudeville will be headed by Johnnie Burns in "Comedy Character Impressions." The Superior Character Comedian —James C. Fulton and Co. in "Any Girl's Papa." A pleasing little skit well played by a clever company. Medell Thompson, a blackface comedian in "The Black Ace," is known as the young Bert Williams. A Musical Comedy Novelty is presented by "The Musical Zanes" a company of real musicians. Their repertoire ranges from classic to the modern rag.

Clifford and Purtell, is a little Irish-Night-in-Gale from far-off Emerald Isle, and sings a number of beautiful selections. She is ably assisted by that clever comedian Mr. Clifford.

Burt and Hyman—"The Incomparable Pair" are seen in one of the cleverest hand balancing and bymnastic exhibitions in vaudeville. The World in Motion and a comedy photoplay conclude the bill.

Universal's tremendous picturization of Victor Hugo's great classic, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," is destined to establish a new record. "The Hunchback," backed by a marvelous reception at the hands of the critics, has created a furore with the general public. Lon Chaney, as Quasimodo, the hunchback bell-ringer of Notre Dame Cathedral, has scored the greatest success of his career from every standpoint. His makeup is a marvel of realism, his own personality being entirely submerged in that of Hugo's famous character.

Patsy Ruth Miller, Norman Kerry, Brandon Hurst, Ernest Torrence, and all the other seventy-five principals in the exceptional cast win new laurels for characterization in their various parts. The film, with it's tremendous, epoch-making settings, gorgeous costuming, and wonderfully-handled mob scenes, forms a background against which move a cast that is a veritable who's-who of filmdom.

Buster Keaton's new feature comedy, "Our Hospitality," the second under his new alliance with Metro, is something entirely new in the comedy field. This production is built out of the humorous side of American life in the early '30's. For the first time Buster makes screen love to his wife, Natalie Talmadge Keaton. Natalie plays the feminine lead, while other members of the Keaton family appearing in the film are Baby Joe (Buster II) and Buster's father, Joseph Keaton. Others in the cast are Joe Roberts, Kittie Bradbury, Jean Dumas, Ralph E. Bushman, Craig Ward and Jack Duffy. Jack Blystone directed "Our Hospitality."

Buster plays a fashionable youth of the pioneer days, known as the railroad building era.

As an added feature, in order to make next week "hilarity week" throughout Los Angeles, Loew's State Theater will present Mack Sennett's latest comedy, "One Cylinder Love" which serves to reintroduce to screen fans the famous Sennett Bathing Beauties.

The Leviathan orchestra, the foremost of a group of Paul Whiteman orchestras engaged to play on the United States Shipping Board liners are the special headline feature of the Hillstreet. The Leviathan orchestra, as its names implies, has been selected as the group of Whiteman jazzers to dispance dance music aboard the giant liner and is only playing a few vaudeville dates under the direction of the U. S. Shipping Board before returning to its trans-Atlantic voyages. In conjunction with the regular dance music there are several soloists, vocal as well as instrumental, and an especially fine saxophone quintette. Morton Downey, a tenor with a sensational lyric voice discovered by Paul Whiteman is the featured vocalist.

D. Apollon, the mandolin wizard and Russian dancer assisted by the Misses Aamona, Bacon and Pavlow will offer "Bi-Ba-Be," a novelty divertissement of color, singing and dancing.

"The Weak Spot," a dramatic one act oddity written by George Kelloy, will be presented by Geo. Harrington, Della Evans and Lydia Willmore.

Jack George, a blackface comedian assisted by Mae Normandie; Nat Carr, singing character comedian and Bernard Bollen's leaping canines will complete the bill.

The feature photoplay for the week will be "The Six Fifty" with Renee Adoree and an all star cast.

So welcome is the Harold Lloyd brand of comedy to Los Angeles and her million people, that his latest mirth-quake, "Why Worry?" swings into its seventh great week tomorrow, at Grauman's Rialto.

Ever since Lloyd started on his career as a film comedian he has steadily traveled forward and "Why Worry?" is his most ambitious production. There are big sets, elaborate backgrounds and six reels of fun in which the star was assisted by John Aasen, the young giant of huge proportions, and pretty Jobyna Ralston.

The latest musical comedy production at the Burbank Theatre is one of the merriest ever devised for the famous Baby Dolls. The production "Couldn't be Sweeter."

So evidently a good measure of entertainment is in store for musical comedy patrons. The illuminated runway presents the Baby Dolls in new special dances and a flashy set of wardrobe creations.

A Sanskrit Inspiration

By GEORGE LANDY

Age is a relative matter, so it is not necesrily of interest that such-and-such a person the youngest successful worker in his, or her, e. That is, not of itself; although the matter age does undoubtedly give an added fillip interest to the story of Winifred Dunn's ucss; for she is the youngest person to hold the st of scenario editor at any of the big studios. ore important, however, is the story of her hievements, how she works, and the ideals d plans that she puts into her scenarios for etro.

Her inspiration has been the following well-own quotation from the Sanskrit: "Look well this day, for it is life—the very life of life. its brief course lie all the verities and realis of your existence, the bliss and growth, the ory of action and the splendor of beauty. For sterday is only a dream and tomorrow only a sion. But today, well lived, makes every yesday a dream of happiness and every tomorw only a vision. But today, well lived, makes ery yesterday a dream of happiness and every norrow a vision of hope! Look well, therere, to this day—such is the saluation of the wn!"

In other words, Miss Dunn feels that the orth-while scenario, the scenario that can be ade into a good picture, is based on the daily currences of real people in real circumstances. fact, she believes that once you have conived your characters and have clothed them flesh, so to speak, they develop themselves turally and without straining the imagination the author. Get your people firmly fixed in ur mind and they will automatically take care not only their own characters but also of e situations into which you plunge them at e outset. In fact, once she has started typing r first draft, Miss Dunn claims that the keys em to print action on the paper, almost with-t her assistance. More—if she is too conious of straining after drama and characterization, even the physical act of typing becomes a hardship, almost an impossibility!

Starting your characters, she says, is like throwing pebbles into a lake of dramatic occurrences; waves are created that go on and on, practically without end, and overlapping all the time. Each of these points of contact is a dramatic moment, a plot situation.

When Winifred Dunn was just a young girl, she and her father moved from Chicago to an island home in one of the Wisconsin lakes, where he gave her the benefit of his own Oxford erudition, turned her loose on a vast library of the classics and led her to become an integral part of Nature. Naturally, her imagination developed with her vocabulary and her feeling for the verities of life. In her teens, she came to Chicago, studied stenography and soon thereafter aided a European playwright to translate and idiomize his script. When he joined the scenario force at Selig Polyscope, then a powerful factor in the film world, she tried her own hand at scenarios and sold her very first effort, entitled "Too Late." Soon she was contributing regularly to this company. In all, she has given over fifty originals to the screen and has adapted more than as many stories by other authors. She has "doctored" a number of successful films, has titled perhaps a score and has even made two of her own productions. Now, she is head of the scenario department at Metro, so her thoughts have the authority of accomplishment behind them.

Too many young writers, says Miss Dunn, misjudge the public's honest desire for realism and give it sordidness, instead. Audiences want a romantic background—even if the costumes and locale are here and in the present—they still insist on the characters of the story being real people, developing logically and naturally.

Further interpreting her inspirational Sanskrit quotation, Miss Dunn urges the importance of every bit of action, every word of dialogue and every minor player in the story. A tiny false note will spoil the mosaic which the good scenario must be. Above all else, she reiterates the caution to keep people human. If they are real to the scenario writer, they will be real to the audiences.

Recently, Winifred Dunn finished the scripts on "The Eagle's Feather" and "Held to Answer,' both forthcoming Metro specials; she collaborated on the scenario of Victor Schertzinger's "The Man Life Passed By," and is now adapting "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," Robert Service's famous poem, soon to be filmed by A. H. Sawyer for Metro release.

Mah Jong!

By Raymond McKee

Mah Jong! As some folks think it should not played.

After reading these articles you will not know y more about that game than the author.

In these days of forced variety, when a feiw who devotes all of his time to perfecting s chosen calling, is called narrow and lacking versatility until most of us feel obliged to iden ur range of study without perfecting our ves in anything, it is something of an advenre to write a column on any subject that anye is apt to know about; therefore, I, Raymond cKee, being of, or at least believing myself be of, sound body and weak mind, (else I re not tackle such a subject), have decided at, as long as I must write something to fill is space, must fill the same with something at folks know very little about, thus giving yself free reign to speak freely. I shall tell l I know about the subject, which will not take ng. My main object being to confuse my aders as much as possible until all readers gage themselves in a civil war and gradually terminate themselves. Mah Jong! Pung how! Mah Diao! Mah Cheuk! and Pe Ling! l mean the same to me. GAME EXTRAORDNAIRE! That is my subject. If you are not terested, read no further—and if you are interested, then read no further, for you'll know ss of the game after you've read it, than bere. The game is not governed by uniform les. Different rules and different methods of play have been adopted in different parts of the country. This is probably due to the fact that the first writers rushed into the papers without going into the original Chinese rules. I am well acquainted with a number of China people and have discussed it until I fully realize that I know nothing of the game, therefore I shall tell you all about it, beginning next week.

There have been many books written about Mah Jong and there will be many more written before even the obvious points of this centuries old game will be revealed. The overnight enthusiast believes the game to have just recently been introduced to this country, while as a matter of fact, and any historical student will bear me out, if I should have the courage to say it. I will have the courage, Mah Jong was, even during the civil war, counted upon to lessen the long hours of General U. S. Grant while waiting for his boys to reload their trusty muzzle loaders. See footnote "P," in Major Cement's History of Traffic Conditions During the Civil War. It reads, in part . . . . and there was no pleasanter sight in the world, than that of the stalwart young Abraham, (meaning Lincoln, o fcourse) in the early days of a rainy day between battles, having his game of Mah Jong. The battles, referred to in the foregoing line, we take to refer to the battles Mr. Lincoln was known to stage with his beloved wife Lizzie, for the reason that Honest Abe was too old during that war for the draft. There is also an old wood cut accompanying the footnote which shows a striking likeness of Honest Abe, trying to remedy a defect in the game which is a delayed call of pung. This snap shot, (flash light, of course, for in those days Kleig lights were almost unknown), was taken immediately after a player, (Carrie Nation, I think it was) had exposed her hand by taking a discard for a sequence. I'm sure we all recall that beautiful old poem, with great pleasure; written by, was it Horace Greely? . . . .

"Who touches a hair of yon grey haid;
Dyes like a dog! Mah JONG! HE SAID!
That alone is proof enough. More Anon!

Wire Walker

By PETER G. SMITH

From circus wire walker to a prominent niche in the hall of screen fame!

From ragamuffin in the streets of Forest City, Pa., to an eventful picture trip to Ireland and back again in the whirl of America's theatrical circles!

That, in brief, would convey a very good idea of what Pat O'Malley, one of the screen's leading players, had to go through to occupy his present unique position in filmdom. After a half hour's chat with O'Malley it would be an unusual procedure if one failed to call him "Pat." And in becoming so intimate the warm humanness that characterizes the man would sparkle in his Irish blue eyes, and in his rose tinted cheeks.

"When I was a kid," said Pat, with a look that brought back visions of the coal mining neighborhood in Forest City, "I had a sneaking desire to become an actor. Just what kind I didn't know then. In fact, I didn't have any time to think about it, because my dad was a coal miner—and all fathers want their sons to follow in their footsteps as closely as possible. There is a certain family pride in that, you know.

"But one day a circus came to town. Right then and there I decided to become eligible for circus work. I didn't know whether to start as the water boy for the elephants, or as a messenger for the circus owner. Neither appealed to me very strongly until I sneaked through a hole in the circus tent, and saw a young couple do a wire walking act. They were so thrilling, that for many days afterwards I could think of nothing else bus the circus and the two wire walking experts. And so I decided to be one of them. But how to do it was a problem.

"When I was about six, an opportunity was afforded me to act in several school entertainments. When I was seven I got another chance to act. At eight still another chance. During these years I was practicing how to walk a wire in my mother's back yard. Many's the time my parents gave me up as being fit only for the insane asylum, since I fell from the wire as often as I tried to keep on it. But I was persistent, and during my eighth year I was given a chance to perform for a local stock company. Well, I apparently made good.

"For several years I performed the wire walking act, played small juvenile bits, carried the drum in street parades, and distributed hand bills before the performances. This work carried me up and down the Lackawanna Valley, in fact throughout most of Pennsylvania. My career had been launched, and I was becoming successful in a small way. So much so that for many years afterward I toured all over America; years which were very trying indeed, but withal full of experiences that have since proved very valuable in my picture work.

"I have been in pictures for about twelve years, and I frankly confess that all my dreams, my waking hours are spent in the fascination of motion picture making. I love the game and I don't ever hope to leave it."

In the early fall of 1912, Pat O'Malley was given his first part in a motion picture. In those days only one reel pictures were being made, and he was cast for a part in "The Alien," being made at that time by the Kalem Company. It is significant that Robert Vignola, who is directing Marion Davies in the Cosmopolitan productions, was at that time directing and playing the male lead in the Kalem picture. Pat's work must have been good, for he says that he was kept on the job for six months.

Another significant feature of the early days of picture making is that the Gene Gauntier Feature Players decided ot make all their pictures in Ireland. Pat O'Malley was engaged to play the leads in pictures of the Coleen Bawn type. While abroad he visited France, England, Germany, Italy. This was in 1917 when the company changed its name to Sidney Olcott Productions.

Now in Ireland picture making was prohibited when the war broke out, and the entire company was forced to return to this country. There followed a long period with the Edison Company as the featured leading man for three years, after which he appeared in productions made by Marshall Neilan, Universal, Vitagraph, Ince, Mayer, Schulberg and others of equal prominence in the industry.

To the best of Pat's memory some of h best features are "The Blooming Angel," "G and Get It," "Dinty," "Bob Hampton of Pl cer," "Lying Truth," "Brothers Under th Skin," "Wandering Daughters," "The Eterna Struggle," "The Virginians," "My Mami Rose."

At the present writing Pat is playing th leading male role opposite Laurette Taylor i "Happiness," the J. Hartley Manners play b ing picturized by Metro.

It's a long lane to fame and fortune, but pe severance and a stout heart (be it Irish o otherwise) will bring its due reward.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 6th, 1923.

Frank Alexander, four-hundred-pound comedian, who is soon to be featured in a series of comedies made by the newly-formed Eldorado Films Corporation of this city, spent Thanksgiving at his home in Hollywood. He returned to town on Monday with the report that he had eaten so much home-cooked turkey that he had added several pounds to his merry little weight.

The world photoplay rights to the widely read novel "The Wise Son," were purchased last week by Louis Graf, executive head of the organization that bears his name. The deal was consummated thru Grace Inglis of Hollywood.

Vicente Blasco Ibanez, world famous Spanish author, best known to the film public for his masterpieces, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "Blood and Sand," arrived in San Francisco on Saturday on the steamship "Franconia," bound on a tour 'round the world. The ship stayed in port for two days, and almost all of that time was spent by Senor Ibanez in his room at the St. Francis writing a scenario for Mae Murray's future use.

Howard Strickling, director of publicity for Metro, spent most of last week in San Francisco, on business for the organization.

Kenneth Hodkinson, general manager of United Artists, came to San Francisco last week to spend the Thanksgiving holiday season in his old home town. He left on Friday for Los Angeles to confer with Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, and Charlie Chaplin, but will return here for a further stay before his return to the east.

Hal Nites, long connected with the film industry in San Francisco, but who left here several months ago, has returned as manager of "Scaramouche," the film which is making a hit at the Capitol Theatre. Mr. Nites brings with him his bride, as he was married during his absence from our city.

Helen Howell, popular screen actress, and Frank Capra, assistant director of the Gerson Pictures Corporation, were married at the home of the bride's parents on Thanksgiving Day. The wedding itself took place before a few members of the bride's family and some intimate friends, and was followed by a large reception. Miss Howell had been for some time a member of the company making five-reel melodramas for the Gerson company, and Berthold Berger, general manager of the organization, Ora Carew, its star, Tom Gibson, the director, Jay Morley, leading man, and other members of the company were among the wedding guests.

Bobby Newhard, head cameraman on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," and many other famous films, came to San Francisco on Saturday, accompanied by his mother, to meet a welcome his brother who is returning after absence of eighteen years in Russia and t far East.

Loyal to his San Francisco, Max Graf, supe vising director of Graf Production, who is no in the east, has just declined an offer from Ne York's Rivoli Theatre to hold the world's pr mier presentation of the latest Graf pictu "Half-a-Dollar Bill," in that edifice. Graf d clares that as "Half-a-Dollar Bill" is purely San Francisco product it shall have its premi productio nhere, so it will be given to the wor at the Warfield Theatre where all the form Graf-made pictures have had their first pub presentation. The exact date of the showi has not yet been decided but it will probably about the first of the new year. The film is b ing released thru Metro, and New York w have it the week following its opening he After closing several big deals in the Ea Max Graf will leave for home this week, to here in good season to spend the holiday seas with his family.

It is rumored that Max Graf ,supervising d rector of Graf Productions, is bringing Ral Ince, director, with him from the east to wie the megaphone on his next picture, "The Wi Son."

Ben Lyon was a week-end guest at the Francis, coming to town to be present at t opening on Saturday at the Warfield Theat of "Flaming Youth," in which he plays a pro inent role.

San Francisco has a new and very beautif neighborhood playhouse in the Alexandra Th atre at Geary and Eighteenth Streets, opene last week to a brilliant audience. The Ale andra built by George Oppenheimer and Al E. Levin at a cost of $350,000, not only tak rank among the beautiful theatres of the cit but has the distinction of being the first wi an Egyptian motif in decoration to be erecte here. Mayor Rolph was the speaker at th opening. Ben Black's Band, recently returne from Grauman's Metropolitan theatre in L Angeles, is furnishing the stirring music, ar was heartily welcomed.

Priscilla Dean and Harry Myers spent la week in San Francisco, having come up to b present at the big California-Stanford gam and to christen an oil well. The oil well is the bay district oil field, and has been name the Dean-Myers well. Miss Dean will retu to the south to begin production as the hea of her own company. Her first independe picture will be made at the Hollywood Studi under the working title of "The Pirates."

Figures That Lie

By MARGUERITE COURTOT McKEE

You have all read of the Mayflower and the ave Pilgrim Fathers who landed on Plymouth ock, of their struggle for life against the wild en, beasts and climate of New England. Did u ever stop to think of what the women lks of that stalwart group gave up? How e pretty daughters and the colonial dames ust have watched for ships from across the as that would bring materials for their next ocks. Clothes must have meant just as much the beauties at Plymouth as to you for they ere of the best families from "merrie old ngland." Can you imagine yourself waiting vo years for news of what they were wearing utside of your own little community? Nowaays if a lady in Washington, D. C., brings out hat that is a little different, we all know it efore she reaches down town. The houses of aris, from which come the very latest styles, amely, "Vionet," "Jenny," "Miller," "Lavin" nd "Cheruit," cable to us that their latest odels will engage jeune fille style, full of airy race and beauty. In this colorful season of ich brocades and metal laces inspiration is ot lacking. Everything has become more laborate, in a way, though lines still follow he figure. There are some delightful models in oft gowns, reveling in the satin crepes, employ- n gthe floating panel that ripples below the kirt hem using now and then a jeweled motif nd seldom any trimming beyond a single outlining row of rhinestones. One idea for a roper frock is in a pale yellow flat crepe. The frock proper is a chemise, cut "V" at the eck in front, round in the back, and sleeveless. Marking the waist line at the hips, a quare of the material, and let loose to cascade almost to the floor. The gown is plain in the ack, the skirt gathered slightly to the bodice. A line of brilliants edge the neck and hang like a necklace, front and back finished with a pretty ornament of the stones. The rhinestone outline marks also the underarm seams and another such ornament finishes at each side.

In keeping up with fashions, one is nowadays, "moved to tiers," regarding coat dresses, which women have learned to regard as one of the necessities of life. Besides its recommendation of utility, the coat model gives a subtle flattery to the figure. The surplice side-fastening most often observed on coat frocks and fur collars are frequently accompaniments of this type of costume. Antique gold braid, intricately woven braid of silk, colorful, embroidery and narrow lines of fur trim these smart frocks of moire, wool crepe, poplin, charmeen or suedeine. Suedeine, by the way, is a new suede like fabric with the texture of a mocha glove. It is widely exploited by Paris for suits and frocks as well as top coats. This lovely material is found in all new shades. Carrot, carnealian and soft French grey are among the favorite colors next to brown-cocoa and navy. A very popular frock which is bound to have popularity, consists of a striped blouse, sired by the middy. Slim and trim the blouse reaches to the hips or below. Contrary to the beltless decree of fashion, the long waist line is held loosely by a leather belt buckle finish. Next week about hats and bobbed hair.

Palmborg's Paragraphs

(Being one of a series of impressions of film folk and cinemaland anecdotes as written by a motion picture insurance man. By C. F. Palmborg, special analyst and Hollywood representative of the New York Life Insurance Company).

Dealing with a man like Jean Hersholt makes business a real pleasure. His quick, alert mind rapidly grasps the information one wishes to impart, and as he follows, one realizes that he is intelligently absorbing and digesting all that is being said and is not merely nodding a "yes"—a trick that often happens in my business—while the listener is really not getting the information.

At first it was difficult for me to connect this big, pleasing, clear eyed gentleman, with some of the characters he has portrayed on the screen, for some of his characterizations have been of half witted imbeciles and mean cunning brutes which seemed entirely out of his line. I could easily understand his fitting into the part of the servant in "The Servant in the House" or playing the king in "Jazzmania," but I could make no connection between this fine looking man who sat before me and the bleary eyed, loose lipped, half-wit Joe Creech of "When Romance Rides' 'or the brute fisherman Ben Letts in the recent "Tess of the Storm Country."

I have in mind a character who is at present very much in the limelight. He deserves considerable praise for his work is good, but Jean Hersholt, to my mind, deserves far more, for this man I mention, as far as looks are concerned, is in real life much the same sort of a chap, while Mr. Hersholt is as different as black and white.

Mr. Hersholt has had considerable success as a director, although that fact is not generally known. One of his pictures which stands out in my mind "When Romance Rides," he both directed and appeared in.

He showed me some photographs of scenes from "Greed," in which he plays one of the leading roles. This will be entirely different from anything he has done and I believe it will be his best.

His artistic sense is not limited to acting alone, for he draws wonderfully fine pen sketches and does exquisite oil paintings. I believe that if this work of his were advertised there would be a big demand for it, but from his conversation, I judge it is done for the pleasure in the doing.

Aside from these two remarkable talents, he has a hobby for collecting rare stamps. I happen to know a bit about this, for I was an enthusiastic collector myself during my school days. His collection is valuable and very fine, showing that he has spent much time and given painstaking care.

But first and foremost Jean Hersholt is a husband and father. That is his chief business in life, and we get out of life about what we put into it. He gives his family a great deal of devotion, love and unselfish care and he gets good returns, for his is a home where happiness and contentment abide. His lovely wife has a rare combination of dignity, intelligence and the joy of living which makes her an ideal helpmate. He can well be proud of her and their fine, sturdy little boy Alan.

Philosophy

REASON
By Eric Mayne

"Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asks a reason for the hope that is in you."

Sound advice given ages ago, but as good and useful today as when it was given.

We may some times have Hope without Reason, but our Hope is more likely to be realized when there is Reason for it.

We are impelled by passion; we are swayed by emotion: We need Reason to enable us to keep our Balance.

A Wise man says: "He that will not Reason is a bigot; He that cannot Reason is a fool; And he that dares not Reason is a slave."

In a well-ordered life, Conscience and Reason are very near to each other.

It is the power to Reason ,and to follow Reasoning, that puts man into a higher sphere of life.

It is the power to Reason that reaches a Man that a law without Reason is not a law at all.

Cicero concluded that—"Wise men are instructed by Reason, men of less understanding by experience; the most ignorant by necessity; and beasts by nature."

If we Reason from what we do not know, our conclusions are likely to be very unreasonable.

It is better to reason on what we are going to do, than to Reason on what we have already done.

We are better able to help others if we are guided by Reason.

When we have a good Reason for what we do, let us do it with a will.

If we haven't a good Reason for doing a thing, we have at least one good Reason for not doing it.

Reason is our intellectual eye. In these days we need a clear vision.

PUBLIC OPINION

(EDITOR'S NOTE—Mr. John Cornyn, of the "Camera!" staff, was a visitor at the indignation meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association last Monday night when ways and means were propounded to remedy the present dance and entertainment ban. He presents herewith a few impressions of what some of the directors said to him about "Camera!"'s last week's issue, where the issue was presented on the editorial page.)

Fred Niblo:
"I have always admired "Camera!" and have felt that they were at all times willing to uphold the motion picture industry, and inasmuch as the closing of our dance was a slap at the entire industry I know that we can depend on "Camera!" for its support."

Edward J. Le Saint:
"Your editorial entitled "Permit" hit the nail square on the head."

Harold Shaw:
"'Camera!' is deserving of the support of everyone connected with the motion picture industry."

Douglas Gerrard:
"You can't quote me too strong in my appreciation of your wonderful editorial regarding the close of our dance."

Howard Mitchell:
"Certainly know that 'Camera!' has always been with the directors."

Fred Kelsey:
"Always have been for "Camera!" and always will be."

To the members of the Motion Picture Directors' Association and all other folk of filmdom "Camera!" reiterates its desire to be of the utmost service. This is a crisis calling for our unified efforts, and The Digest of the Motion Picture Industry desires to fulfill its role as a factor in the successful conclusion of the campaign for the preservation of personal liberty, and return of common sense to our city government. We will heartily welcome any suggestions you may have to increase the power and effectiveness of our participation.

Editor "Camera!"
Hollywood, Calif.
Dear Sir:

I have just finished reading what I might term one of the finest editorials I have yet had the pleasure of perusing.

Reference is made to your "PERMIT" in this week's issue of "Camera!"

I feel that in this editorial you have taken the words right out of the mouths and inner feelings of every member of the motion picture colony in Los Angeles and Hollywood. And not only the members of the film world, but of countless thousands of citizens and laymen.

The motion picture people of this city mean something—something that Los Angeles could not well do without. And if the motion picture people cannot be given an upright and honorable deal then I say it's time to throw up the old sponge and seek more fertile fields.

I think "PERMIT" is going to have a tremendous effect and as a member of the silent drama industry and Vice-President of the Western Motion Picture Advertisers (Wampas) I want to sincerely congratulate you on your magazine's powerful stand on this question.

Cordially yours,
(Signed) HARRY D. WILSON.

Dear Mr. Fox:

Our committee wishes to commend to the Los Angeles "Camera!" the nation-wide "referendum" to be conducted in January upon whatever plan is selected by the Jury of the American Peace Award, created by Edward W. Bok and offering $100,000 for the "best practicable plan by which the United States may cooperate with other nations looking toward the prevention of war."

We hope that you will have occasion, not only in the month of January but also between now and January, to call your readers' attention to the opportunity which this "referendum" will give to the citizens of this country to express their individual opinion as to what the relation of the United States to the rest of the world shall be.

The competition, as you know, closed on November 15th last. We think the Jury will have made its selection by January first. Immediately after that, the winning plan is to be submitted to the widest possible public for consideration and for a vote. On the release date a number of leading papers throughout the country, including the New York Times, the New York Tribune and the New York World, will carry with the text of the winning plan a ballot which will contain space for the signer's name and address, a statement as to whether or not he or she is a voter, and a statement as to whether or not he or she approves the winning plan in substance.

If, in your own publication, you can print the ballot with the winning plan or a digest of it, we should welcome your participation in the "referendum."

Several hundred organizations and institutions, including the 88 great national organizations which are members of our Cooperating Council will send the winning plan with the ballot to each of their members for a vote.

You will see that these organizations include the most distinguished professional, fraternal, civic and religious organizations (all faiths) in the country. The interested participation of these widely differing groups in the "referendum" is to be explained only by the fact that they realize the vast opportunity which the American Peace Award offers for crystallizing public sentiment in this country and for making articulate the interest of millions of our citizens upon a subject of vast importance to us all. Participation in the "referendum" does not involve endorsement of the plan or commitment to any program with regard to it.

We realize that some voters will wish to express themselves more fully than a "yes" or "no" vote permits. We ask in this case that they by all means send us their fuller opinions, but that they do this in some separate communication. The ballots may be sent directly back to us; we shall have them tabulated by states, wih all duplicates removed, in order that the result may be a really authentic record of popular judgment.

We should be glad to have you inform your readers that any number of copies of the winning plan, accompanied by ballots may be secured from us, of course without charge.

We hope that the "referendum" commends itself to your interest, and that you will in turn desire to commend it to your readers.

Sincerely,
(Signed) ESTHER EVERETT LAPE, Member-in-Charge.

Editor "Camera!"

I wish to express my appreciation of your last issue—I have been a reader of your journal for about four years and, although I am not in the profession, I enjoy reading "Camema!" as it seems to have "inside" information in movieland, and its items have an authoritative touch that gives a reader confidence in the truthfulness and reliability of its news column.

Your magazine is of inestimable value to studio owners and every one connected with the moving picture industry, and should be patronized more generously by those in the industry. Every studio in the city should carry a "card" in Camera, with the street address and telephone number in it.

And every actor and actress should have a one-inch card like Mary Ruby and Donna Hale have on page 19 of your last issue. This would cost each one very little, but three or four hundred of these would mean a lot to you and would enable you to issue a better periodical.

Advertising from the profession would be to you like applause to an actor—give you that comfortable feeling along your backbone and would encourage you to greater efforts!

"Camera!" deserves to be the authority in film journalism.

Here's wishing you a Big 1924.

Sincerely,
(Signed) HARRY P. RISING.

LAWSON INTERESTS EXPAND!

PUBLICITY GAG FOOLS LOCAL NEWSPAPERS

Editors Fall For Hokum

All of the myriad rumors that have been published within the past two weeks regarding the purported betrothal of Pauline Garon and Gene Sarazen, and which were printed in last week's "Camera!" only to be contradicted later by one of the local newspapers, have been definitely put at rest. In the desire to procure the final word for its readers "Camera!" sent a wire to Miss Garon in New York. This is her telegraphic reply:

"Absolutely no truth in engagement to Mr. Gene Sarazen. Merely good friends. Thanks for your interest. Sincerely. Pauline Garon."

Furthermore, Mr. Nate Watt, popular assistant director, just returned from New York, tells of his participation in this big publicity stunt which hard-boiled "wise guys" on local papers swallowed hook, line and sinker, even claiming on their own initiative that it was the truth.

A boiler is to be installed in the incinerator at United Studios and heat hitherto wasted upon the open air utilized to keep at a comfortable temperature the office building and workingmen's lunchroom. Wood, plaster and cloth from demolished "sets" are burned in a brick furnace at the studios, in order to get them out of the way. A steam heating plant is to be installed and the burning rubbish ended.

Hughes Will Combat "Danny"

Lloyd Hughes, who recently wrested the handball championship of the United Studios from John McCormick, First National executive, will compete with Joseph Dannenberg, editor of "Film Daily" and leading handball exponent of New York's filmdom.

Upon learning that Hughes would visit New York this winter, Dannenberg wired the popular leading man challenging him to compete for the handball championship of U. S. Filmdom.

Hughes was quick to accept and is now training for the match at the Hollywood Y. M. C. A. Hughes, accompanied by his wife, Gloria Hope, will leave here for the East upon completion of a new production on which Lloyd will start at the United Studios shortly.

Hail! Studio Cop Gets Raise

Sam Brafford, chief of the guards at the United Studios, asked for a raise in pay last week—and got it. For Sam's work has nearly doubled since other Hollywood studios have had a let-up in production. He has to turn away twice as many sweet old ladies, screen-struck flappers and delegations from Mid-West Chambers of Commerce, for all of the visitors are flocking to the United lot with their claims for admittance. Production at United headquarters of the bigger independent producers, has kept on at the same steady pace it has maintained for the last year, and word has spread among the tourists that there is the only place where they can see pictures made—if they can get in.

Starlet Stumps Harry Wilson

Baby Peggy visited the publicity department at Principal Pictures Studio the other day, and laid down the law to Harry D. Wilson, publicity director for the organization.

She is tired being interviewed, she said, and answering questions; and besides she has some questions of her own that she would like answered. For instance:

Where does the fire go when it goes out?
Where do the fairies sleep?
What makes snow white?
What is the sun made of?
Where does Santa Claus keep his reindeer?
How far can a cat spit?
What makes the wind blow?
How high is up?
What makes dreams?

These are the only questions that the publicity department was unable to answer. Until the solutions to these queries are forthcoming, all interviewers are barred from the presence of the famous film star.

The stages at the Hal Roach Studios are swarming with babies. Among them are the baby daughter of Fred Guiol, director for the Spat Family, and Miss Shirley Dill, whose dad is assistant director for the Stan Laurel Company. Some of these children appear in the Spat Family picture now being made and others play with Stan Laurel in his picture now in production.

Dan Mason with Grand-Asher

Anouncement of the completion of distribution arrangements with Hollywood Pictures Corporation is made by General Manager Samuel Bischoff of the Grand Studio, whereby twelve two-reel rural comedies featuring the screen's best beloved comedian, Dan Mason, will be released through Grand-Asher and produced at the Grand Studio under the direction of Jack Nelson and supervision of Paul Gerson.

Dan Mason is nationally known for his inimitable portrayal of the "skipper" in Fontaine Fox's cartoons of the celebrated Toonerville Trolley Series. Last season Mason further endeared himself to the public with his clever and highly humorous sketch of Pop Tuttlo in the Plum Center comedies. In his characterizations of the ruralite Mr. Mason has reached the apex of art. The new series in which he will be presented by Hollywood Pictures Corporation will show him in a series of adventures in his now famous makeup accompanied by his faithful partner, Wilna Hervey, known as "the biggest girl in pictures."

Jack Nelson will direct. He was formerly with Ince for several years. Al Martin is to function as 'gag' man and Paul Gerson, who supervised the Plum Center stories will personally supervise the new series. Work starts in the near future.

Clean and wholesome comedies are always in demand and such is the character of those wade featuring Dan Mason; his interpretation of the character is never burlesqued and no 'hokum' is resorted to, to gain laughs. No expense is to be spared to make these pictres A-No. 1 in every particular.

The Hollywood Studios have leased offices to James Dent, Western representative of the Selznick Distributing Corporation. Dent is not connected with the physical distribution but only acts in securing new pictures.

Milton Sills, who is playing opposite Anna Q. Nilsson in Richard Walton Tully's all-star production of the famous Rex Beach story, "Flowing Gold," resigned a fellowship in philosophy to go onto the stage.

"Camera!" Will Be Boosted

Expansion plans of great magnitude are under way for "Camera!" according to a statement just issued by S. W. Lawson, head of the publishing interests bearing his name, and arrangements have already ben consummated whereby he may affiliate himself with a movement to introduce "Camera!" and a similar publication, now in preparation, which will serve to aid and abet The Digest of the Motion Picture Industry in its international growth, to every big city in America and England.

This new publishing group, having unlimited resources, and at present issuing one of the country's most powerful journals, has as its operative a friend of Mr. Lawson's who will act as liason between the two units. Furhter information will be forthcoming next week.

Chester Bennett who has been confined to his bed for several weeks with a nervous breakdown has just had an operation performed and is getting along splendidly. He expects to be fully recovered and starting on his next Jane Novak starring vehicle within two weeks.

Russian Plays for Screen

An attempt will be made by Ralph Block, recent supervisor of productions for Famous Players-Lasky, to introduce to the screen some of Russia's foremost novelists, playwrights and short story writers. The effort will be carried on between American representatives of the Russian authors, following Block's arrival in New York the latter part of this month.

Several years ago Block, while abroad in search of new screen material, visited the late Lord Northcliffe in England. The famous journalist, who never was interested in motion pictures to any great degree, suggested the thrilling realism of the Russian authors. The internal trouble of Russia at that time, however, forbade any negotiations. Block will endeavor to bring to the screen some of the works of Tolstoi, Dostievsky, Kropotkin, Seinskevicz and others equally prominent in Russian literary circles.

Attains New Acting Tempo

Experience in acting for motion pictures made in England and under the direction of foreign producers has proven an invaluable aid to her screen work, declares Betty Compson, now back in this country and playing a featured role in "The Stranger" at the Lasky studio.

"The environment of the English studios is much slower and far more sedate than the atmosphere of the American film plants," says Miss Compson. "More time is given to art over there, and less thought to money. When I first appeared before a camera in England, I was full of American speed, which is really a hindrance to true acting. However, the directors on the British Isles soon pointed out to me how I could slow down the tempo of my work."

Joseph Henabery, who is directing Miss Compson in her first picture since her return to this country, says that she is one of the most accomplished artists on the screen today.

"In my opinion, Miss Compson was always a finished actress," states Henabery. "But since her return from the English studios, she has cultivated a form of art that is new and will make her more popular than ever."

Forsakes Pen for Make-Up

Carmelita Geraghty is one of the baby stars who is making a splendid record for herself. A year ago "just for fun" Miss Geraghty at the repeated insistence of friends, made her screen debut in "To Have and to Hold" and acquitted herself so well that an engagement followed in "Thirty Days" where she offered her first "bit." In rapid order came work in "Souls For Sale," "The Eternal Three," "The Spider and the Rose," "Rosita," "Bag and Baggage," "Daughter of Mother McGinn," "Jealous Fools" and "Discontented Husbands." In "The Daughter of Mother McGinn" and "Discontented Husbands" she negotiates two most ambitious roles and has won high praise for her work.

Miss Geraghty, who is of pronounced Spanish type, is considered a most capable actress, but oddly enough she had never planned to enter this field of the profession. Instead, she had hoped to be a scenario writer, but on account of her extreme youth encountered a difficulty, in being taken seriously. But as a matter of fact, through her interest in her father's work and her association with him when he was in charge of the Long Island Studios of Famous Players, she was a pretty wise young lady in that mystic land of continuities. When 14 years old she was writing interviews and still has the writing bee though screen acting is now her choice.

Louise Lorraine was married for the fifteenth time in her screen career in the latest episode of the Fighting Blood stories when she became the bride of George O'Hara.

Seeks Solution to Pencil Riddle

What can a five year old little girl do with one thousand pencils? Fill up her engagement calendar? Write the story of her life?

Baby Peggy, diminutive film star knows the answer, because the thousand pencils belong to her.

The St. Elizabeth's Day Nursery of Los Angeles conducts an annual pencil sale, the proceeds for the upkeep of the institution. Little Baby Peggy is always on the job when it comes to lending assistance to any worthy cause, and particularly where other little children are concerned.

So armed with a giant pencil, three times her own height, the little actress visited the St. Elizabeth Nursery and spent a happy afternoon with the kiddies, whose mothers are forced to leave them there during the day while they work to suppor ttheir children. The giant pencil will be auctioned off on the day of the sale, December fifth.

Baby Peggy's contribution to the pencil sale was the purchase of one thousand pencils. She expects to use them up within a very short time, drawing lovely ladies, which is her favorite pastime.

Ribbon Order Stuns Clerks

Ten thousand yards of ribbon of as many hues as Joseph's coat was the requisition on "props" by Director Fred Caldwell for the ribbon counter set, Hollywood feature comedy for Selznick release, which he is just starting.

Bashful "props" went to a Broadway department store, but the ultra-modern department store flappers filled his soul with anguish, and he appealed to Muriel Reynolds, of the Caldwell cast, to do his shopping for him.

When Miss Reynolds sauntered into the store and ordered five thousand yards of red, three thousand yards of green and two thousand yards of blue ribbon, the clerks gasped. There was a consultation of the flappers, then a floorwalker was called in. Finally the order was filled.

Appearing in the new Caldwell picture are Rae La Dean, Violet Schram, Maria Dolores, Charles Mack and Victor Potel.

Mae Murray Will Address Women

Mae Murray, Metro star, will be the guest of honor at the annual New Year's party of the Woman's City Club of Los Angeles to be held in the Grand Ball Room of the Hotel Biltmore January 7th. Miss Murray will make an impromptu speech concerning motion pictures and the opportunities they offer to women.

The famous old adventurers of the west who wanted to die with their boots on had nothing on the young woman who wrote into Finis Fox asking him for a part in his production, "A Woman Who Sinned" in which she could play a wild cow girl and die with her slippers on.

Regulars in Griffith Disguise

Still in the process of filming, D. W. Griffith's "America," which he is making at the request of the Daughters of the American Revolution, is already getting recruits for Uncle Sam's Army.

It is the first dramatic photoplay ever used for Army recruiting purposes, and according to the figuring of Army officers will have aided in increasing the personnel of our fighting forces long before it is placed on public exhibition.

Photographs taken by army photographers during the filming of scenes in New England, New York, and Virginia, showing United States Regulars, including the 16th and 18th Infantry, and the 3rd Cavalry, participating in the action through the courtesy of Secretary of War Weeks, are being used in an intensive campaign now being conducted by the recruiting service.

Thousands of regulars are shown enjoying the unusual experiences of being made up as British grenadiers, Minutemen, and members of Washington's Army, taking part in spectacular charges, and going through manoeuvres obsolete since Revolutionary times. The men were drilled by Army officers who, collaborating with Griffith's experts, made a special study of the strategy and tactics of the War of Independence.

Sills Edited Strike Sheet

It is not generally known that, along with his other many attainments, Milton Sills, who is interpreting the role of Calvin Gray in Richard Walton Tully's screen version of "Flowing Gold" by Rex Beach, has enjoyed editorial experience.

Not only that! There was a day, several years back, when he enjoyed the distinction of editing the only newspaper on sale in the City of Chicago.

It was during one of those pressmen's strikes, so dear to the hearts of publishers. Sills was at the time attending the University of Chicago and was editing the college paper.

The City of Chicago was in the throes of ignorance as to current events of the outside world. Sills secured some Associated Press dispatches, crammed them into the little school organ, printed several thousand additional copies and the boys peddled them on the streets to the news-hungry populace.

Valentine Black, eleven-year-old sister of Buck Black, has been engaged by Emory Johnson for a part in his present production, the title and theme of which are being temporarily withheld.

Valentine leaves for Santa Barbara this week to join the company on location.

Ralph Lewis has just returned from Oakland where he went to make a personal appearance in conjunction with the showing of his starring vehicle "The Mail Man." Husky Ralph received a very warm welcome from the Oakland mail carriers.

Tom Terris To Aid Goldwyn

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has bought the picture right to "The Bandolero," a romantic, melodramatic novel of Spain by Gwynne. Tom Terriss has been engaged to direct the story, which will be made in the East or abroad.

The author is an English novelist who has located most of his stories in Spain and who knows the Spanish people and their customs perfectly. Mr. Terriss is delighted with the story and preparations are under way to make a big production.

Tom Terriss is one of the best known of motion picture directors. He was an actor and an assistant manager in London before coming to this country. Among the outstanding pictures which he has directed are Dickens' "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Third Degree," "Trumpet Island," "The Heart of Maryland" and "The Forest Hunter."

Tooth Babe Progresses

There is an old rabbinical legend that a child born with a tooth is destined to do great things. Such children are rare, but just such was born eight years ago in the city of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to a family named Gordon. He was given the name of Robert.

Today in Hollywood, Bobby Gordon is slowly but surely working out the prophecy of "great things." In Hollywood only a little over six months, Bobby has a record for good work that is bringing him into the limelight with amazing rapidity.

The youngster was given his first opportunity by William Beaudine, First National director, who saw him one Friday night at the fights, and was attracted by Bobby's looks and manner. Beaudine told Mrs. Gordon to bring him to the studio for a screen test, the result of which was the signing of Bobby Gordon for the role of Maurice Levy, the little Jewish boy, in "Penrod and Sam," a First National. Although this was Bobby's first work before the camera, he put so much into the part that he was given credit on the screen.

"Penrod and Sam" was followed by many bits in the first of the "Fighting Blood" series, and in nearly all of the second series, in which he appears as the pal of George O'Hara.

In Jack Whites' new Juvenile Comedies, as yet unreleased, Bobby Gordon plays the part of a "sissy," and is responsible for some of the best humor in the pictures. In a pathetic bit in "The Country Kid" with Wesley Barry, Bobby proves himself capable of a deep and fine feeling.

The boy's most recent work is in Bennie Zeidman's picture "The Good Bad Boy" for Principal Pictures Corporation, which was directed by Edward F. Cline. Cline says of Bobby, "He's a clever youngster, and a born actor."

This Is Helene's Love Code

Helene Chadwick, who portrays the feminine lead in "Reno," the sensational divorce play, has certain fixed ideas on love and romance. Here they are:

A rolling pin gathers no new gobs.

A boudoir cap saves many a breakfast grouch.

A man under 29 does not know how to love.

The art of love making is not a gift inheritance but a degree of ability after due practice.

I would rather teach astronomy than how to love.

Love does not lie in understanding.

When the veil of misunderstanding is removed love ceases to be romance.

When a man spends more than he earns love flies out of the window.

A marriage ring on the finger is worth ten in the window.

Women do not like to be "captured." They prefer to do their own catching.

Cigar ashes are Cupid's jinx.

MacWilliams With Baby Peggy

As further proof of his intention to surround his new starlet with the best talent available, Sol Lesser has engaged Glen MacWilliams to handle the camera work on Baby Peggy's first production for Principal Pictures Corporation, which is an adaptation of "Captain January."

MacWilliams' work on "Oliver Twist" for Lesser was so eminently satisfactory, that the producer insisted upon securing the popular cameraman to photograph Baby Peggy in her first big production for him.

MacWilliams is responsible for the much praised photography on Constance Talmadge's recent production ,"The Dangerous Maid." The shooting of "Captain January" is scheduled to begin early next week. Hobart Bosworth has so far been cast to support Baby Peggy. Edward F. Cline will direct, assisted by Fred Tyler.

Rosemary Is Making the Grade

Just about one girl out of every thousand extras gets anywhere in the film world within six or seven months. The golden end of the rainbow which calls all these girls to Hollywood is the fact that one does succeed out of every thousand. Such a one is Rosemary Cooper, who came here just about half a year ago and started without influence or experience as an extra, and now is playing a real part with Mary Carr for F. B. O.

"Miss Coopers' first chance in "atmosphere" was given her by Jim Wood. Then, appropriately enough, she played "the extra girl" in "Mary of the Movies." Followed a bit in "The Mail Man," Ralph Lewis latest vehicle, which stood out so conspicuously that she was engaged for this real part with Mary Carr.

HUGHES SIGNS WITH BELASCO

Lloyd Hughes last week signed a contract with Belasco Productions to play the part of Ned Tyler, the male juvenile lead, in "Welcome Stranger," the screen adaptation of the Broadway success of that name. Florence Vidor has the feminine lead. James Young is directing the production at United Studios.

Hughes, as a result, has had to postpone his contemplated trip to New York with his wife, Gloria Hope. However, he plans to leave for the East on the completion of his part in "Welcome Stranger" some time in January.

The next release of Hughes is the picturization of Zane Grey's novel, "Heritage of the Desert." Other recent pictures in which he appears include "Born of the Cyclone," "Her Reputation" and "Are You a Failure."

MAURICE AND ERNST RACE

With Maurice Tourneur and Ernest Lubitsch both in New York seeing the season's plays and searching for screen material there promises to develop an interesting race; and a race, incidentally, exceedingly profitable to some one playwright.

Despite the thousands of manuscripts received every week from the "graduates" of the scores of "scenario colleges" there is a great dearth of suitable screen material in Hollywood. Tourneur and Lubitsch both are truly men of letters, familiar with the great literature of a half dozen races. Both own immense libraries. But the screen demands new material.

Hence the trip of the pair. Lubitsch has completed "The Marriage Circle"; Tourneur has finished "Torment," a story dealing with the drama of the Russian revolution and leading to a climax in the vaults of a Japanese bank during this summer's earthquake. They both need new plays—plays that are timely. Hence the combination of pleasure with business.

There is, of course, one play on Broadway more suitable than all the others for screen material. What it is no one but an expert can say. But when two experts see all of the Broadway plays both are going to pick on the one outstanding drama as the one to film.

Then the race will begin. Dollars will win. And both have all that will be needed.

Tourneur and Lubitsch both realize the value of the story to the screen. Neither is disposed to substitute magnificent or awe-inspiring "sets" or popular names in the cast for the dramatic interest of their screen offerings. Both realize that the future of the screen art is tied to a proper development of the story and an increasing minimization of the merely beautiful or imposing.

The next fortnight will see the beginning of the race for the Broadway success of the year. Whether the public will hear of it until after it is over is problematical.

Lew Cody Is Composer

Lew Cody is wooing one of the muses!

He has written two songs which will soon be published.

"My Lady of the Orchids" and "Lucille" were written by Cody while working in Emmett Flynn's production of "Nellie the Beautiful Cloak Model." Lew claims he got the inspiration while the company was in New York taking scenes for the picture, but says it is no reflection on the inspirational qualities of the California climate.

Cody wrote both the music and lyrics for the two numbers. The actor incidentally, is noted as a musician. He plays the clarinet, the saxophone, the violin and the oboe.

The chorus of "My Lady of the Orchids" follows:

"Wait for me, my lady of the Orchids,
Won't you wait for me?
The wondrous perfume of your memory haunts me
And fills me with ecstacy.
For I know
Some day in dreams I'll find you.
And then I'll kiss your red lips to remind you
To wait for me, my lady of the Orchids,
Wait for me."

Charley Parrott and Leo McCarey are busily engaged in preparing their stage offering for the annual Hal Roach Christmas Party which will be given at the Hal Roach Studios.

Frederick Reel Starts Again

Frederick Reel, Jr., has started off production again under the banner of George P. Willey Productions. It is the first of three units which will be working within ninety days. The first story, "The Last Man," will feature Bill Patton and he will be ably supported by Iona Atkeison who has been coming rapidly to the front as a leading lady.

These pictures, five in all are being made for the H and B release and in the series one or two snow pictures will be made. Frederick Reel, Jr., carries his old staff with him that made "Tipped Off" and other features that were written and directed by himself.

Harry Fowler no longer turns the crank with Mr. Reel, being production manager now. Lige Zerr steps in as chief photographer and William Wolcott will handle technical direction and attend to all studio lighting. Val Lane will assist in direction and edit the pictures. This series of pictures are the forerunner of a big series that will feature "KYAK," the big malamute owned and trained by Mr. Reel.

If Raymond Griffith, Goldwyn leading man, ever gets tired of acting, he can make a tidy living at writing. He adapted Douglas MacLean's "Going Up" to the screen, and is now working on another story for the same star.

Sink Cash in Oil Ventures

Only since Anna Q. Nilsson started work upon the Richard Walton Tully production of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold," a forthcoming First National picture, have she and her husband, John M. Gunnerson, a Los Angeles shoe manufacturer, become seriously interested in the oil business.

"Flowing Gold" is an oil story, pure and simple, and Anna plays the daughter of a poverty-stricken family who strike oil on their barren Texas acres. Within the past week Mr. Gunnerson has become heavily interested in an oil field near Los Angeles and Anna, dutiful wife that she is, says she has almost pawned the Persian cat to join him in the speculation.

Anna suggested that Mr. Gunnerson name the first well "Anna . No. 1," but hubby suggested the bare possibility of a "duster" and wishes to spare her that humiliation.

"If we hit, oh, boy!" exclaimed Anna, with characteristic enthusiasm. And—if we don't," more soberly, "I'm bust!"

F. B. O. Signs Alberta Vaughn

Alberta Vaughn, recently signed to a long term contract to be featured in a series of twelve pictures by Robertson-Cole, starts work in the first of these productions this week.

The title of the initial picture is "Julius Sees Her." All were adapted to the screen from H. C. Witwer's popular stories running in a national magazine. Miss Vaughn will immortalize the hotel telephone operator throughout the series, which Mal St. Claire will direct.

GERSON MAKES EXCITING FILM

The master print of "Three Days to Live," the third picture on the twelve a year schedule of the Gerson Pictures Corporation of San Francisco, arrived in New York this week. This means the picture will be ready for the states rights market by the early part of January and will be shown in the various picture theaters of the country by the latter part of January or the early part of February.

"Three Days to Live" afford the star, Miss Ora Carew, the best vehicle, for her particular style of dramatic interpretation, she has had for a long time. She appears as the daughter of a wealthy banker, whose life is threatened by a fanatical Hindoo of unlimited wealth. There are a series of well worked out, thrilling episodes leading up to the big climax.

There is a large element of mystery in the picture, the cause for the Hindoo's hatred not being disclosed until the interest in the action of the play has reached a point where the audience is entirely baffled. The picture was made in San Francisco as most of the operations of the Oriental fanatic are laid in the great seaport of the Pacific Coast.

In addition to Miss Carew there are a number of other known players in the cast with Jay Morley as leading man and Hal Stephens, Eddie O'Brien and Helene Howell handling important roles.

The first picture from the Gerson studio on this schedule, "Waterfront Wolves" and the second, "Paying the Limit," both starring Miss Carew, are now being viewed by state rights buyers and will be ready for public exhibition almost any time now.

SCRIPT TEAM ADAPTS HART BOOK

Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin, the famous scenario team, are now busy on what is undoubtedly one of the most important adaptations they have ever made, the scenario for Wm. S. Hart's next production, the biggest he has ever made. They are writing the script for "The Lighter of Flames," based on Harts' own original novel recently published in book form.

"The Lighter of Flames" is another epic of American history, whose central figure is Patrick Henry and his famous speech, "Give me liberty, or give me death," will be one of the highlights of the film as it was in the novel.

For this script, Cowan-Higgin are utilizing not only their own extensive reference library, but are also collecting a genuine Americana of the period, so that all the matters incidental to the story will be authentic.

LEE MORAN WIELDS MEGAPHONE

It's not only for the girls that film comedy is the stepping stone to higher things.

Take, for example, Lee Moran, who has just taken a decisive stride toward his cherished goal. This was the direction of his first comedy in which he did not also appear. Although he has been director and co-director of many series of comedies, he has always "directed in make-up," and divided his attention between direction of the other players and his own work before the camera.

In making for Jack White a comedy, as yet untitled, featuring Cliff Bowes, Virginia Vance and Sid Smith, Mr. Moran has definitely broken away from his old precedent and established himself as a "Class A" comedy director. His engagement as director closely followed his appearance in his first Jack White comedy, "Uncle Sam."

While Mr. Moran qualifies as director, he is also widening his scope as actor and comedian, for he recently played a comedy relief in his first feature drama, "Gambling Wives." It is the erstwhile comedian's purpose ultimately to direct feature pictures, and his experience of twelve years in the picture business—since the old Nestor days when he and Eddie Lyons were a team—makes it seem probable tha this ambition will shortly be attained.

Roy Clements, co-director with Hal Roach on Mr. Roach's comedy drama, "Somewhere in Missouri," has taken his company to the mouth of the Merced River where a sequence of scenes revolving about Glenn Tryon, the juvenile lead, and Fighting Dick Gilbert will be filmed. The company will follow the river all the way to Yosemite Valley, making a number of thrilling scenes as they go along. They will be gone about two weeks.

Beth Darlington has joined the Hal Roach forces and will appear oposite Charles Chase in forthcoming comedies.

Jack Lloyd is a comedian, supporting Lloyd Hamilton, but he couldn't "laugh off" an attack of the "flu" that sent him to the hospital for four days, one of which was Thanksgiving.

Olive Borden and Lorraine Easton, both bewitching brunettes appearing in in Jack White comedies, were both born in Norfolk, Virginia, the same scant number of years ago, and both came to Los Angeles one year ago—but never met each other until last week!

Harry Arras, one of the cast for Richard Walton Tully's "Flowing Gold," now in production, is a professional ice skater, but laments the fact that opportunities for practice are somewhat limited in Southern California.

The Stan Laurel company of the Hal Roach studios spent several days at Balboa where they filmed a number of scenes for their next comedy. Most of the action was staged on an old Japanese vessel that has been confiscated by the government because of seal-poaching.

Melford Strong for Versatility

Versatility is as important to a director as to an actor, declares George Melford, well known producer of photoplays bearing his name.

In an interesting statement Melford said that many directors make the mistake of confining themselves to one certain type of picture. The public soon tires of such directors' efforts, he stated.

"A director should offer screen audiences a variety of photoplays," declared Melford. "He should alternate between outdoor and indoor settings; between comedy-dama and melodrama. Changing from one type of picture to another serves a double purpose: It prevents the director from falling into a production rut by presenting new environment, new ideas and new situations; and it keeps the public in suspense if they do not know, before they enter a theater, just the kind of picture they will see."

Melford is one of the real pioneers of the film industry. He left the stage more than ten years ago to enter into the business of making photodramas. Immediate success rewarded his early efforts and he has never left the motion picture work since his debut.

Recalls Old Rib-Tickler

Tom Bates, who is just about the oldest actor in Hollywood, both in years and point of service, is chockful of reminiscences about the old days and the troupers of long ago. Tom is at present playing the role of Judge Halloran in Richard Walton Tully's forthcoming production of the Rex Beach thriller, "Flowing Gold," and on the set the other day, he set the cogs of memory going. Here is one of the best he told:

Many years ago, when he was managing the McKee Rankin troupe over the kerosene circuit, the company stopped at Reno, Nevada, for a one night stand. The opera house stood between an undertaker's establishment and a hardware store. Early in the evening the undertaker engaged Bates in conversation.

"The last show that was through here, "he volunteered, "was the borrowin'est crowd I ever see. Hope you folks don't borrow like they did."

"Well ,what on earth could they find to borrow from an undertaker?" Tom asked.

"They simply ruined every shroud I had. They was playin' "Julius Caesar' 'and they used 'em for togas and smeared 'em up with grease. Then they borrowed all the stovepipe in the hardware store, pasted white paper around it and used that for pillars."

Ruth Hiatt, Lloyd Hamilton's leading woman, spent Thanksgiving and the week-end following at her old home in San Diego.

She has returned to Los Angeles to work in the new picture which Mr. Hamilton will begin at once.

Vaudeville Star Joins Harold Llo

Harold Lloyd has engaged C ton Griffin for a heavy role in first independent feature come "The Girl Expert." Griffin spent the last five years on pheum and Keith circuits. In ea screen days he played as a juve in many Griffith films for Biogra Griffin left New York last w and is now with Lloyd at the H lywood Studios, where Lloyd leased space to make his first p ture on his own finances.

The Spats find themselves s some of their friends' children their hands in their picture being filmed at the Hal Roach S dios. What happens to them a the children arrive provides action for the story. Helen C more, Lyle Tayo and Harry R tenberry play with the Spats.

David Dunbar, who has risen to ominence after only a year in llywood, is something of a Sher- k Holmes. He has knocked about world so thoroughly that it's rd to fool him. The other day was watching a set when a man o posed as a Hindoo began to oke, doing it "even as you and

But David said:

"No, an East Indian Hindoo al- ys holds his cigarette between second and third finger."

Another bit of David's sleuthing: If you happen to be riding on top of a bus in "deah ol' Lun- n" don't feel too much awe for swell with the high silk hat ding beside you. If a pair of issors gleam above his pocket, 's only a poor bank clerk having keep respectable on a pound a eek and bringing his shears with m to use in his cage, when the ffs begin to fray again.

And if you were a man and rid- g beside David on a street car, might turn to you suddenly and y:

"You don't have very good light your hotel room, do you?"

And when you'd gasped and ked him how he knew, would me the quiet reply:

"Because in shaving this morn- g you still left some hairs on the ght cheek."

David was born on a sheep ranch in Australia. His favorite pastime as a boy was snapping the heads of rattlesnakes, cracking them like a whip. One day a director came to the ranch to "shoot," saw the good height and the good looks of the boy and beckoned.

Dave was quite a success with the English Vitagraph.

But in his last role, the Indian chief in the picturization of James Fenimore Cooper's "Deer Slayer," half naked, with feathers, he can show that subtle knowledge of the open that his youth taught him on the ranch with savages not so very far away.

Conway Tearle is finishing the leading role in Paramount's "The Next Corner" and will start his characterization in "Lilies of the Field," in which he is co-featured with Corinne Griffith, this week.

Orville Caldwell, who is rehearsing for the male lead opposite Lady Diana Manners in Morris Gest's "The Miracle," expects that the production will be ready for Broadway about Christmas time. Max Reinhardt and his staff are now busy with the company and Fokine, the famous Russian dancer, who staged the dances in "Mecca" is again in charge of this feature. Mrs. Caldwell, the actor's wife, will play a role in the production.

Cut Cheap Films Says Wood

It is said to be a moot question as to whether or not the general public does kno wwhat it wants in the way of screen entertainment. An interesting pro-and-con discussion of this phase of the present complicated motion picture situation is now o nfull-blast over the length and the breadth of the land, producers, distributors and exhibitors of films participating with equal zeal. It seems there is a marked proclivity to pass the proverbial buck to and fro until the poor critter has no idea where it belongs.

There is one high motion picture executive who is strongly of the opinion that the public knows precisely what it wants. "And, it never does get it any more," he adds. Then he explains: "What it wants is a curtailment of cheap movies at high cost and a substituting of good movies at a low cost.

W. F. Wood, vice president and general manager of the United Producers and Distributors, is responsible for this analysis of the conditions of the moment.

"What Henry Ford did for the automobile industry, somebody must do for the film business," he continues. "There must be attained a steady maintenance of photoplays of a high, satisfactory standard, and, these must be offered invariably at the best of theatres at a popular admission price, say twenty-five cents."

In order to make such an economic readjustment possible, sound business principles of unalloyed commercialism must enter into the producing of motion pictures, Mr. Wood declares. "Our company has been organized to institute such revolutionary methods and to actually obliterate all inclinations to waste money, not to merely lament the fact that there is such waste. By being thus enabled to lower film rentals, exhibitors will be enabled to charge the public less and that's what the public wants."

Craufurd Kent who is playing the heavy in Richard Walton Tully's "Flowing Gold," was once a marine underwriter in London.

Xmas Recitations for Veterans

Theodor von Eltz has set upon a novel idea for doing his Christmas "bit." Mr. von Eltz is a master of dialect and his repertoire of stories includes Scotch, Cockney English, Irish, Italian, Chinese, Swedish and what not, all of which he tells in an inimitable way. Recently he appeared before the Uplifters during some off time when he was appearing in Universal's "The Turmoil" and was one of the chief entertainers. Heretofore this gift was used only as a parlor entertainment among friends. But during the holidays the actor plans to tell some of his most amusing stories out at the hospitals to the ex-soldiers, who are invalided there.

Louise Infatuated With "Bubbles"

Louise Fazenda, who is "supporting" as she puts it, a trained seal in the Ince production "The Galloping Fish," is feeling honored with the association, for "Bubbles," who has the "title role" in the opinion of the comedy queen, is the most intelligent animal she has worked with in many a moon. Louise should know, for her list is overpowering. When she first began her work in the production in which she plays a vaudeville headliner, a seal seemed not so good since the memory of a seal bite lingered. But as she had so many scenes with "Bubbles" Louise overcame her fear and now she just dotes on the seal who seems to be equally fond of her. The bond of sympathy has been strengthened since Louise never omits keeping herself well smeared with fish, which is a pleasant odor to "Bubbles" and most inspirational, for he acts up to the comedienne like a charm. Although the seal as it was mentioned, has the title role, there is no professional jealousy on the part of Miss Fazenda who is loudly insistent that "The Galloping Fish" will present a new animal star to the silversheet in "Bubbles."

VENGEANCE IS MINE, SAID LLOYD

Just to show what a change of scene and climate can do—

The day after Lloyd Hamilton finished his last picture, which was the day before he left for San Francisco, he fell into a friendly catch-as-catch-can bout with A. Metzetti, his trainer. While they were rolling about the gym floor, Metzetti, who is a well-known athlete and "strong man," hit his head on a projection and for a moment lost his temper, so that he roughly pinned Hamilton down, and the bout was over.

One week later, Mr. Hamilton returned to Los Angeles. He had made the long and restful—when your chauffeur is driving—trip to San Francisco and return; he had had a wonderful visit with his mother in Oakland; he had seen his latest picture, "Lonesome," go over "big" at a San Francisco preview; and he had been for a week away from the familiar studio routine. In other words, he was "all pepped up."

Metzetti, in gym togs, came down the steps to greet the comedian. "Hello, Mr. Hamilton," he said. "Did you have—"

Something stopped him there; it was Hamilton's hand jerking him around and down for a mat hold. In an instant, the trainer's legs were flying through the air as his shoulders hit the ground in a complete fall that left him gasping with its suddenness.

Revenge is sweet.

Practically everyone on the Hal Roach lot stopped work recently long enough to watch two Oklahoma cowboys—Will Rogers and his director, Jay A. Howe, in a personal roping contest. Rogers became the victim of stage fright and lost by one count.

London Laughs Up Sleeve

Tea-table gossips had a good many smiles the last week over two stories that have been given wide publicity concerning a prominent London actress, and the dramatic and humorous contrasts between the two reports have set a lot of chatter in motion, all of it of the frivolous type that damages no one in particular.

Miss Moyna Macgill, the heroine of these stories, is a charming beauty from Belfast, whom artists regard as the most perfect type of Irish colleen.

First, the newspapers printed stories and pictures of Miss Macgill having the most innocent face of any actress in England, which resulted in her being selected to play the role of "Miriam Rozella," in the film of that title, after a dozen other actresses had been screen-tested and found wanting in the necessary innocence of expression as registered on the screen.

Then, in the midst of this, Mr. Reginald Denham, the playwright husband of Miss Macgill, brought suit for divorce citing as co-respondent Mr. Edgar Lansbury, son of Mr. George Lansbury, Labour M. P. The suit came as a great surprise, and the actresses' many friends are standing by her and defending her stoutly. "Moyna is innocent," is a common expression heard in theatrical London.

Miss Macgill is dainty and graceful, with curly black hair, and wide violet-blue eyes that have a most extraordinary expression of child-like beauty, innocence and wonderment. She was regarded as the ideal selection for the role of the persecuted and distressed heroine in the big Astra-National film, "Miriam Rozella," from the widely-read and much-discussed novel of feminine psychology, written by Mr. B. L. Farjeon.

Charleroi Strong For Jackie

Recently the photoplay, "A Million to Burn," featuring Herbert Rawlinson, played at the Palace Theater in Charleroi, Pennsylvania,. It is the story of how a young fellow literally burns money. The cast included about a dozen others besides Rawlinson, and one of them was Jackie Vernon. It so happened that Charleroi was Jackie's home town and with due civic pride the theater manager advertised his name above that of the star. Needless to say the picutre played to S. R. O. at every performance and at least in one town on this old terra firma Jackie i sthe biggest cinema attraction existant.

John M. Nickolaus, one of the motion picture industry's best informed film laboratory men, strongly urges that distributors have film release prints made where the picture is produced. Nicholaus states that only through co-operation of producer and director with the laboratory, can the best prints for public release be made, prints that perfectly exhibit the producer's idea of colors, tones and densities.

"Find" Is Famed Star

One of the Universal comedy companies were "shooting" some street scenes on Hollywood Boulevard the other day.

Passersby were invited to "walk through" the background of a certain scene. A number of men and an attractive girl sauntered through the camera lines.

The next evening the comedy director stopped looking at the "rushes" long enough to phone Zion Myers, Universal's supervisor of comedies.

"I've got a great find," exclaimed the director. "Come down and look."

Mr. Myers hastened to the projection room. The film was started.

"Watch for the girl who walks through the next scene—I'm going to locate her and get her in pictures," said the director.

The scene came on. My Myers arose from his chair. "You've made a wonderful discovery—but you're three years too late."

The girl "find" was Mr. Myers' sister, Carmel, who happened by when the scene was photographed.

Jacqueline Gives Iowan Good Time

Place: Los Angeles, California.

Characters: Jacqueline Logan and visitor from Iowa.

Visitor: "Are we in Hollywood yet?' '

Miss Logan (This is the forty-first time she has replied to the same question): "No. Not yet."

There is a sudden crash. Three springs are broken on Miss Logan's machine; the frame is bent. A series of mountain-high ruts in the road caused it all.

Visitor, withdrawing head from top, through which it went at first bump: "Gosh! What's that?"

Miss Logan, straightening seven vertebrae in her back and trying to regain breath: "That, my dear, was the boundary of Hollywood."

Visitor: "The foothills?"

Miss Logan: "Ah, no—the streethills."

Realty Bug Bites Screen Writers

Undoubtedly the most pernicious bug in Southern California is the realty germ, and its most frequent victims seem to be among the prominent persons of filmdom. The latest is Sada Cowan, who, in collaboration with Howard Higgin, recently wrote Mae Murray's "Fashion Row," and "Woman's Intuition," which will be produced by Metro.

Miss Cowan has just bought two lots in Beverly Woods, where she is planning to build a truly cosmopolitan home, since each room will represent one of the countries which she visited in her various tours around the world.

Hilton Chipman has signed to play juvenile leads with the Sonoma Photoplay Corporation, and has left San Francisco for the producing headquarters of the organization located at Fetters Hot Springs, Sonoma County, California.

Another Pair of Brothers in Films

Consanguinity seems to be especially prevalent in the motion picture world. Here are to be found numerous teams of brothers in different parts of the film field; among the producers are The Warners and The Christies; among the directors, The De Milles and The Rocketts; and among the actors, The Chaplins. Now comes a team of brothers, each of whom has achieved considerable fame as a screen writer: Charles and Albert Kenyon.

Although Charles is perhaps better known to the public because of the great success of his stage play, "Kindling," Albert Kenyon has been known to the insiders in the screen world for many years as an established scenarist. About six years ago he started with Colonel Brady in the Universal scenario department, then went to Metro, where he wrote many of the pictures in which Bert Lyttell starred. His was the script of "Bavu" and "The Self-Made Wife," both highly successful attractions; and he has just finished an original story for Ralph Lewis which will be titled "The Country Doctor," narrating the life of one of the typical members of this beloved figure in American life.

Announcement was made yesterday that Fred Caldwell Productions will immediately release through state-rights channels the D'Allesandro production of "St. Elmo," made from Augusta J. Evan's drama of love and self-sacrifice.

Francis McDonald is seen in the male lead in this picture, which Caldwell is now editing for immediate release. Titles are being written by Tom Killian.

Tolhurst Will Address Academi

Louis H. Tolhurst, the scient inventor who is responsible for "Secrets of Life" insect series ing produced by Principal Pictu Corporation, has been invited speak before the American M eum membership in New Y City, and to address the stud bodies of several of the East Universities, on the subject of discoveries and experiences in microscopic motion picture week

Tolhurst is rushing to complet the seventh of his series, which w reveal some interesting informati regarding the life and habits of house-fly. The other six subje have to do with the ant, bee, s der, butterfly, ant-lion and beet

Extensive preparations are ing made to receive Tolhurst New York, and several leadi magazines—both scientific and po ular—are detailing special wr ers to interview the scientist.

While in Gotham Tolhurst w meet leaders of the scientific worl and he will also tell over the rad many of the interesting incider that have occurred in the maki of the "Secrets of Life" series.

Stan Laurel of the Hal Roa Studios received a fan letter o morning that so amused him th he had quite a time composing hi self long enough to "make the funny" on the set.

"Dear Mr. Laurel:

"I would like a big picture you to hang (in a frame). I thi you are such a gentleman. I b your pardon.

(Signed) JESUS T."

Jesus is a common name amon the Mexican population of Sout ern California but Laurel didn know that.

KENYON WRITES HISTORIC RAIL TALE

At last the American public seems to have awakened to the fact that their own history is more interesting than that of any other country, and more dramatic. Now comes the announcement that Charles Kenyon, the noted playwright, who has been associated with the scenario departments of the Goldwyn and Universal Studios, who is now freelancing, has written an original historical script, tentatively titled "The Transcontinental Railroad."

This story will be filmed by Fox at its local studios, and will narrate the adventures of the hardy empire builders who first spanned the desert and the mountains with the steel rails that expedited the progress of our civilization.

Numerous historical characters including Lincoln and Gran played prominent parts in thi story of the building of the firs transcontinental railroad. Danger from flood and drought, the peril of traversing practically unknow territory, and the ravages of ma rauding Indians—these are som of the episodic hardships whic confronted the active figures in thi story.

Finis Fox, who produces his independent features at the Hollywood Studios and is now filming "A Woman Who Sinned," is one of the few big directors who never permits music to be played on the set while directing dramatic scenes. Not that Fox thinks it necessarily "all bunk," but he says he is able, by the use of his own voice, to key the players to the proper moods.

Lois Zellner, prominent screen writer, has completed the final cu of the Lawson Harris production "Then You'll Remember Me,' and will at once continue her work upon her latest original, "My Life's My Own," which will be produced independently about January 1. During the past year Miss Zellner has written every type of photoplay material from mystery and problem dramas to Baby Peggy features. Seven of her scenarios will be released during the winter.

Ralph Lewis is getting each of his new series of four commercial hero stories to follow "The Mail Man" placed in continuity form so there will be no delay between pictures.

Spring breeze in a New Eng- la woodland . . . sunflowers in n Illinois prairie . . . butte ies frisking under a warm mid- d sun . . . violets and mig- nettes . . . a big Dresden doll . . . the sparkle of precious st es . . . hide-and-seek and th mirth of children . . . baby cl tter and a child's tears . . . m ories thrumming on the heart st ngs.

f rcel promise, and of sunny d osition, is Louise Tordera. Not a med name on the pages of mo- fi picture annals; in fact one th is as yet far from the lime- li t, but a name with a musical i nation, possessed by a very b utiful and charming little girl w o is one of that vast throng who s k fame and fortune in the throne r m of the cinema. An even mo- m tary glance at this gifted child s gests lines from A Child's Gar- d of Verses wherein Robert Louis Stevenson muses:

Dark brown is the river,
Golden is the sand.
It flows along forever,
With trees on either hand.

Green leaves a-floating,
Castles of the foam,
Boats of mine a-boating—
Where will all come home?

On goes the river
And out past the mill,
Away down the valley,
Away down the hill.

Away down the river,
A hundred miles or more,
Other little children
Shall bring my boats ashore."

Yes, other little children, and ownups too, will bring her boats hore; her treasure ships of hap- ness which she will send to them er the Cinema Sea. The happi- ss and beauty of life, the baby- e fascination of her very self, that she will bring to the silver screen, will radiate joy to the gloomy corners of the earth . . . away down the valleys, away down the hills, to the far countries.

Yet we pause and ponder a moment as to her opportunities for the expression of her art on the shadow stage. For there are a score, yea a hundred of others, so like her, each possessing some individual quality, a distinct personal charm, that perchance might assume greater proportions than hers in the eyes of the film lords. She may be of the chosen; that rests with the luck attendant upon her play on the Roulette of Life. For after all, life is, to a great degree, just a game of chance. This is evident in the genius that has been lost to the world, unknown and unsung. It is only that genius that has been coupled with cleverness and the ability to reach the sunlight that has prospered and attained its due recognition, with subsequent odes in the pages of history that forever immortalizes it. With a good gardner this little bud will blossom forth into a flower of great brilliancy. To revert to a nautical metaphor her brigantine of happiness, sailing the Cinema Sea, must have the counsel of an able and experienced pilot. With that aid at the helm it cannot fail to make every port of call, journeying on and on, 'til the sun's rays are found.

She comes of Italian and English parents, and, of course, inherits unique vocal artistry. She sings in Italian with as much ease as she does in English, and has several recitations which she delivers with due childish seriousness. She has been model for photographers and has figured in several fashion revues, in addition to her limited film endeavors, the most recent of which was a role in "Stage Fright" which Our Gang made for Hal Roach. So 'tis easy to see she has the foundation for a very promising career, and has pulled anchor with amazing rapidity, being as yet only five years of age. The next few months will doubtless decide at what rate she will sail along.

Josephine Crowell, one of the best loved mothers of the screen, who is playing "Ma Briskow" in "Flowing Gold," for Richard Walton Tully, is proud of the fact that her grandfather fought in the army of Napoleon Bonaparte.

Louise Lorraine, playing the leading feminine role in the "Fighting Blood" stories, has just received a letter from the Deaf and Dumb Institute at Indianapolis saying that the students there can read her lips and interpret the words she is speaking in a scene easier than any other player on the screen.

Passes Fire Dept. Tests

The first woman to successfully pass the California examinations for driving a fire truck, is Jacqueline Logan, popular screen actress.

Miss Logan has just taken the severe test which all applicants must pass before they can take positions in the Los Angeles Fire Department. Among the difficult feats she had to accomplish were the following:

Get into driver's seat from the ground, start motor, shift through first, second and third gears into high and drive the big engine a hundred feet from the fire station in forty seconds.

Change all spark plugs in an eight-cylinder motor without stopping the engine.

Make tire change in three minutes.

Stop seven-ton truck traveling at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour within a hundred feet.

Steer heavy truck a distance of a hundred yards in a narrow space, allowing six inches clearance on each side, to prove her ability to gauge distances almost perfectly.

Fire Department Lieutenant W. B. Seekins was in charge of the examination. After passing them with flying colors, Miss Logan was voted honorary mascot of Station No. 27, Los Angeles Fire Department, by the members of that station.

"Our Gang," and a number of "extras," who are playing in a school picture now being filmed at the Hal Roach Studios, have formed rival football teams and play a game each noon. "Our Gang" term themselves the "Golden Tigers"—the extras are known as the "Shaggy Bears." After an exciting game the other day, Mickey Daniels, the freckled-faced kid, came rushing back to the publicity department. "Got a good story for you," he said breathlessly—"The 'Golden Tigers' beat the 'Shaggy Bears'—36 to 36."

Recalls Ginger Snap Episode

Al Christie has been making a comedy in which the opening discloses three ex-service men, languishing outside the window of a ham-and-egg emporium, while delicious odors—wafted to the sidewalk—bring torture to their anguished souls.

The three boys — Neal Burns, stout Felix Valle and the lean and hungry-looking George Burns — nearly fainted when th ham and eggs burned to a crisp right before their eyes as a result of the chef's engaging in animated conversation with a pretty waitress. Their part in the picture is to collapse on the sidewalk when the chef carelessly tosses about two dollars' worth of charred delicacies in the scrap can.

"Suffer, boys! Suffer!" shouted Christie through the plate glass. "I don't believe you fellows ever went hungry."

And then he recounted the narrative of the ginger snaps. It happened in Wheeling, West Virginia, some years back, when Al Christie and Harry Edwards were stranded with a show. Christie was the capitalist; he had ten cents in cash.

He nonchalently tossed the coin on a counter, after glimpsing a barrel of crisp-looking ginger snaps overturned in the window. "I'll just take ten cents' worth of those snaps," he said, and, seizing upon the bag, led the ravenous Edwards to a park bench.

According to the story, Christie and Edwards lived on ginger snaps for three days while beating their way back to their home in Canada.

Al says: "Ginger snaps are wonderfully filling if you drink lots of water. They swell just grand!"

Adopts Barnyard King

Little Bruce Guerin, who has been loaned by Warner Brothers to play with Viola Dana in her new picture, has found a dandy new pal at the Metro studio — a homeless rooster that somebody discovered wandering around one day, apparently seeking "a chance in the movies." Only trouble was both Vi and Bruce wanted to adopt him, but finally decided on a co-foster-parent arrangement, whereby each has a half interest in said fowl, naming him Mister Vibruce.

Mae Busch, playing one of the featured roles in Finis Fox' production "The Woman Who Sinned," recently received a black Chow dog as a birthday gift. She named the dog "Sinner" because she said nothing could be blacker. When entering the studio grounds she turned to the dog, who was lagging behind, saying "come on Sinner." Every man at the Hollywood studio immediately began to march forward.

Pauline Starke, who played opposite Tom Mix in his recently finished thriller, "Eyes of the Forest," has been cast for a leading feminine role in Tom Buckingham's production of Lincoln J. Carter's famous melodrama, "The Arizona Express," now being made on the William Fox Hollywood lot.

2101 West Monroe St.,
Chicago, Ill., Nov. 29th, 1923.

Mr. Fred W. Fox,
Editor of "Camera!"
6318 Hollywood Blvd.,
Hollywood, Calif.

My dear Mr. Fox:

I have your recent letter in which you stated that you wished to republish my communication from the CHICAGO TRIBUNE, and I thank you for your consideration and farimindedness. As you so truthfully stated, in your comment in "Camera!", I really am an ardent reader of your extremely well-edited magazine, and I would not think of missing a single number. Although I am in no way connected with the motion picture industry I honestly believe that I enjoy reading "Camera!" more than any other publication that I buy. The "Pulse of the Studios" department is, in itself, worth more to me than the price I pay for the magazine.

Of one thing I am positive: "Camera!" should be in the editorial offices of every daily newspaper in the country. Considering the amount of false information that is spread by the press concerning Hollywood and its inhabitants, I sometimes wonder why the big men of the industry do not strive to educate those responsible for such a state of affairs.

The best write-up of the present retrenchment campaign in the studios is found in an article in the CHICAGO LITERARY TIMES. The writer comments in this fashion: "The stern approval with which the nation's editorial writers regard the announcement that salaries are going to be cut in half, and even in fourth, does not make any pretence at logic. 'It is high time.' Why it is high time none explains. It is merely high time. And why anybody should feel happy that the already bloated producers will increase their margins of profit is not explained. 'It is high time,' exclaims one newspaper, and a thousand newspapers echo, 'It is high time.' The tradition of the artist, meaning anybody who devotes himself to offering any variety of decoration of life, is that he starve to death in a garret, never bathe, and remain during his life a social outcast!"

Wishing yourself and "Camera!" success, I am,

Yours very truly,
(Signed) JOHN D. CAHILL.

(EDITOR'S NOTE—In conjunction with the above letter Mr. Cahill sends me a clipping from the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS where they have pubished in "Views on Many Topics by Readers of the Daily News" under the head "CROWDS AND SEX PLAYS," a letter from Mr. Cahill. It appears that he is intensely interested in pictures from the fan-angle and spends much time penning contributions similar to the below, and the one that appeared in our issue of November 24th. Many of them are meaty and full of good ideas. The following is presented for your perusal):

As regards the preponderance of sex plays, etc., in the movies I would like to state that the theater-goers themselves are to blame for such a condition of affairs. The motion picture industry is conducted on a box-office basis and the present influx of sex and mush pictures is due entirely to the fact that such films attract the largest crowds.

As long as people flock to the movie theaters, irrespective of what is going to be shown, the producers will be able to flood the market with trashy, obvious junk. There are, and always will be, pictures of the clean, well-acted, well-directed variety. Names like Ray, Lloyd, Normand, Pickford and Fairbanks stand for films that may be seen and enjoyed by young and old. If instead of rushing wildly to the theaters on the nights the sexy, silly features are to be shown those who appreciate good pictures would stay at home and enjoy some good literature, it would not be long until their absence caused a change in the quality of pictures shown.

Something else again: Religion and politics are entirely apart from motion pictures. The liberal-minded men and women of the film industry cannot be expected to cater to the beliefs and prejudices of sects and denominations. The photoplay typifies art, not strife, discord and intolerance.

Theatre Deal

The biggest theatrical and realty deal in Pacific Coast exhibition circles was announced last week by West Coast Theaters, Inc., through Michael Gore, president, with the Walter S. Horne Company and I. E. Baker of Long Beach for the construction of a theater and office building on Ocean Boulevard, in Long Beach, California. The deal and business transaction involved is in excess of $4,000,000, calling for the immediate beginning of work on an eight-story de luxe theater and office building on the north side of Ocean Boulevard, between American and Elm Avenues at Long Beach. The site of the new structure is 150 feet by 155 feet, and the property one of the most important business centers of Long Beach.

With this deal the city of Long Beach assumes an important place in Pacific Coast theatricals. The theater is to have a 3000 seating capacity, and Harry C. Arthur Jr., general manager of West Coast Theaters, Inc., is authority for the statement that plans have been approved by which the executive committee of West Coast Theaters, Inc., will provide Long Beach with a theater that is to compare favorably with the biggest and finest institutions in the country. The equipment throughout will be A-1, and the decorations are to be the most beautiful on the Coast. Contracts have already been closed for the installation of a mammoth Wurlitzer organ. A big symphony orchestra, under a prominent conductor, will also be a feature of the house, which will be run on a basis equal to the first-run Los Angeles theaters. Frank M. Browne, division manager of Long Beach, will be in charge of the destinies of the new house.

The big realty deal, which is the largest of its kind ever effected in the history of Long Beach, California, was closed by Michael Gore, president of West Coast Theaters, Inc., the Walter S. Horne Company and L. E. Baker, Long Beach capitalists, and Guy S. Garner of Los Angeles.

Real Value of Publicity

By FRED W. FOX

This article, by the Editor of "Camera!", was published in the August issue of HUNCHES! a journal devoted to the interests of the Los Angeles advertising fraternity. It is republished here by request, with the hopes it will prove of interest and possible value to some of our readers.

Several very interesting articles relative to the services rendered by the publicity agent have been published recently in some of the foremost national and regional Advertising trade journals, and it is interesting to note in this regard, that perhaps the most prolific field for publicity men lies in Los Angeles and its immediate environs. Not necessarily those affiliated with the motion picture studios, but the independent agent who is equipped to handle commercial as well as professional accounts. One authority stated that the time will come when every large Advertising agency will maintain at least one man to specialize in publicity for its clients.

This system has been tried and found successful in some of the larger cities of the country, but possibly the real value of publicity is evidenced in the manner in which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and other large production companies have marketed their pictures through the combined power of abundant Advertising and regular, dependable publicity. With them, the publicity department is a distince unit, and under the management of a man who is an expert in that one phase of work—publicity. Usually these men have had years of experience on newspapers, and are personally acquainted with the various editors, knowing just what type of material each one handles.

The real pioneer in this line is the independent agent who is not restricted to one account, or group of accounts. Due to the varied nature of his new and different accounts he must be on the job at all times. Devising new angles for the news matter that will meet the approval of the editor and the reader and yet have publicity value for the client. It is in this field that you will find the young blood; the "publicity manager" whose dependability and straightforward manner of handling press material is rapidly supplanting him in favor of the old-time "press agent" of by-gone circus days, the adjective artist whose copy fairly burned with big words, tremendous phrases and—legend. He is the one who is rapidly winning the respect of editors and Advertising men, and his mission is solely that of supplying live, vital news to editors, in which he can sell his clients to the readers.

The news bulletin and feature story have, to a large degree, been substituted for the "press stunt" of yore, where the news of an imaginary train wreck appeared several weeks after it had been turned in to the editor. Free passes and cigars have diminished, too, for the editor has come to realize that the publicity agent is supplying him with a valuable service, at no [illegible] whatsoever, and that it would be humanly [illegible] possible for him to cover the territory [illegible] the various agents comb, and present the [illegible] terial while it was still news.

In my opinion it is not necessary for [illegible] entering publicity work to have had yea[illegible] newspaper experience, although this is [illegible] asset. The thing is to get the editor's ang[illegible] copy, find out what he wants, and whe[illegible] wants it, and get it to him promptly and [illegible] larly. If an editor finds that he can depe[illegible] certain agents for truthful and timely mat[illegible] it is reasonably sure that these agents wil[illegible] frequent and big play in his paper.

There are in the Hollywood field today [illegible] independents who are equipped to serve [illegible] cies and commercial accounts with the [illegible] facility they are employing in their profess[illegible] work, and the time is not far distant [illegible] many of them will be called upon to co-op[illegible] in the marketing of worth-while products [illegible] commercial world. I believe they can put [illegible] merchandise through news columns in a [illegible] similar to the manner in which they hav[illegible] ploited celebrities and newcomers in the [illegible] field, and they can bring to the publicizin[illegible] these products a touch of romance that n[illegible] else can emulate.

Trouper Joins Jack White

"Bobby" Burns, popular comedian, writer and producer, has been added to the Jack White scenario forces, and will work with Al Ray in the preparation of stories and "gags" for the Mermaid, Juvenile and Cameo brands of comedies.

Mr. Burns has had wide experience in the acting, writing and direction of comedies since leaving the stage more than ten years ago. Most of his work has been done in Florida, and he has just come directly from Jacksonville, with the intention of spending at least one season in Los Angeles. He has been here only once before, three years ago, on his honeymoon.

As a stage comedian and dancer, Mr. Burns appeared in early editions of the Ziegfeld "Follies," and was principal clown in the New York Hippodrome show that played a road tour. He was for three seasons in "Babes in Toyland, and in "The Wizard of Oz" he understudied Fred Stone, and himself played The Scarecrow for several seasons on tour.

It was his playing of the limp and raggedly stuffed man that led to his first film appearance when, in 1908, Frank Baum made a six-reel hand-colored feature from the famous Oz series. Mr. Burns played in the feature and when the rights were later sold to Selig, Mr. Burns again played The Scarecrow in the six one-reel subjects which were made in Chicago in 1910.

Soon after, Mr. Burns went with Lubin, and was featured in their comedies made in Florida. He organized a company and made a series of one-reel comedies, which he sold to Kalem, Pathe and other distributors. He appeared in the Vim comedies, also made in Florida, and it was this period that he first met Al Ray, now Jack White's scenario chief, who was at that time playing juvenile leads and learning the business.

Mr. Burns has successfully fulfilled a number of contracts for series of comedies which he wrote, directed and played. Most of his work has been done in Florida, and he owns a studio near Orlando. He made a series of comedies for Reelcraft, three years ago, in Yonkers, New York, in which he introduced Jobyna Ralston to the screen opportunities of which she has made such good use.

With the announcement that Rupert Hughes, author-director, had completed the continuity on his next picture-story, and would begin work upon it as soon as his cast is selected, Abraham Lehr, vice-president of the Goldwyn company spiked rumors that this studio would join the general shutdown. Hughes will film an original screen story written and adapted by himself, to be called "True As Steel." He is now considering players for the production. Hughes recently completed editing of his last picture, to be released in the near future under the title, "Reno." It is a study of the divorce problem in America, produced on

Eddie Phillips has returned from Catalina Island where he spent three weeks on location with Reginald Barker, who is directing "Cape Cod Folks" for Metro release. Phillips plays the juvenile lead opposite Renee Adoree, and son of Frank Keenan, who is returning to the screen in this film. This week at Laguna Beach completes the outdoor locations. The book title will probably be used for release.

Some people possess leaping imaginations and they glory in propagating weird rumors but the average civilian cannot hope to compete with the average doughboy. An "army rumor" stands alone and can be talked all out of shape quicker than a motion picture promise. This idea is being developed by the Christie comedians with Neal Burns as the star under the direction of Scott Sidney.

The fourth picture of the present series of the twelve a year program outlines by the Gerson Pictures Corporation of San Francisco, has been completed. It will be called "Getting Her Man," according to present plans, as the story is built upon secret operations in Alaska.

Miss Ora Carew has an appealing role in this story as she appears as a girl of undaunted courage, determined to carry out the work of her injured brother, that of rounding up an organization of clever criminals. There are many thrills particularly when the girl is captured by members of the gang and is rescued only after a number of dramatic experiences. The scenic background of this production is particularly striking. Miss Carew and her company spent ten days in the wildest portion of the La Honda Mountains of California which is said to be an exact duplicate of Alaskan scenery.

The picture was written and directed by Tom Gibson and the cast is a strong one. Jay Morley has the leading male role opposite Miss Carew while Miss Helene Howell, Hal Stephens, Eddie O'B[illegible] George Wellington and a nu[illegible] of others.

"Getting Her Man" will [illegible] ready for the states rights m[illegible] early in January and will be [illegible] of the strongest of the series.

The first picture made by [illegible] eral Manager Berthold Berg[illegible] the Gerson organization for [illegible] series was "Waterfront Wol[illegible] a story of San Francisco Bay [illegible] Chinatown. The second was [illegible] ing the Limit," a story of a [illegible] regeneration, while the third [illegible] "Three Days to Live," treati[illegible] a crafty Hindu who plans to [illegible] out a long standing reveng[illegible] the United States.

Miss Carew has the sta[illegible] role in all these pictures with [illegible] Morley as leading man.

Start Work on Thri[illegible]

Work is just getting under [illegible] at the William Fox West [illegible] Studios, Hollywood, on Tom [illegible] ingham's production of Linco[illegible] Carter's famous melodrama [illegible] Arizona Express," adapted fo[illegible] screen by Fred Jackson and R[illegible] N. Lee. The cast, which is all [illegible] includes Pauline Starke, fem[illegible] lead; Evelyn Brent, fem[illegible] heavy; Anne Cornwall, fla[illegible] Harold Goodwin is the juv[illegible] lead; David Butler, the str[illegible] lead; Francis MacDonald, [illegible] heavy with Frank Beal and [illegible] liam Humphrey also in prom[illegible] roles.

Returns After Long Absence

Helene Chadwick's return to the screen after a year's absence will take place shortly when Rupert Hughes' newest Goldwyn picture, "Reno," will be shown locally.

Miss Chadwick's absence from the screen was caused through a disagreement over her contract with the Goldwyn company, which several months ago was finally settled, whereupon Helene returned to the Goldwyn fold.

"Reno," a story dealing on the divorce question of course, is said to offer Miss Chadwick an exceptional vehicle to stage her "come back" and is being keenly anticipated by her followers throughout the country who have missed her from the silver sheet for the past months.

Following "Reno" Miss Chadwick will be seen in the leading role of "Why Men Leave Home," a Louis B. Mayer production, for which the actress was borrowed from the Goldwyn company.

Helene has appeared so consistently in Rupert Hughes' pictures that she has become known as the Rupert Hughes Girl. One of her most successful characterizations on the screen for the noted author-director was evidenced some two years ago in "Dangerous Curves Ahead," in which she was featured with Richard Dix. Among other productions in which she attracted considerable attention were "The Cup of Fury," "Brothers Under the Skin," "Sin Flood" and "Dust Flower."

Victor Potel joins in with the chorus that "believes in the future of Hollywood." He has purchased a large piece of ground near the Hollywood Country Club.

Harold Goodwin, the lovelorn youth in Rowland V. Lee's just completed Fox special, "Gentle Julia," will continue his pursuit of love in Tom Buckingham's production of Lincoln J. Carter's stirring melodrama, "The Arizona Express," now under way at the Fox Hollywood lot.

Ann Cornwall, the flapper of "The Gold Diggers," will "flap" blithesomely in Tom Buckingham's production of Lincoln J. Carter's famous melodrama, "The Arizona Express," now being made on the William Fox West Coast lot.

Has Top-Notch Record

The very last thing that Laura Winston told us when we had the pleasure of interviewing her recently at the time when she had just finished her emotional mother role with the Neva Gerber production, "Whirlwind" directed by Dick Hatton at the Berwilla Studio was, above all other things not to mention the fact that Jennie Winston, world-famous Prima Donna and a close personal friend of the illustrious Mark Twain, was her mother.

That she, Mrs. Winston, was the mother of W. S. Van Dyke, the well known director and that her family were makers of early Nevada history.

Her idea, as she explained it, and quite commendable too, was that after appearing for many years on the legitimate stage and before the screen she did not want additional and reflected glory even from her loved ones.

Consequently, being dyed-in-the-wool newspaper men and working strictly along the lines of journalistic traditions we exceedingly regret the fact that we are unable to include those excellent items in this article.

Be it as it may, Laura Winston is one of those truly great artists from whom we hear but little owing to their reluctance in exploiting their artistic ability to the public by the means of the press, fearing that it might be construed in a material and commercial sense, which goodness knows is really the life of the professional industry in this modern and progressive age.

For twenty years an actor on the legitimate stage, playing everything from "Wild Cat the Romp" to "Lucretia Borgia," from coast to coast including Canada and Mexico, also heading her own company.

Then for eight years past she has appeared before the screen, appearing in "Money Magic" with William Duncan, "The Forest Rangers" with Nell Shipman, "Passion Play Ground" with Katherine McDonald, "Fauntleroy" with Mary Pickford, and the role of "She Bear" the Indian Hag in "The Deer Slayer," truly pronounces her a seasoned artist. The critics and public add their praise as to her historonic ability.

Robert Ober, prominet director-actor who has just returned to his studio work from San Francsico, has declined an offer to direct other stage productions in the bay city. Ober will undertake an important screen role at once.

The Soul of Genius

The greatest motion picture controversy of recent years seems to at last be reaching an amicable settlement. We refer to the oft-discussed differences between Rodolph Valentino and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation which have stirred up much ill feeling between the various contestants and allowed for far too great a display of antagonistic sentiment. We are not going to devote any space here to delve into the legal and other technicalities that preceded the rupture but we will say that it is regrettable that a man of the dominating personality and popular appeal of Valentino and an organization with the resources and facilities for properly exploiting him such as those possessed by Famous Players should have been at swords' points so long, for if they had been allowed to work in harmony, each respecting the wishes and rights of the others in all probability many notable contributions to the silversheet would have been forthcoming in the time lost. We are, of course, maintaining an absolutely neutral attitude in the matter for it does not concern us one whit, yet one particular complaint of Valentino's has profound fascination, (if such it may be termed) for us. That is that he was not afforded any voice whatsoever in the selection of stories, direction, etc. And this, we believe, is a worthwhile complaint.

Take, for instance, the case of Wallace Reid. Without a doubt he will always live in the memory of his admirers as an auto speed-king and modern lover extraordinaire, yet it appears that the critics are almost unanimous in declaring that his best portrayal was in "Peter Ibbetson." And to cap it all that role, and his role in "The Valley of the Giants," both of them entirely removed from the popular parts in which he appeared, seem to have been his favorite works. If Wally had had an unbiased choice of parts he would probably have asked for more of this kind, and we maintain that if the real soul of his genius had been afforded expression in such roles he would have been a far greater figure than he was. For he had the spark of genius but it was at times almost smothered in humdrum, fit-to-the-program plots that allowed him very little play for his emotional powers. He was oftimes sadly miscast.

Charlie Chaplin, internationally famous for his derby-and-cane characterizations, has of late revealed to us his innate artistry as a master of mimicry in one or two pictures of a different type than those he has made before. And that he has the cherished spark of genius is not for one instant disputed by those who have seen "A Woman of Paris." Here he has broken away from the monotonous and plunged into new pools of dramatic art. It is well nigh superb. He is one who is not restrained by outside forces with box office optics ever focused to warn and discourage of new departures into the artistic that might have a tinge of risk insofar as monetary remuneration is concerned. Therefore he has progressed.

"The Four Horsemen" was the first role of real vivid proportions that Valentino ever essayed, and it was the one that was directly responsible for bringing him to the crest of his popularity. All the charm and color of that portrayal was subsequently lost when he reappeared in pictures not at all suited to him, and he suffered a severe relapse into mediocrity. His suggestions as to the type of parts he could and could not play were not very well received and he went out on strike. Now there is evidence that all this is to be speedily rectified, and that once more the dusky idol will take his due place among filmdom's leading lights. We will await his shadow stage re-appearance with the greatest interest for he possesses an indefinable magnetism that holds one spellbound, provided he can give it full sway. It is our sincere belief that he has the spark of genius. The soul of true genius is fully expressed when it is given the right kind of stimulus. Valentino's stimulus will be in the form of roles suited to his distinctive personality.

This Week's Theatre Notes

"West of the Water Tower", is having its western premier this week at Grauman's Metropolitan. Glenn Hunter, famous for his portrayal of "Merton" in "Merton of the Movies" at the Cort Theater, New York, plays the role of the young man in a small town whose lofty ambitions are dominated by his love for a village belle. Their love sweeps all before it and when they find their marriage was a mock affair, framed by an enemy, they suffer the disgrace and humiliation of the angered, saintly populace. All ends happily, however, and strangely enough, logically. May McAvoy is said to have the finest emotional role of her career as the girl. Ernest Torrence, a minister, is the boy's father and George Fawcett, atheist and wealthy squire is the father of the girl.

"Rosita," Mary Picford's picturization of Spanish romance and intrigue starts its fifth week at Grauman's Million Dollar Theater. This is by popular demand and owing to the number of persons who have not been afforded the opportunity of seeing this picture on account of the crowded houses. "Rosita" has been commented upon as one of the most artistically beautiful photoplays of the year. A notable cast interprets this story of old Spain which includes Holbrook Blinn, Irene Rich, George Walsh, Charles Belcher, George Periolet, Bert Sprotte and Snitz Edwards.

The musical program and prologue reflects the Spanish atmosphere of the picture in novelty fashion.

William Seabury and his company presenting his latest dance fantasy called the second edition of "Frivolic" is the special headline attraction at the Hillstreet theater. He is a genius in assembling attractive soloists as associates and in staging his productions sumptuously and is one of the foremost terpsichorean artists of the present day.

The principal comedy feature of the bill will be presented by Roger Imhof and company, offering the familiar character sketch, "In a Pest House."

For music loving patrons, the Hegudus sisters, violinists, and Juan Reyes, pianist, offer a program of classical and popular numbers. Each is a skillful artist with exceptional technique.

Klein brothers are talking comedians who promise original up-to-date repartee, and "A Spinning Romance" is the title of the offering of Will and Gladys Ahern, who sing, dance, jest and, for good measure, give a dexterous exhibition of rope spinning. The Klown revue is an European novelty offering presentd by the Ploetz brothers and sister.

"Skid Proof" starring Buck Jones is the feature photoplay and the screen program also includes a Carter DeHaven comedy, Aesop's Fables. William Duncan in "The Steel Trail" and the Hillstreet International News.

"The Man Life Passed By", the newest Metro special will be given a pre-release world premiere at Loew's State Theater this week. Heralded as a perfect blending of drama and comedy this newest creation of Victor Scheitzinger's bids fair to establish itself among the really great pictures of the year.

A sterling cast headed by Eva Novak, Jane Novak, Percy Marmont, Cullen Landis and Hobart Bosworth are featured in the production. The convincing manner in which Schertzinger has shown the parting line between the two extremes of society forms one of the most vivid pictureplays of the year. As a special pre-holiday attraction, Loew's State Theater presents a European dancing sensation, Piatov and Natalie, who have danced before the crowned-heads of Europe and who are now making their triumphant tour through America.

Pola Negri in "The Spanish Dancer", is showing at the Alhambra Theater. Famous characters of history abound in this play which deals with the mos tcolorful period of Spain. Announcement is made that despite the fact of this production's importance it will be shown for one week at the Alhambra owing to the advanced booking of many other big pictures for this house.

The splendid new version of Owen Wister's famous novel and play "The Virginian" is now playing its second big week at the Mission.

For many years "The Virginian" has stood as one of the most romantic plays or stories of western life in the annals of the American stage and literature.

One of the greatest casts that could possibly be assembled was engaged for "The Virginian" including Kenneth Harlan, Florence Vidor, Russell Simpson, Pat O'Malley, Raymond Hatton, Milton Ross, Sam Allen and others. In making a film version of "The Virginian," no care of expense has been spared to preserve the great splendid romance in the story with the result that "The Virginian" is one of the real great pictures of the present season.

As an added attraction Mack Sennett's latest comedy, "Picking Peaches," starring Harry Langdon, whom Sennett picks as the greatest comedian, and including Sennett's new edition of the bathing beauties, will be shown.

The Greater Audience By FANCHON ROYER

Why do you expect to leave the stage for screen, Mr. Ober?"

We were uncomfortably aware that the ques- was stereotyped, but it accurately expressed at we were present to ask, and there was nething about the distinguished actor-director the heavy chair before us which argued inst indirectness.

Robert Ober apparently did not condemn us triteness. Instead he considered seriously fore he answered, and we made a mental e of the fact that there still exist artists who e the press for what it is worth in a merely idental, businesslike manner. Then he spoke wly, watching the smoke that curled fantas- lly from his glowing cigarette.

"Because of the picture audience. I realize t it is the theater audience which is ordina- y understood to inspire, but to me the very a of range and numbers suggested by the rd cinema is incomparably more thrilling." We immediately perceived that there would no necessity to interpose the regulation inter- w "leaders." Robert Ober talked quietly and ily, and we sensed that he was expressing ll-ordered thoughts.

He continued: "I did not know this always, course. In fact, when I came to the Coast o years ago it was with no thought of pic- es, but to direct and play in the first stage oduction of 'The Humming Bird.' I arrived bit early, expecting to indulge in a vacation fore commencing work. Instead I accepted opportunity to appear in several photoplays. evious to this experience I hadn't entered a dio for several years, and I was immediately struck with the great development which had taken place in picture production. Each depart- ment of the studios in which I worked proved to be an interesting study in itself. Then, be- cause one engagement followed another with unexpected rapidity, I warmed to the whole proposition and gave it some merited concen- tration."

But then, just as Robert Ober's interest awoke, he found it necessary to produce "The Humming Bird," with which he eventually proceeded to New York. Again he turned Westward to Hol- lywood and again he was sidetracked. This time it was to present and play in the San Francisco premier of "Punchinello."

"Now I'm here," said the dark-eyed hero of a dozen country-wide hits, "to stay. It was a conclusion I came to gradually and after con- siderable argument with myself. I had weighed work and life against those of the theater; I had balanced the screen's possibilities in the matters of locale and pantomime with its in- ability to register the huma nvoice. But it was when I realized its scope in regard to the public that the argument was ended. In one week messages from friends in New Orleans, San Francisco, Dallas, Boise City, Elgin and Norfolk stating that one of my pictures had been seen in each place clearly proved that scope. I was particularly struck with the fact that I could have covered that territory with a road com- pany in no less than forty weeks. Substituting a camera for the often-referred-to 'sea of faces' is exceedingly easy when one considers the un- countable numbers entertained daily through the eye of that camera. Altogether, the camera wins."

We dwelt for a space on Robert Ober's last clause. Looking back over his career, which included seven years of featured Broadway roles in such successes as "East Is West," "Fair and Warmer," "My Lady Friends," "Sonny," etc., and clever screen characterizations in Las- ky's "The Young Rajah" and "On the High Seas," we feel that in this instance at least the camera certainly does win.

A Flair for Drama By GEORGE LANDY

Since the days of the Revolution the noble ate of Maine has seemed to fall into the bo of things forgotten by the rest of the ntry. Of course the fact of the matter is t Maine needs a press agent, because, even ugh it has not quite the gifts of our own lifornia, it does possess certain advantages, d lots of wonderful things come from there. rhaps the tide will turn, for certainly there ll be great rejoicing among film fans every- ere, now that Esther Ralston is coming into limelight.

Here is no case of a flare-up into publicity. iss Ralston is a real trouper and comes by her reen honors fairly, after years of preparation d hard work; and, after all, that is the only y all lasting success comes.

Although she was born at Bar Harbor, which s heretofore been known to fame merely as a mmer vacation place for the gilded set of the rtheastern part of the country, Miss Ralston ent much of her childhood in New York City, here her father conducted a fencing and danc- g studio on Fifth Avenue, which was patron- ed by the cream of the elite in the Metropolis. was at this school that the youthful Esther as taught that grace of bearing and carriage hich are essential for motion picture acting.

When she was about fourteen Ralston pere lt the wanderlust, and accordingly he organ- ed his wife and daughter, with himself, into act whose repertoire began with acrobatics d trapeze work, ran the gamut of song, patter d dance and even touched on the presenta- n of scenes from favorite Shakespeare plays. s "The Ralstone" the family appeared over the tire Keith and Orpheum Circuits, at numer- ous chatauquas, and also gave performances during the summer courses of open-air dra- matics at a number of Eastern colleges. It took a couple of years for the act to get to California, and here Esther Ralston was soon offered mo- tion picture work. The beauty and talent which she displayed in the family sketches won her a two-year contract with Universal Pictures Corporation, during the course of which she played leads opposite practically every male star on the lot, including Herbert Rawlinson, Roy Stewart, Art Accord, Billy Sullivan and Bill Desmond. With the last named she was featured in the serial entitled "The Phantom Fortune." Her last role at Universal was oppo- site Rawlinson in "The Jack of Clubs," soon to be released.

While she was still under contract with Carl Laemmle, Frank Lloyd insisted on borrowing her to create the role of Rose Mailie in "Oliver Twist." She was a distinct success in this part, and her services were requested by other pro- ducers, but naturally she had to return to her Universal contract. Since its termination, how- ever, Miss Ralston has been free-lancing, and her first engagement as an independent player was in Rupert Hughes' "Remembrance." Her latest role was in the recently completed War- ner Brothers' production, "The Marriage Cir- cle," directed by Ernest Lubitsch. Just before he left for New York this eminent director de- livered himself of an interesting prophecy re- garding Miss Ralston. According to him "She will go far on the screen, since she possesses not only the beauty which American audiences re- quire, but also an inherited flair for the dra- matic and a background of hard work, the rich soil from which her talent can flower."

Like most New Englanders of ancient stock, Esther Ralston is descended from the Puritans; in fact she comes in a direct line from Governor William Bradford of the Plymouth Rock colony. Ralston is not her real name, but the one she has used since early childhood. When her father

Frisco's Angle on the Wampas Frolic

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

The Wampas Frolic and Ball has found a happy home and a warm welcome in San Francisco, after being driven away from Los Angeles, by the narrow-minded and unreasonable attitude of the civic authorities of that city. J. Hesser Walraven was dispatched to Los Angeles last week as an envoy from the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce and Civic Authorities, and bearing their invitation to hold the ball in this city. After delivering the invitation he also escorted the committee of arrangements, Harry Brand, Pete Smith and Harry D. Wilson on their northern journey on Friday night. On their arrival here on Saturday morning they were met by Mayor Rolph's delegation composed of Secretary Edward Rainey, Chief of Police O'Brien, Supervisor Emmett Haydon, and Robert Newton Lynch, vice-president and manager of the Chamber of Commerce, and escorted to the Palace Hotel where they made their headquarters while in the city. Both the Palm Court at the Palace Hotel and the Exposition Auditorium were suggested as possible scenes for the ball, but it was decided that the Exposition Auditorium was most suitable, and the date was decided on as the 19th of January. Just here the first snag was struck as the building was already engaged by the Butchers Union for that date, but they have consented to change their arrangements and give that night to the Wampas.

In private conference with Chief O'Brien he promised the committee full co-operation in every respect, to which they replied that all they asked was the co-operation and privileges extended to any other public gathering for pleasure or entertainment. So the Chief, the Chamber of Commerce, the Mayor and every one concerned promised every help in their power to make this the biggest and most successful event the Wampas has ever staged.

On Saturday evening the Wampas committee was entertained by a delightful and well appointed dinner given in the beautiful Tapestry Room at the Palace Hotel by Louis Graf, but so modest was the host tha the didn't appear at all himself, and the affair was ably managed by Curren Swint, dramatic editor of The Call, and Hesser Walraven. Twenty-four guests were present including besides the guests of honor, Harry Brand, Pete Smith, and Harry Wilson, the dramatic editors of all the local papers, as well as other leading lights of the journalistic world, some of the best known members of the local film world, and their wives. Pete Smith made the only speech of the evening in behalf of the Wampas, in which he spoke of their appreciation of their fine treatment in San Francisco, their pleasure in coming to town and their assurance that this year's ball would be the biggest and best in the history of the organization, and that all Hollywood would come North for the event. The rest of the evening was spent in the suite of the committee, in an informal good time.

The members of the committee left for the south on Sunday evening, but since that time and the formal announcement of the coming of the ball to San Francisco, $5,000.00 worth of tickets have already been subscribed for, and they say that after that little start they will now begin to really sell them. Also all day on Monday Hesser Walraven's telephone rang with offers, one after another from leading organizations and business firms of every possible help and co-operation in the big event.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

Dec. 12th, 1923.

Herman Lubfin, president of the Golden Gate Productions, and Jack Dewey, production manager of the organization returned to San Francisco from the south last Monday, and spent the week here on business for the company. Mr. Lubfin has recently moved his family to Hollywood as they plan to begin production at a southern studio within a few weeks.

Harry Brand, Pete Smith, and Harry Wilson spent Saturday and Sunday in town. They came as a committee from the Wampas to make arrangements for the Wampas annual ball, driven out of Los Angeles by the narrow-minded powers that be, and were in San Francisco the welcomed and honored guests of the civic authorities. They returned to Hollywood Sunday night, loud in their praises of their treatment while here, and promising that all Hollywood would be up for the ball.

Frank Keenen, grand old man of the screen, spent the week-end in San Francisco as the guest of his daughter and son-in-law Ed Wynn, who has been playing the Columbia Theater in "The Perfect Fool" his big New York hit.

The Gerson Pictures Corporation, having completed four of their series of six-reel action melodramas, have laid off production for a period of six weeks. The pictures already completed are being released to the State-Right Market. Ora Carew, star of the recent series of pictures has returned to her home in Hollywood, as has also Jay Morley, leading man with the company. Tom Gibson, director, is still in San Francisco, and has not as yet just decided whether to remain among us or return to the south.

Guy Bates Post comes to the Columbia Theater this week in Edward J. Locke's remarkab play "The Climax." Post has been devoting h time entirely to pictures for two years, and h appearance in this play marks his return to th spoken stage, where he has been sadly misse as he is one of the fine actors of the day.

About the Peace Award

The committee which is administering the American Peace Award, after a meeting last week, announced many of the ways in which its co-operating organizations will conduct the January "referendum." The Jury of Award, of which Mr. Root is chairman, has been at work since the middle of October and is expected to reach its decision, according to the committee, by January first. Immediately after that the winning plan is to be submitted to the widest possible public for a vote.

The committee in its announcement concerning the "referendum" is emphatically making two points: First, that participation in the "referendum" does not commit any organization or institution to any "endorsement" of the winning plan; secondly, that, while the object is to secure as thoroughgoing a vote as possible all over the country, it is a considered and intelligent vote which is being sought.

"We realize," the committee statement reads, "that signatures from too thoughtless signers, no matter how voluminous the number, will mean little. We want every citizen to have an opportunity to read the plan and cast a considered vote upon it.

Over 4000 daily and weekly newspapers have already agreed to participate in the "referendum" by carrying a ballot, with the text of the winning plan, or a digest of it. On the ballot their readers will state whether or not they approve the winning plan in substance. The b lots will be returned directly to the office of t American Peace Award.

Two hundred and eleven magazines ha written to the Award that they will carry t ballot. Many of the newspapers and magazi carrying the ballot are setting aside an infle ible rule in order to do so. he coachman hat, not entirely removed from t Directoire influence, is a delightful new n inery feature. Usually of silk beaver, b ded with grosgrain ribbon, this high- c wned, narrow-brimmed chapeau is the com- p ment of the new coiffure garcon. You prob- a y know that the smart French women have a ndoned bobbed hair of the flaring, "wild- w man" type. Instead of the fluffy "Mae Mur- r" bobbed hair, Parisiennes are wearing their h r cut quite short a la "Anna Neilson" and b shed to follow the natural line of the head. I us hope that girls wholly unadapted in ap- p rance and personality to this type of coiffure m y not take to this style too seriously.

Mah Jong!

By RAYMOND McKEE

The most significant thing about an actor's p earance on the stage is his exit. In fact it t the most important thing in the lives of men a d women; it's the exit that counts and not the e rance. In playing Mah-Jongg this same i ng holds good; it's where you finish, not w ere you begin. Now to take up the thread w ere we left off last week: As the China boy s ys the game, skill is the main factor; the A nerican plays it with luck, and his object is to s re, while the China boy's objective is to go M ah-Jongg. A Mah-Jongg table is complete w th four players, whose positions are deter- m ned by each in turn throwing the dice—two o them. The highest throw is known as east a d has the choice of seats. The next highest i s on his right and is south. The next highest i s opposite east and is west. The fourth player i north. There are no partnerships, each player p ing for himself. All throws shall be made w th two dice, having upon their faces the n mbers from one to six. The total of the two d ces shall be the throw. Throw them out just a e you would in shooting craps. In case of a s the first player to throw the number wins. If there are more than four candidates for p ay, five or six may belong to the table. All t row the dice, and the four highest play the f rst "round." At the end of the round the four w ho are playing throw again to decide the out- p ers. Those who are cut out after the first r und come in again for the third round with- o t throwing.

Palmborg's Paragraphs

The Motion Picture Colony and Hollywood, synonymous terms, hold a great fascination for the general public. I have yet to meet an individual, who after learning that I know most of the film celebrities, does not at the first opportunity, start eagerly questioning me about them. In the next breath this same person may declare that he or she is not interested in the motion picture people at all, but their questions prove that to be untrue.

My wife and I recently returned from a trip east. We made many stops en route and no matter where we went, from the small town in Wisconsin, New York City, staid Boston or the little village in Maine everyone we met was anxious to get news of the "movie folks."

The fact that we came from Hollywood proved most fascinating. It was amusing to watch different people try to get us into a little personal chat so they could hear all about that famous town—"all about"—meaning that we were to give them some inside information of just how wicked it really is. We gave them inside information and they were exceedingly surprised to learn that Hollywood is a thrifty, industrious city, which is growing by leaps and bounds; a city of fine homes, schools and churches. The general impression seems to be that it is more or less one vast studio after another and an exceptionally gay place, where life is one continual round of pleasure.

Hollywood is my home town and I take great pride in claiming it as such. Quite naturally I resented these unjust criticisms and I was most anxious to learn how they started. Newspaper stories and tales carried by individuals seemed to be the main sources of such information. We know there will always be gossips to carry tales, but it is unfortunate that the newspapers make so much of any scandal connected with the motion picture industry, for the public jumps to the conclusion that if a few do wrong, all do likewise. Other professions are not judged in this manner, so why should the movies be so catalogued?

Many were the inquiries made about the picture people themselves. Such questions as "Does so and so look the same off the screen, is she really that beautiful?" or "Is Mr. Blank married and is he devoted to his wife?" The good looks and habits of the celebrities seemed to be of paramount interest.

It was a pleasure to describe some of the lovely homes and home life of the picture people I know. It is a shame that the public does not get more information about their home life. For we who live here know that the film folks have established some of the finest homes in the city and that they are just as careful in rearing their families as any of the most exacting. Their children receive the best schooling, many of them attending private schools in the city and Los Angeles can well boast of her fine private schools.

Hollywood and the motion picture industry is in the limelight all over the United States and many places in Europe. As a famous politician once said—a man is not famous until he is talked about—but we want to be talked about in the right way. So it is up to us who live here to see that true facts only are given out—false stories should always be corrected and exaggerations discouraged.

WORK

By Eric Mayne

Work is the cornerstone of the Ideal Republic.

Every member of a practical and successful community must be a worker.

In time Work will be organized on a scientific basis.

The Science of Work will teach men that Labor is not a curse, was never intended to be a curse, but a blessing—a courageous and determined means of reaching the highest good.

"God helps those who help themselves," and in this, at any rate, most people follow the Almighty's example.

The wise man does not expect God—or any one else—to do for him that which he can do for himself.

No man lives for himself, and no man works for himself only; he works for the community, and his work goes beyond himself and becomes great and illimitable.

Those who will not work—whether they are rich or poor—are a menace to any country.

When civilization is in the ascendancy a man will not feel it necessary to apologize because he has to work—his great joy will be that he is able to work.

If men spent the time and energy in useful work that they spend in trying to avoid it, there would be more happy homes and fewer crowded jails.

Years ago Sydney Smith, a clever Englishman, wrote: "It is only by hard labor that a man can attain success; if he will not work, he had better go fox hunting."

Labor and capital are interdependent. The laborer and the capitalist are both workers, and when they realize that they must work for each other's good and the welfare of humanity that will be another step in the development of civilization.

If we wish to possess anything worth having we must work for it. Even if we do not get it, the result of honest work is never lost.

RODOLPH VALENTINO RETURNS TO FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY!

Litigation Is Nullified By Terms of New Agreement; Will Work At Long Island

Announcement has been made that Rodolph Valentino, screen star de luxe, and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are about to drop their quarrel and once more join hands. The injunction granted the company provided that Valentino was not to appear in motion pictures under another management until 1925.

J. D. Williams, prominent in the distribution and exhibition end of the industry and organizer of Ritz-Carlton Pictures, will star the distinguished actor in a series of features immediately upon the close of his Paramount contract.

Under the arrangement just completed Valentino will return to the Lasky fold under the direction of Sidney Olcott in two pictures to be made at the Long Island studios of Famous Players.

It is understood the star will have the right to propose vehicles suited to him and that he will also have a say as to who will figure in the active production of same.

He is at present bound for Europe where he will soon be joined by his wife, Natacha Rambova, who represented him in the settlement in New York. No date has as yet been selected for the beginning of the first production.

This marks the climax, and possible conclusion, of a legal and temperamental mixup that has commanded international attention.

Reeve Returning

Arch Reeve, West Coast Publicity Director for Paramount, who has been in New York for the past three weeks, will return to the Lasky Studio early next week.

During his Eastern trip, Reeve has been in conference with Chas. E. McCarthy, Publicity Manager, and A. M. Botsford, Advertising Manager, and other New York executives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mazu Pitts Returns

Mazu Pitts, who plays her first dramatic role as Trina in Erich von Stroheim's production of "Greed," has returned to the Coast from her trip to New York. En route to and from the Eastern metropolis she stopped off in Chicago for visits. This was also the first time she had been in that city.

When asked the proverbial question concerning her impressions of the big towns, she replied she would take pleasure in living in the city herself but that she thought quite Hollywood a better place in which to raise her infant daughter. Miss Pitts in private life is the wife of Tom Gallery.

Lester Bennett, who is recovering from a recent operation caused by overwork was able to visit his studio and laboratory for the first time in three months this week.

Sawyer Will Film Famed Poem

Arthur H. Sawyer announced this week that actual work on the script for "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" had been started by Winifred Dunn, scenario editor-in-chief of Metro Pictures Corporation. Following a series of conferences between Miss Dunn, Sawyer and Clarence Badger, who will direct this film, it is expected that the finished script will be placed in Badger's hands for shooting on December 26.

Under the supervision of Sawyer the production will be made at the Metro studios, and the exteriors will be shot in certain parts of Alaska. The work of selecting a cast to support Barbara La Marr in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" has been started, and in this connection the result of the voting contest, inaugurated some time ago, whereby film fans throughout the country were given an opportunity to name their favorite player to appear in the role of Dan McGrew, will be made public.

Assisting Sawyer and Badger in the production of this film will be Charles Hunt in the capacity of assistant director, Bert Lubin as production manager, Rudolph Berquist and Reginald Lanning as camera men and Bert Ennis as director of publicity. Supplementing this staff of the Sawyer-Lubin organization will be the technical and mechanical forces of Metro studios. The names of those players who will appear with Miss La Marr in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" will be announced within the next two weeks.

GREEKS IN BIG FILM ORGANIZATION

Plans are nearing completion for the definite establishment of a motion picture producing corporation, to be sponsored by Greeks and to be known as the Panhellenic Motion Picture Corporation, capitalized at $500,000. The organizer and head executive of this organization will be Kay de Kay, renowned film producer, and he will be represented in every state in the Union by the most prominent business men of each community, that is, those of Greek nationality. Among these will be doctors, lawyers, realtors, theatrical men, publishers, restaurauters, confectioners, etc. The program of the company is to produce pictures adapted from stories and poems of ancient and modern Greece.

A substantial cash sum, raised among the Greeks of this vicinity, is now on hand for incidental expenses prior to the beginning of the active production period, and as soon as the participants are ready to shoot they will procure the balance of the needed capital from their countrymen throughout the United States. It will be virtually a closed corporation and every Greek of any eminence whatsoever in America will be represented to some extent in the enterprise.

Henabery Finishes "The Stranger"

Joseph Henabery filmed the final scenes of his latest Paramount picture, "The Stranger," last week and is now engaged with production editor Lucien Hubbard in editing and titling it.

Betty Compson, Richard Dix, Lewis Stone and Tully Marshall are featured in this adaptation by Ralph Block and Edfrid Bingham of John Galsworthy's story "The First and the Last."

Returns to Christie

Charlotte Stevens, the charming little ingenue, has returned to the Christie organization after an absence of several months. During her absence she successfully essayed many heavy dramatic roles.

Laurette Will Use O'Malleys

Laurette Taylor seems to have a penchant for using an O'Malley in her pictures.

In "Peg O' My Heart" Miss Taylor presented "Little Lady Eileen" O'Malley as the child, Peg. For her latest production Miss Taylor selected the father of "Little Lady Eileen", answering to the name of Pat.

"Little Lady Eileen" is rivaling her popular father on the screen, at least as far as the producers are concerned. The clever little actress has reached the stage where she receives more offers than she can fulfill.

Swedish Author with Goldwyn

Hjalmar Bergman, one of the most famous of the younger writers of Europe, has been drafted by American films.

Bergman, who probably is the most widely read writer in Sweden, with the possible exception of Selma Lagerloff, has signed a contract with the Goldwyn company as a screen writer, and will come to that company's studios in Culver City.

The author will write and adapt stories for Victor Searstrom, noted Swedish director who has just finished his first American production, "Name the Man!" by Sir Hall Caine.

Bergman, although popular all over Europe, is little known in America, as only one of his novels, "God's Orchid," has been translated into English. He is the author of plays and screen stories as well as novels, three of his photoplays, "Mortal Clay," "Fire Aboard," and "The Headsman" having been produced by Seastrom in Sweden.

Bergman sailed for America on the S. S. Majestic. He will arrive in New York on December 12, and is expected to reach Los Angeles Decemebr 20.

Frank Farrington, playing the role of Prof. Mallow in "Flowing Gold," Richard Walton Tully's next offering on the First National program, is an accomplished swimmer and was in the original Forest Swimming Team in London. This team held the polo shield for three consecutive years.

Chicagoans Launch Sinema Company

Peacock Pictures Corporation, a new independent producing company, was launched recently in Chicago by a group of prominent business men. The corporation is a closed company and the officers are as follows: A. Raymond Gallo, President; H. John Ross, 1st Vice President; Major V. C. Sweinhart, Treasurer and Chairman of the Board; J. James Gallo, 2nd Vice President; Irwin S. Censky, Secretary; Bernhard O. Wirth, Asst. Secretary. A. Raymond Gallo, who heads the organization, is a former theatrical manager and New York publisher. Several months ago he resigned as secretary-treasurer of the Associated Authors Productions, a Florida Company who produced "The Broad Road", a feature with May Allison and Richard Travers. This feature was made under his supervision.

Major Sweinhart is also a very prominent member in a number of fraternal and civic organizations of Chicago such as president of the Edgewater Association For Progress and treasurer of the Business Mens Association and All-Chicago Council.

The other officers are also well known in their respective businesses. Plans are now being made to start work on the first production early next spring. A theme of world-wide fame is now being adapted. A cast of stellar players, and a famous director is being put under contract. An announcement of their names and other production details will be made later in another issue of this publication. It was learned through an official statement that the plans of Peacock Pictures Corporation are to produce only high-class features from stories of world-wide note. The best of everything will be had to make Peacock Productions entertaining and humanly interesting from a photoplay standpoint, yet within the booking reach of every independent exhibitor.

Peacock Pictures Corporation have found a new angle to production of which they expect to solve the question of high costs of motion picture production.

Laurel Kids Bill Hart

Stan Laurel is making a travesty on Will Hart's latest picture, "Wild Bill Hickock," at the Hal Roach studios. It will be called "Wild Bill Hiccough." Laurel takes the part of Wild Bill, Billy Engles appears as Phil Sheridan, Charles Dudley as Abraham Lincoln, Al Forbes plays General Cust and Jimmy Finlayson is Jack McQueen. Mae Laurel is cast as Calamity Jane; Ena Gregory, Jack Ackroyd, Ben Rowe, Vera White, Patsy O'Byrne, Wida Weidman, Martin Wolkeil and Sammy Brooks also appear in the cast.

Blanche Sweet in New Ince Film

Blanche Sweet's success in "Anna Christie" has brought her a new contract with Thomas H. Ince to appear in his next production, "Those Who Dance," on which work has already quietly started. Critics declare that Miss Sweet has earned a place in the front ranks of the outstanding emotional actresses of the silver sheet through her portrayal in the O'Neill story.

"Those Who Dance" is announced as the "surprise picture" of the year by Thomas H. Ince. Lambert Hillyer is directing, and for the first time in the history of the Ince studios production is being carried on in closed stages and on barricaded sets. It is understood that no announcement of the unusual theme will be made until the feature is ready for release.

At the Ince studio it was stated that "Those Who Dance," by George Kibbe Turner, is the foundation for the production. With it has been combined another story that is the "surprise" which the producer is planning to spring. Through the combination of these two stories Ince believes that he has hit upon a theme which will offer a real sensation for picture-goers.

Lambert Hillyer returns to the Ince banner, after having completed "The Spoilers" and "Temporary Marriage." It was as a director of "Westerns" at Inceville that he made his big name. Recently he directed "Skin Deep" and "Scars of Jealousy" for Ince. Miss Sweet will start work immediately and will head an all-star cast.

S-L Press Agent to New York

Bert Ennis, director of publicity for Sawyer-Lubin, leaves for New York on December 18 on a combined business and pleasure trip. He will enjoy the Christmas holidays in New York and at the same time complete the details of an exploitation campaign in behalf of Barbara La Marr in connection with the phonograph record of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" which the star has contracted to make.

Ennis will return to the Coast on the 6th of January, at which time the cameras will start grinding on the next Sawyer-Lubin special for Metro, which will be a picturization of the Robert W. Service poem mentioned herein and which will present Barbara La Marr in the role of the Lady Known as Lou.

Speaking of Sarcasm

A car hurried in from the right, came to a sudden halt without signal and backed with a snort.

Carmel Myers jumped from her machine to see who had smashed her front fenders.

"Courtesy Always," read a neat enamel sign below the license plate.

Canine Kings Have Competitor

Richard Walton Tully has again made a discovery. Almost every one knows of his peculiar ability along this line. He is forever lifting some performer from obscurity and creating of them popular stars almost overnight.

And this time it is a dog—not a Rin-tin-tin or a Teddy, but just a poor, flea-bitten, mangy mutt which seized opportunity by the forelock and is now headed straight for fame.

Exterior scenes were being taken yesterday in the oil fields near Los Angeles for "Flowing Gold',, the Rex Beach novel which Tully is now filming for First National. The scene represented the farmyard of a Texas squatter, and to make it more realistic Joseph de Grasse, the director, remarked that it needed but an ordinary dog.

At the psychological moment, as if awaiting his cue, a cadaverous mongrel appeared at the heels of some workmen in a near-by field. Negotiations were at once entered into, with an astonishing result. Had the dog been before the camera all his life his technique could not have been improved upon. With tai lbetween his legs, he followed at the heels of Bert Woodruff, looking fully as forlorn and dejected as Bert himself, upon realization that the mortgage on the old homestead is about to be foreclosed.

It was discovered that the dog was nameless. She answered to the call of "Pup."

Impressive ceremonies then attended the christening. Anna Q. Nilsson, who plays Allegheny Briskow in "Flowing Gold," grasped the canine Thespian by the scruff of the neck and, tapping her gently on the prow with a bottle of coca-cola, dubbed her "Allegheny," while the orchestra played feelingly "In the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia," that being the nearest geographically correct mountainous song in their repertoire.

Then "Allegheny" nonchalently ambled home to feed her four little puppies.

Pelley Author of Prison Tale

William Dudley Pelley, author of "Torment," Maurice Tourneur's current production for First National, has written a screen story o flife in federal prisons to be sponsored by the Penal Board of the United States Department of Justice. It is to be called "Idle Hands" and is to be produced at the Thomas H. Ince studio.

"Torment" is now in its final cutting and will be released as soon as Mr. Tourneur returns from New York and gives the picture its final okey.

Heine Conklin, well known funster, has been engaged to play a humorous role in Tom Buckinham's production of Lincoln J. Carter's melodrama, "The Arizona Express", now being made at the William Fox Hollywood lot.

Fidler Founds Press Bure

Donald Hawley, formerly member of the publicity departm at Lasky studio and recently turned to this city from San Fr cisco, has been added to James Fidler's private bureau of pub ity.

Announcement also comes fr Fidler that he has finally loca office headquarters, after a sea that has extended over a period several weeks. The new permanent location is in Room Hollywood Security Building.

Among others, Fidler is handl the publicity accounts of B Compson, Jacqueline Log George Melford and Albe Vaughn. He is at present est lishing a nation-wide news le to several hundred newspapers, well as making preparations the handling of production special activities campaigns.

Gibbons Will Exhibit Ar

An exhibition of the scenic signs made by Cedric Gibbons "Three Weeks," is to be held Los Angeles. The interior set of the Goldwyn production of nor Glyn's famous novel are usually magnificent but their torial beauty has been acc plished with simplicity of desi

Twenty of the plates made Gibbons have been selected the exhibit. They are painted color—an unusual procedu which makes them especially able for exhibiting. It is said widespread interest will be denced in the show as the art rector has created several inno tions in decoration that are app able to practical house decora as well as motion picture inve ture.

ROBIN HOOD" FIRST IN CHINA

ouglas Fairbanks' "Robin Hd" was the best picture shown in hina during 1923, according to th results of a poll conducted by th China Mail, which have just re hed this country. Not only did "Robin Hood" take first place, but tv other Fairbanks productions, "e Three Musketeers" and "The Mk of Zorro," captured second a fourth places in the same conn an effort to determine the mt popular pictures of the year, the China Mail offered a prize of $50 to the person who would name the ten which received the highest vote. The paper comments that "after the first batch of votes had been registered, there was no doubt that 'Robin Hood' would win."

First prize was won by Mrs. F. Soares, an American. The cosmopolitan nature of the contest was indicated by some of the names of the other winners, among them being Cheung Shiu-kit, M. T. Sin, Surjan Singh, K. Y. Wong and others.

elve Into Pat's History

ada Cowan and Howard Hig- , the eminent scenario team, o are now adapting Wm. S. rt's novel, "A Lighter of mes," for his next screen pro- ction, have been conducting an ensive research into the life, as ll as the career of Patrick nry. For Henry is the principal racter in this coming photoplay which the main action culmin- s in his famous speech ending h "Give me liberty, or give me ath!"

According to Cowan-Higgin, this mous address, which was de- ered on March 23, 1775, would applicable, with very few anges, to local conditions in Los geles, which they believe is suf- ing from a threatened subjuga- n of blue-law enforcement.

As a matter of fact, Cowan-Hig- have not unduly stressed the triotic achievements of Patrick nry, but they have brought out dramatic facts of his intimate e-story. It is believed that "A ghter of Flames" will undoubt- ly be Bill Hart's biggest picture.

Louise Lorraine has gone to Catalina for a few days after completing her final scenes in the last "Fighting Blood" Stories.

Will Handle Bennett Scripts

Douglas Dawson, recently promoted to the office of manager of production of the Chester Bennett productions will have charge of all the story material for all the Bennett units including the Jane Novak Company and Eddie Hearn organization.

To Play Opposite Husband Next

Vera Lewis will play one of the featured roles with husband Ralph Lewis in his next commercial hero picture to follow "The Mail Man".

Government Engineer Has Unique Film

"The Survey of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado", a three-reel film just completed by the U. S. Geological Survey, and exhibited this week at the Biltmore in Los Angeles, is said by Paul Hugon, manager of the Hollywood Laboratory, to have broken many records for novelty.

It was made with a daylight-loading pocket movie camera, without crank or tripod, by E. C. LaRue, hydraulic engineer for the U. S. Government, during the three-month survey of the bottom of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado last summer. Mr. LaRue had never made a motion picture before, and his camera, together with the metal cartridges containing the films was under water many times during the 480-mile trip.

As the party was out of touch with civilization for a month at a time, the exposed films were brought out of the Canyon by Indian pack trains. As soon as a batch of negatives was developed, Hugon's report was broadcasted on the Times radio, and Mr. LaRue knew just how his exposures of the previous month turned out.

This is the first time that the entire Grand Canyon has been filmed, and the picture shows why. Eighteen-foot waves and scores of uncharted rapids on which several of the boats were smashed, to say nothing of the river rising 20 feet in one night and burying the party under sand, were among the novel conditions encountered.

Mr. LaRue's film was developed, printed, edited and titled by the Hollywood Laboratory.

Need Co-Operation on Scripts

"Treatment of a story for the screen is the most important essential to be considered," declares R. William Neill, who will shortly start production of "Rose of the Ghetto" at the Grand Studio.

"So many fine stories have been utterly ruined in the treatment," he says, "that it is a never-ending source of regret that they should thus have been spoiled for others' use. On the other hand, I have seen stories that lacked many of the elements deemed essential to screen quality, which by careful treatment became very entertaining material.

"I believe that the director should work hand in hand with the continuity writers in this respect. An interchange of ideas and a clear conception of what is needed, from all angles of production ,is the best way to attain results, effect economy and develop a story to the greatest degree."

"Even before a continuity is started, the treatment should be worked out on paper. The exact importance—the relativity of each situation and characterization, the theme, the stress to be laid upon each point in the story—all these things should enter into the treatment and be clearly defined before the script is begun. And the director should give his personal attention to every detail of this character, as well as to the technical phases of the enterprise."

Mr. Neill and Josef von Sternberg, in collaboration with Adam Hull Shirk, will prepare the continuity for "Rose of the Ghetto" which is to be a Grand-Asher release, with an all-star cast.

Dryden in East With Anglin Troupe

Wheeler Dryden, who left California in August for New York City, having been specially engaged by Margaret Anglin to play "Reginald Martin" in "The Woman of Bronze", during her tour back east by way of Canada, sends news that the company enjoyed a wonderful trip through the Dominion and arrived in New York City early in October. After a month's rest Miss Anglin reassembled her company and began a short tour of several eastern states, including New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Maryland, West Virginia and Vermont.

The play chosen for this occasion was "A Charming Conscience", and Wheeler Dryden was allotted the character of "Fisher Allen", the long-lost, long-haired, long-eye-lashed poet-husband; the same part that he created when the play was produced for the first time on any stage in San Francisco in July.

The company are still touring but hope to return to New York City in about a week.

Mark Goldaine is now directing Hal Roach's "Our Gang" in a "wild western" comedy in which the little rascals play at giving a wild west show.

Webb Definite As Director

Millarde Webb has been definitely announced as director of the first Priscilla Moran feature to commence early in January at the Hollywood Studios. Webb is financially interested and is president of the company.

Almost Copped Estelle's Hound

Estelle Taylor, popular motion picture leading lady, saved her pet from the "dog pound" last week when a dog patrol wagon pulled up in front of her home, 2023 Cahuenga Avenue, Hollywood, in response to a call to take away a stray dog with an acute case of distemper.

Miss Taylor, who is playing a prominent part in Mary Pickford's picture, "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall", was returning from the studio when she noticed a policeman coming out of her home with her dog in his arms. She protested and stated that her "high brow" dog was not a menace to the community, nor that the canine had ever shown any signs of distemper.

The officer, swayed by Miss Taylor's argument, looked at his notebook and discovered that they had called at the wrong home. As a consequence, Miss Taylor's "high brow" canine was saved from meeting the fate of the dozens of "low brows" in the dog wagon.

Helene May Be Bad Hombre

Loaded down with heavy chaps, a big sombrero, a thick woolen shirt, a .44, and big boots!

This is the new type of role said to have been offered Helene Chadwick, charming film star, by C. W. Patton, serial producer, according to report, the producer's aim is to make Miss Chadwick the best known serial queen in motion pictures.

While no confirmation could be secured from Miss Chadwick, due possibly to the fact that she is still under contract with Goldwyn Pictures, it is said that the offer came as a result of the star's exceptional ability as a horsewoman, her present vogue with picturegoers, and her versatility.

It is also recalled that Miss Chadwick's first part in pictures was as the lead in a western feature, which was followed by a number of serial productions in which she displayed the talent that has brought her film fame. Patton, it is understood, is due shortly to begin production of a Western serial for Pathe release.

Martin Wolfkeil, who plays the part of a hide buyer from the East in Stan Laurel's travesty "Wild Bill Hiccough" now being filmed at the Hal Roach Studios under the direction of George Jeske, modestly admits that he makes Beau Brummel look like a bum in this picture.

The wild, eerie shriek of bagpipes—kilts and sporan—plaids and bare knees—the martial ranks of the Coldstream Guards—ballads of the clans—Robert Bruce and the Scottish Chiefs—the Firth of Forth and Loch Lomond—fog banks on the Clyde and Don—Bannockburn and Inverness—the cairns and glens of the Highlands—heather in hillside riots.

The name McBan, and the names McBean, McBain, Bann and McAlpin from which it is derived or with which it is closely linked by blood ties, has been triumphantly borne by warrior, king and scholar, and now the diminutive heir to all the fine old traditions of the clan has brought it forth with honor from forty-three reel encounters. He has enhanced the name beyond the most fantastic expectations of his kin and sponsors.

"I'm a Scotch laddie and proud of it!" is a vehement assertion frequently made by Mickey McBan when others tease him about his nationality, and when one stops to ponder o'er his words the full truth of their meaning and their fitness into the scheme of things is readily revealed. For why shouldn't he be proud of his lineage? In every respect it ranks among the foremost, for he comes of a hardy and romantic folk who have won their position in the world through indomitable courage and incessant endeavor; a race of empire builders, second to none. And it is passing well that one from the first clans should acquit himself in such an honorable manner in the realm of the shadow stage. It is, in fact, beautiful and majestic.

He has made amazing and spectacular strides within the past year, and most of those who twelve short months ago in musing and meditation forecast a brilliant future for him are now loud and oft-times clamorous in their fervent declarations that Mickey McBan will be our next "big" child star. Their foremost claim for his position in this regard is that no other little thespian in the decade or more since the cinema made its advent has ever possessed the exuberant and emphatic personality with which this youngster is endowed. And they will not fail to point out, when arguing this, that he is ,as yet, not to the five point on the Clock of Time, and that most other children who have occupied center or even side position in the motion picture limelight, have averaged eight years of age.

It is well known that those of artistic trend have been wont to neglect the physical for the mental, in some cases to the extent health has been seriously and permanently impaired. Considering him as an artist this is where Mickey leaves the beaten path, for with him physical development occupies as prominent a position as the advancement of his mental faculties. He is a champion among swimmers and has held his position in his respective class since he was learning to walk his first steps. He has put as much energy, initiative and sincerity into accomplishing something worthwhile in this pursuit as he has put into becoming a trouper. The result is he is well-nigh peerless as a swimmer and actor insofar as the kiddies are concerned. It is not unlikely that the heritage of bulldog stamina and stick-to-itiveness that has been handed down to him from his Highland forbears has had much to do with his progress, for there are rare times when his fighting spirit seems to reveal him as a Robert Bruce in miniature, keeping the antagonizer from encroaching upon rights that are his in much the same way the famed Scotchman won independence for his oppressed country. But the usual Mickey McBan is a petite Roderick Dhu, boyishly gallant and courteous with courtesy that is not tinged by fear or restraint. He has not sacrificed his own personality for honey-and-cream courtesy. He has found the happy medium between this and disobedience and boisterousness. It has been drilled into him but not forced upon him. It is of his own volition; it is natural.

The editor speaks of Mickey in this manner because he has known him for many months. This is one instance where the time-worn quip "familiarity breeds contempt" has utterly failed, if it is at all applicable to a case of this kind. He is a boy after my own heart, and if I ever had a son I would ask for nothing more than that he be like Mickey McBan, for he possesses the traits and character that I sincerely believe are the most charming. To those who may know him only slightly or who do not know him at all I suggest a close study of the above portrait. It is true. The jaunty cap, the infectious smile and the merry twinkle in the eyes show the sunny side of his personality. The strong lines of his jaw and cheek and the broad nose reveal his Highland traits. These are appropriately offset by the plaid of the cap against the burnished gold of his hair whose stray wisps so elusively caress his forehead. The expression on his face, typical of the McBan clans, mirrors the carefree and dauntless spirit. of the Highlander. It portrays happiness. It shows determination. It has unusual fascination. And Mickey McBan has all of these.

Novelist Aids Griffith Troupe

The secret of why Robert W. Chambers, the novelist, has become a confirmed commuter between New York City and Mamaroneck, N. Y., is out at last. He is writing "America," the story of the American Revolution, which D. W. Griffith is filming for the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Chambers, whose early popularity was gained through novels dealing with the Revolutionary period, and who is regarded as one of the leading authorities on early American history, has become so intensely enthusiastic over "America," that he is reported to be burning the midnight oil prodigally in order to fulfil his many other contracts for serials and novels and still keep "America" marching merrily to completion.

He is a regular visitor at the Griffith studios, where he and D. W. hold their conferences in regard to the story inspired by the descendants of the heroes of '76. In addition to writing the story of "America," Chambers has been able to aid Griffith in the details of many scenes, particularly those dealing with the Northern Indians, in whose lore he is an expert.

Griffith, himself a descendant of the Shirley, Carter, and other Southern families which figured prominently in early American affairs, has long been known as a deep student of Revolutionary history.

DUMAS FILM FOR DISTRIBUTION

'The Lady of Monsoreau," a w six-reel production, filmed m the story by the same name Alexander Dumas, author of he Three Musketeers", has ar- ed in New York, according to announcement from the offices Edward L. Klein Company, of w York.

The story is laid in France dur- the reign of Henri the Third, the year 1678, and is an histor- l romance of that high order hich made Dumas so famous. nong the well known historical aracters portrayed in "The Lady Monsoreau" are King Henri III.; the Duc de Guise, Count de Bussy, the Duc of Anjou and the celebrated Chicot.

The photoplay is in colors and is said to be one of the best colored productions thus far produced. The story is replete with love and romance and filled with the suspense and action for which Dumas' tales are famed. The duel scene between the Duc d' Anjou and the Count of Monsoreau and the latter's ruffians, in which Anjou fights a score single handed, brings the story to a thrilling climax.

Arrangements for distribution of this production are being handled by the Edward L. Klein Company.

entucky Honors D. W. Griffith

It's now "Colonel" D. W. Grif- n.

For the motion picture producer o revolutionized the film world making the first long motion pic- e, "The Birth of a Nation," and o is now filming the War of In- pendence in "America" at the re- est of the Daughters of the nerican Revolution, has been ade an honest to goodness colonel the Governor of his native state, ntucky.

Gov. Edwin P. Morrow of Ken- ky has just forwarded Griffith's mmission to Mayor Huston inn of Louisville, with a letter ting that he has made Griffith a lonel in recognition of the honor hich the movie producer has ought to the state of Kentucky.

Griffith is the first motion picture oducer ever honored in this man- r. Others who have received nilar commissions in the past in- ude Col. George Horace Lorimer, l. Norman P. Hapgood, and Col. hn T. McCutcheon.

Griffith was born in La Grange, y., Jan. 22, 1880, one of eight ildren born to General Jacob ark Griffith—the "Roaring Jake" riffith of the Confederacy.

Word of the signal honor be- owed upon him by the Blue Grass ate reached Griffith yesterday at s studios at Mamaroneck, where is filming scenes for "America." e declined to be interviewed.

dvocates Branch Studios

"With banks, department stores, alty companies and other busi- ss houses opening branch offices thriving communities, why not ve the motion picture studios do e same thing," inquires Betty ompson.

The screen star declares that it ould be quite interesting for the sky studio, for example, to have anch studios in Eagle Rock, Pas- lena, Glendale, Burbank and oth- nearby cities.

"Then, when visitors arrived at e main plant to glimpse their reen favorites, it would be easy discourage them by saying, Why, she is acting at one of our anch studios today.'"

Cowan Royalties Are Regular

Every week brings a royalty check to Sada Cowan, screen writing collaborator of Howard Higgin, for the performance of one of her sixteen one-act playlets by college players or little theater groups throughout the country.

The most recent production of one of these was given by the Sausalito Players at Sausalito, Cal., early this week when they presented her playlet, "In the Morgue," which has been included in several compilations of the best American one-acters.

At the present time Cowan-Higgin are busy on the script for "A Lighter of Flames," William S. Hart's next production for Famous Players release.

Thanks Fan With Rare Stamps

Ralph Lewis has just received a fan letter from a young boy in Omaha of which he is quite proud.

The youngster said he had just seen Lewis in "The Mail Man", and wanted him to send him all the old postage stamps he could get hold of. Husky Ralph went out and bought him a collection.

Would Flee Thespians' Rage

Why Jim Finlayson, the well-known comedian who plays with Stan Laurel on the Hal Roach lot, has taken a sudden desire to go to New York was brought to light the other day.

Perc Pembroke, who directs the Spat Family quarrels, noticed they were backward in going thru their parts. After pleading, bullying and and every other method known to the profession, he finally got each one in a corner and demanded to know why. Finally he managed to pull out of them this: A fellow actor on the lot who had seen their latest picture commended them on their good work, but thought each should give th eother a chance. Frank Butler, Sidney d'Albreck or Laura Roessing had completely stolen the picture, and on comparing notes as to who this critic had been it was found that Finlayson had taken each of the Spats separately and told them all the same thing.

Hence the sudden desire for the wilds of Broadway.

Ex-Writer Now Noted Megaphonist

Finis Fox is another director like William DeMille, Rupert Hughes and King Vidor who developed into the megaphone division from the ranks of the author.

He had quite an extended career in the newspaper field before taking up screen writing and for several years was editor of newspepers in Oklahoma and the Indian territory.

Fox is now directing and producing his own story "A Woman Who Sinned" at the Hollywood studio, which he not only created but also adapted for the screen.

As far as the adaptation was concerned, however, he merely made a mental adaptation as he builds the story and develops the individual business of each player as the film develops.

BETTY COMPSON WITH NEW COMPANY

Immediately upon completion of her featured role in "The Stranger" at Lasky studio, Betty Compson will be starred in "Prison Born," which the Oakland Film Company is to produce at the Hollywood Studios. Stuart Paton will direct Miss Compson, according to announcement, and Monday, December 17th, is the starting date.

Miss Compson plays a dual role in "Prison Born." She is first to be seen as the mother of a child born inside prison walls. Later she enacts the part of that child grown to beautiful womanhood.

Interior scenes are to be made in Los Angeles, after which the entire company expects to journey to San Francisco, where the exteriors will be photographed in the exact locales of the story.

Paton directed Miss Compson several years ago in her first screen dramatic roles, a serial titled "Wolf Face" and a regular length picture entitled "The Devil's Trail". This is the first time they have been associated since the production of these two pictures.

Film Juvenie Hurt In Fall

Jackie Vernon, popular juvenile, was injured the other day while playing in one of Jack White's comedies under the direction of Norman Taurog. It was while performing a stunt that he tore his back and neck ligaments. He was given immediate attention and sent to the hospital for treatment. At last report he was still under the care of a physician, but resting easier.

Nautical Mixup for Ince Troupe

John Griffith Wray, Thomas H. Ince director, is wearing his right arm in a sling and limping around with a cane, while Henry Sharp, his first camera man, is hobbling on crutches as the result of a deep-sea accident which nearly cost the lives of five men of the Ince troupe which is filming "Against the Rules," Ince's new production, with Leatrice Joy, Percy Marmont and Adolph Menjou in the cast.

The Ince troupe is working on location at Laguna, where scenes laid on a South Sea Island are being made. Fifty Kanakas and island natives, expert swimmers and divers, are included in the troupe. To get some unusual scenes of the island settlement, Wray chose a spot on the rocky ledge of a sharp promontory. To reach it the director and his crew had to be lowered by ropes and hauled up by the same method of transit.

Shots were being made in the late afternoon of the natives rowing out to sea in frail out-riggers. Suddenly one of the Kanaka boys stood up in his boat and with a shouted warning dived overboard. The others turned and stared, paralyzed, then began to race their boats for the shore in spite of the roars of the infuriated director.

Two seconds later Wray, the two camera men and two assistants —not forgetting the cameras—were picked up bodily by a huge wave and literally dashed to the bottom of the ocean, madly fighting to untangle themselves from the cameras and paraphernalia tha thad been washed away with them. The native who had dived when he saw the wave coming grabbed Director Wray as he came up, in spite of Wray's shouts for him to help Sharp, who could not swim. In a few minutes several of the Ince troupe on the promontory had flung ropes to the men who were battling for their lives and hauled them, badly battered and even more badly frightened, to the shore. Henry Sharp's assistant camera man resigned on the spot, but the rest of the troupe are laughing over the incident today.

The accident is one of the most unusual on record, as the tide was going out when the freak wave came in that caused the damage. The cameras later were recovered by the Kanaka divers and were none the worse for wear after being soaked in oil.

Has Had Varied Acting Career

Milton Sills, playing the male lead in Richard Walton Tully's forthcoming all-star production of "Flowing Gold" the Rex Beach novel of that name, did not fall into his screen prestige by any stroke of fate. He has earned it. He was, prior to his motion picture debut, leading man for Belasco, Frohman, Shubert and Brady.

LILA WILL BE LILA

Lila Lee refuses to matriculate in the "Only Their Wives" club. The former Paramount star who spent five years at the Lasky studio after Jesse L. Lasky snared her away from Gus Edwards' Orpheum circuit revue, worships the ground that new recently acquired spouse James Kirkwood prominent male star, walks on, but she refuses to have her own identity as a stellar celebrity sunk in the sea of matrimony and washed over subsequently by the waters of oblivion.

W. W. Hodkinson, with whom Kirkwood and Miss Lee have a contract for a series of pictures, considered releasing them as "Mr. and Mrs. Kirkwood" specials following a precedent set in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Carter de Haven and Mrs. and Mr. Sidney Drew.

When news of his intention hit the Ince studios where the Kirkwoods had already finished one picture and almost completed another, the wrath of the feminine member of the Kirkwood family broke loose.

Nothing doing on the "Mr. and Mrs. stuff," she is reported to have wired Hodkinson. "It's going to be James Kirkwood and Lila Lee, or nothing at all."

She even hinted at an injunction to prevent the release of the pictures made if the "Mr. and Mrs." billing situation was not cleared up.

"I'm not a member of the Lucy Stone League or anything like that" averred Mrs. Kirkwood, "but why should Lila Lee lose all the advertising she has had during the past five years. I love Jim dearly and we are mated for life, and it gives me a thrill to be called Mrs. Kirkwood socially, but when it comes to my career that's another story."

"Yes, I know Mildred Harris billed herself as Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, and Jean Acker as Mrs. Rodolph Valentino, but it's all wet so far as I'm concerned."

Jackie Speaks for Dancing

Ability to do interpretative dancing opens a professional entrance into motion pictures, declares Jacqueline Logan, featured screen actress.

"Good dancers are nearly always certain of a chance to be seen," says Miss Logan. "This is something that cannot be said of a girl who cannot dance. There are countless numbers of times when it is next to impossible to get interpretative dancers to fill the screen demand. Such occasions become opportunities for newcomers to test their film possibilities.

"But there is still another entrance into motion pictures! A really good dancer can enter thru the stage door—that is, she can first win recognition on the stage (an easy matter if she is a good dancer) and then step into the field of silent drama."

Dix Loses Out On Vacation

After less than two weeks' rest in sixteen months, one Lasky player, Richard Dix, gets no end-of-the-year rest. He completed his role opposite Betty Compson in "The Stranger" here on Sunday last and departed post-haste on Monday for New York to immediately commence at the Paramount Long Island studios in "Icebound," the Harvard prize play, under Wm. DeMille's direction. He hopes to return to his home here before February.

How would you like to have a walking stick made of the rib of a whale? Raymond McKee, one of the featured players in Gene Stratton-Porter's own production of her noted book, "A Girl of the Limberlost," has such an interesting relic. It was presented to him by the crew of a whaling boat on which he sailed recently in making a screen production.

Naturalness Is Editing Keynote

Erich von Stroheim is extending the naturalism and utter realistic qualities with which he produced "Greed" to the manner in which he is cutting the picture. The noted Goldwyn director believes a picture, no matter how much care was exerted in making it true to life during actual production may have its realism greatly diluted in the cutting room, if the picture is not completed under the same tenct.

This naturalism in editing and cutting consists of the manner in which the onlooker will view each scene of "Greed." Von Stroheim is placing in the finished picture only those "shots" of scenes which are photographed from a "practical" angle. That is to say, angles from which a human being would see the scene in real life. If the scene is taken in a small room the characters are not shown from an elevated position, as though the onlooker was perched on the chandelier, or draped on the picture moulding.

Also distances will not be altered rapidly during the course of a particular episode. Von Stroheim believes that when a person is watching the course of a "scene" in real life he does not first go within three feet of the people, instantly dash back a couple of blocks and then pounce down in middle distances. His view is generally from a fixed point, near or far, and occasionally his interest is centered on a particular object, such as the face of one of the characters. The onlooker may change his position occasionally but not as a restless kangaroo might do.

These natural angles and the rapid distance changes may be eliminated in cutting, as Von Stroheim is doing. Practically every director takes numerous shots of the same scene, which are selected in the cutting room.

Puts Ruralist in True Light

Probably there is no more difficult form of characterization than that of the rural type because it is so easy to fall into burlesque or to give offense. There are only a comparatively few actors who have attained to a perfect conception of the typical downcast farmer who in the guise of a 'hayseed' has been aped and ridiculed by many inferior comedians for years.

To give a faithful, dignified, yet highly amusing portrayal of this type, is the work of an artist; the sort of portrayal that would not offend but probably please one of the type picturized.

At least this is the opinion of Dan Mason, who perhaps as much as any other man in the acting profession and infinitely more than the vast majority, has brought to the rural role, true appreciation of its most evident peculiarities, and clean and wholesome comedy.

Dan Mason is shortly to start a new series of two-reel rural comedies at the Grand Studio under direction of Jack Nelson and supervision of Paul Gerson, Al Martin functioning as gag man.

He will be recalled by all screen patrons for his inimitable portrayals of "The Skipper" in the Fintaine Fox cartoons as "Pop Tuttle" in the Plum Center comedies. He has established a following and created for himself a circle of admirers hardly second to Denman Thompson in his heydey as Josh Whitcomb. He never resorts to hokum, nor does he descend to buffoonery, yet it is safe to say his comedy gets across as thoroughly as in the case of any comedy character star in the profession. These new comedies will be released by Grand-Asher and work will start somewhere around the first of the year.

Whew! This One Is Awful!

Raymond Griffith, one of the featured players in the Goldwyn production of "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model," has organized a new club that boasts of a tremendous membership, although it has been in existence only a week. It is "The S. S. J. O. Y. W. H. N. B." —in other words meaning "The Society for the Suppression of Jokes on Yes We Haxe No Bananas."

Musical Show in This Cast

A good musical show could be arranged among the cast of Richard Walton Tully's "Flowing Gold," now in production. Craufurd Kent, the heavy, is an accomplished pianist and sings and whistles very well. Alice Calhoun is a pianist of great ability and John Roche has a real voice, having been educated for grand opera, and still cherishing amibitions along that line. Frank Farrington plays the flute and Harry Arras the Saxophone with skill, while Josephine Crowell admits that she twangs a wicked guitar.

Sees Normalcy After New Yea

Recovery from the recent slum in film production in Los Angel and Hollywood has become notic ably accelerated since December and it is only the Christmas ho days that prevent a return to basis of activities full blast, accor ing to a statement just issued W. F. Wood, vice-president a general manager of the Unit Producers and Distributors, a who has completed an exhausti survey of the studio situation thr out Southern California. Witl a fortnight after the New Yea celebration normalcy once m will abide in Filmland, he ad especially so far as the independ producers are concerned.

"All reliable indications point a marked decrease in the prod tion of spectacular films and a other variety costing huge su but there will be more modera priced pictures made during 19 than in any previous year," M Wood continues. "Our compa alone will sponsor the making enough high-class photoplays to r the percentage up to a very cons erable extent, and other indep dent organizations are ready to ahead."

Information received at the H lywood headquarters of the Uni Producers and Distributors fr their district managers in all s tions of the United States indic a very marked revival of inter in motion pictures in general a the less expensive ones in parti lar, this executive's statement ad "Our distribution manager, who just completing a nation-wide c vass of the attitude of the pul toward the screen, advises me t he finds the great majority of masses of common people in an couragingly receptive mood, ea for new ideas in screen entertai ment," he concludes. "Our pl are all laid with the idea of s plying precisely what the ma want at prices they can afford."

Will Essay Stage Rol

Conway Tearle, popular mot picture leading man, will ret to the spoken drama for a b period next season.

Announcement to this effect made by Tearle at the Un Studios where he is playing leading male role in "Lilies of Field." Tearle would not m known the name of the prod or the play due, as he said, the fact that he has been requ to refrain from further announ ment until the latter part of month.

It was learned, however, that will forsake the silent drama s time in February, and journey New York to confer with the p ducer of the play said to h been written by one of Ameri leading dramatists.

"Paris Lights" is the title gi to the comedy with Cliff Boc Sid Smith and Virginia Va which has just been completed Gil Pratt. Al Ray will direct same featured players in the of the series.

PUPPY LOVE THRIVES AT ROACH'S

The course of true love, poetically admitted to be rougher than a Hollywood residential street, was running anything but smooth with the little rascals of Hal Roach's "Our Gang" comedies. Romance was in the air but a forced landing seems imminent.

Mickey Daniels, whose freckled face is becoming symbolic of child screen prodigies, has never made a secret of his admiration for little Mary Kornman, the pretty leading lady of "the gang." He is nine, she is seven. The entire affair has been watched with great excitement by everyone at the Hal Roach Studios. For a time it seemed that Mickey was making great social progress. Then one day Mary returned his ring because it had started to turn green. She had eaten the stick of candy around which it came, so she couldn't return that. But she turned up her nose instead.

One Saturday afternoon Mickey took her to a matinee all by himself. He bought her an ice cream soda afterwards and they munched candy and peanuts all the way home. That one excursion cost him practically all his next week's allowance—and of course girls like that sort of thing. Cupid was smiling on Mickey for a while, but it was not long until Fate laughed aloud.

Bob McGowan and Mark Goldaine, Hal Roach's directors of the "kid" company, took the gang to San Pedro for scenes on the U. S. S. California. There Mary met one of the finest collections of gold braided social lions ever assembled by the navy. For Mary the experience was a riot, but it made Mickey feel lower than a defeated political candidate. Thenceforth she was interested in nothing but gold braid and quarter decks.

Mickey took heart again when the gang finished it's pirate picture. It relieved competition. Back at the studio he gained ground steadily, while Jackie, Ernie, Joe Frank and little Farnia cheered enthusiastically from the side lines. Then came a happy thought. Somebody promised Mickie a collie pup—when it arrived. No crown prince was ever born amid more fervent prayers for his safe entry into this rather futile scheme of things than that pup.

It was the fattest and funniest little dog anyone had ever seen. Mickey lost no time in taking it to Mary. He had intended it as a Christmas gift, but he couldn't wait. His hunch was good. Mary was so excited and pleased that she grabbed Mickey and kissed him, right before the rest of the gang. His face turned redder than his hair and when the others laughed and made fun of him Mickey furiously gave chase. The humor of seeing portly little Joe Frank try to run fast was only equalled by the spectacle of Farnia seeking refuge between Hal Roach's legs. But Mickey was secretly pleased. That night he confided to his mother that he would gladly trade a freckle a day for a similar reward. That same night Mary added the puppy and Mickey to the list of those for whom she sought divine benevolence. Romance again is brewing among Hal Roach's little screen rascals. All the world seems brighter to freckled Mickey Daniels.

Cullen, Ball Hero, Smiles

Cullen Landis is not out for a Carnegie medal but incidentally the popular juvenile lead keeps smiling with a sprained ankle sustained a week ago when playing base ball with the Cullen Landis Cubs while he is putting in long hours at Universal where he is working in Vitagraph's "One Law for the Woman" and the Hollywood Studios where he has the role of evangelist in Finis Fox' "The Woman Who Sinned."

Has Had An Eventful Year

Louise Fazenda will close her year in featured role in comedy drama in which she has negotiated her work on straight lines. Probably "The Galloping Fish," an Ince production ,is giving her the biggest scope she has had to date. Doubtless it is history making in her unique career. A little over a year ago, unconscious of its significance, Louise Fazenda played a straight role and was elaborately costumed in Warner Brohters "The Beautiful and Damned." She had little to do, but what she accomplished was outstanding. Two years ago, for the first time she took off her comedy makeup, dressed up and played it straight in Cosmopolitan's "The Beauty Shop," winning the plaudits of critics everywhere. So here are three interesting land marks, all in a space of two years that are proving the shaping of her career.

Finishes Comedy

Earl Montgomery has completed production on the third of the Educational-Juvenile comedies, "Over the Fence." The youthful members of the cast include Ernest Butterworth, Roger Keene, Joe Butterworth, Jack McHugh, Peter Cartwright, Tommy Hicks and Bonnie Barrett.

SATIRIZES CINEMA HISTORY

Statisticians have recorded 428 erent versions of "the truth ut Hollywood", but Will Rogers tied all previous efforts in his st Hal Roach comedy in which gives the low-down on the high-st of screen history. Rogers' imitable gift for mimicry is once re called into play for this pic-e to show how "the big mo-nts" of famous pictures have n achieved.

With Jay A. Howe directing, he rts with the Keystone Kops and personates Ford Sterling as he is in the teething era of the mo-n picture industry. It was in this uence that Rogers homely but roic countenance stopped the first tard pie of his cinematic career. The former Follies humorist also does a tense scene from "Over the Hill", with a typical Rogers witticism showing how such poignant grief is engendered for the camera. He swings from that to "Robin Hood" and gently pokes fun at the agile Mr. Fairbanks.

A nation-wide panic is expected by Hal Roach when the public sees Rogers as Valentino, re-enacting the famous bull fight in "Blood and Sand."

Marie Mosquini, leading lady for the Rogers' Company, is called upon for several clever impersonations in this satire. She is seen as Mabel Normand with the Keystone Kops, as Lila Lee in "Blood and Sand" and as Enid Bennett in "Robin Hood".

Hides Plot in Garage

Do you know where to find the world greatest movie drama?

Is it in the attic, the cellar, in the inner recesses of your heart, up your sleeve, or is it waiting to be plucked from the dining table between getting out of bed in the morning and breakfast?

An ambitious young lady recently "held up" Ralph Block, recent supervisor of productions for Famous Players-Lasky, and asked him what he thought of her wonderful scenario.

"Sounds interesting," said Block, attempting to maintain a perfect air of movie enchantment.

"It really is a marvelous story," enthused the young lady, "and I've had it hidden in my garage for several years, so's nobody could steal it."

Lige Invents a Folding Flivver

What is the standard conversational topic of the day, the subject to which one can always confidently revert?

It isn't the weather, any more—particularly in California, where there is no "weather," but only sunshine and—more sunshine.

It is the automobile—and, of course, predominantly the "flivver," since these are owned and taken care of by more people than are any other sort. Leaving out the flapper crowd, to whom dancing is the be-all and end-all, a chance phrase about "tire mileage," "new spark plugs," "four cylinders vs. six" or "going over the Pass in high," is more likely than anything else to "step up" a lagging conversation, or even start a whole roomful of people in a babel of argument.

This is the reason Jack White feels that in "Air Pockets" he has a "sure-fire" comedy, for in it Lige Conley plays the part of a young inventor whose life has been given to the perfection of a folding flivver—easy to park, and no garage required.

Fred Hibbard directed, and Olive Borden, Earl Montgomery, Otto Fries, Peg O'Neill and Sunshine Hart are in the cast.

Travesty on Filmland Tales

Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance are doing a travesty on the many "Hollywood" pictures in their current production, "Film Foolish." Cliff is cast as a young "Merton" who wants to get in the movies the worst way—and lands a job as assistant property man. Virginia is the leading lady of the film company.

Mae Busch made a forty-foot dive into the water from the mast of a big schooner travelling at full speed in Finis' Fox' production "The Women Who Sinned" and then a short time later did it the second time for the foreign negative.

A Flair for Drama

entered the vaudeville field he chose this name because "The Ralstons" was the title of his favorite novel, by F. Marion Crawford, one of his dearest friends.

Puritan ancestry is not illogical for an actress. We are inclined to think of the Puritans merely in the light of their moralistic tendencies, but as a matter of fact beneath this forbidding exterior was a great spirit of romance and adventure. It was this that led them to seek their fortune overseas, and it was this same spirit which is necessary for the successful actress.

Esther Ralston is going far. This is the sentiment not only of Ernest Lubitsch and Frank Lloyd, both of whom are certainly capable judges, but also of thousands of film fans everywhere who have seen her work on the screen. In her, Maine gives to the world its fairest flower, worthy to stand in the select group of orchidaceous beauty and talent that is composed of the favorite actresses of filmdom.

A round is ended when the player who started as E becomes E again, after having lost that position. A round should be at least four games and as many more as the number of times E retains his position by winning.

When there are three players only to make up a table they take their position by the throw of the dice in the order of the east, south and west. The four north winds and the two No. 4 seasons are eliminated from the set, as there is no N player. Next week I will tell you about the set, why it is and why it is not. Believe me, I'll be glad when this is over.

of America will do the same. Many of the Central Labor Unions and local unions in cities and towns throughout the country have made definite arrangements to reach each one of their members for a vote.

Many Professional and Technical Groups Are Assisting in the "Referendum"

The American Council on Education is asking the presidents of the colleges and universities to distribute copies of the winning plan and the ballot to every member of their faculties and student bodies. Many other colleges and universities not members of the American Council on Education will also participate in the "referendum."

The American Academy of Political and Social Science is sending the winning plan and the ballot to each of its six thousand members.

The American Library Association, with headquarters in Chicago, is sending to each of the six thousand libraries which are its members copies of the plan and ballots. Over 400 libraries have already placed their "orders" for additional plans and ballots with the Award Committee.

All Religious Groups Participating

One hundred and twenty thousand ministers will present the winning plan and ballots to their congregations through the efforts of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, which includes thirty denominations and represents a church membership of over twenty millions. Each one of these ministers will have a ballot with room for a number of signatures from the members of his congregation. He will certify to the genuineness of these signatures in returning them to the offices of the Award.

The National Catholic Welfare Council, including the National Council of Catholic Men and the National Council of Catholic W will reach every one of its local groups.

The Jewish Welfare Board will reach of its members directly with the plan and accompanied by a letter from its president American Jewish Committee will directly larize its full membership, and it will al upon its affiliated organizations to assist "referendum." The American Jewish Co will submit the plan and ballot to all del in the Congress.

The General Conference of the Religio ciety of Friends will reach many thousa its members all over the country. It wil send out preliminary letters to each one members.

Hundreds of local organizations and i tions of all kinds are co-operating in the erendum." The definite arrangements m these will be announced in the near futu

Don't Scan the Horizon, Says George

George O'Hara, the erudite young star, who has just completed sixteen months of highly successful stardom in "Fighting Blood" has risen through his popularity to the heights of mentor elect to the youth of the country who in their letters to him are constantly asking advice.

"Do the duty that lies nearest to you," is the sage counsel Mr. O'Hara is sending forth.

"This is good advice to anybody and certainly to the fellow in pictures," affirms the star, who began hiscareer at the Sennett Studios where he never dreamed of upstaging any task given him to do. "The trouble is that the majority of people don't appreciate the importance of disposing of the things that are nearest to them. They grope and dream and so time passes. Most of the successful motion picture actors started out in a humble way, grateful merely to be occupied with any branch of the profession. The "prop" man who keeps his eyes open is on the road to success, so is the assistant director, the assistant cameraman and the dispairing extra. Just the accomplishment of the task nearest will work the marvel.

"Of course the things that are farthest are the most alluring. But when one enters the arts, it's a long climb to Olympus and I believe routine is purposely obstructing one's path. If the screen actor will only accept it as part of the game it will automatically become a blessing in disguise."

By strict adherence to a diet of lambchops and pineapple, Jacqueline Logan has managed to loose three pounds and four ounces. This is in preparation for her next feature role at Lasky studio, as yet unannounced.

After a brief rest following the editing of "Flaming Barriers," his latest production, George Melford has been recalled to the Lasky studio to begin preparations for his next picture, which will be started early in January.

"Welcome Stranger" Under Way

Actual filming of "Welcome Stranger", the Belasco production adapted from Aaron Hoffman's Broadway success of the same name, has begun at the United Studios under the direction of James Young.

According to announcement of Edward Belasco, president of the organization, "Welcome Stranger" will be in the nature of a "special" and will be released in six or seven reels.

The play, which ran for a year at the Harris Theater, promises to be an even greater success, according to Director Young who has just returned from New York where he went for a conference with the author regarding the dramatic treatment of the story in the film version.

The all-star cast, which will interpret this play, is headed by Florence Vidor, Lloyd Hughes and Dore Davidson. Each of these three players now is appearing in one or more big productions which has just been completed. Miss Vidor had the leading feminine role in "The Marriage Circle" and "The Virginian". Hughes recently appeared in the male lead of First National's "The Huntress" and Davidson, who won much fame in the father role of "Humoresque", is also a member of the cast interpreting Cosmopolitan's "Cain and Mable."

A number of other film celebreties will be signed this week for parts in "Welcome Stranger".

Rube Boyce, assistant camera man for Richard Walton Tully, was so badly smeared with crude oil during the taking of some gusher scenes for "Flowing Gold", First National's next Tully production, that it became necessary for him to have his hair shingled close to his head. Anna Q. Nilsson, feminine lead of the cast, who recently underwent an internationally famous hair-cut for "Ponjola", now has nothing on Rube.

Gobs Glimpse "Gang's" Capers

A desperate band of buccaneers recently swept down upon the U. S. S. California, Flagship of the Pacific Fleet, ruled supreme for several days, all but scuttled the boat, and then went away. They returned the other night as guests of the ship's officers and men, who saw upon the screen Hal Roach's little rascals in their latest "Our Gang" comedy.

The gobs of Uncle Sam's huge floating fortress had as much fun as the kids themselves during their work on the battleship. It was a pirate picture, in which the gang hoisted a skull and cross-bones on an old fishing boat and started out to loot and pillage. Officers of the warship saw the pirate flag and brought the young buccaneers aboard to see what it was all about. The ship's officers extended Bob McGowan and Mark Goldaine, Hal Roach's directors, every possible courtesy and even appeared as atmosphere in some of the scenes.

The preview on the California, after the picture was completed, was what is technically known in theatrical circles as a riot. Afterwards members of the cast, their parents and a delegation from the Hal Roach Studios were entertained in the officers' quarters.

At last in the annals of science can be written the real definition of "steam". It comes from no less an authority than Gertrude Olmstead, who may be seen cavorting opposite Tom Mix these days in his new picture, "Ladies To Board" on the William Fox Hollywood lot. "Steam", declares Miss Olmstead—and who is there to dispute her?—"is water gone crazy with the heat".

Clyde E. Hopkins, assistant director at the Hal Roach Studios, was cut about the face and hands when his car collided with another machine parked on the wrong side of the road. He was able to come to work the next day—all bandaged up.

Will Celebrate Christmas

Universal City is to have old fashioned English Chri with English Holly, the Yul the roast suckling pig, and a trimmings, for in "The Inhe which King Baggot is to ma the next big Mary Philbin s there are several scenes around the holidays as enjoy John and Mrs. Bull.

"The Inheritors" is an E story by I. A. R. Wylie, for Baggot has personally supe the script, and he has seen that the Yuletide scenes w shot on December 24 or close thereto.

Baggot was the discover Mary Philbin's talents, givin her first big part in "H Hearts" and it is a mutual ure for the star and director re-united at the studio once

Will Golf to Kill Weig

Because he fears the advan the years may eventually him more avoirdupois tha cares to pack around, King Ba famous Universal director, ha cided to go in strong for golf has bought a complete new including the well known kni and is casting longing eyes o greens of the Annandale Co Club, hoping that his wor "The Inheritors," starring Philbin, will give him leisu run out that far and swin clubs about the picturesque An dale scenery. Baggot, when fed by friends about his g prowess, declared that he made a birdie on a Long I golf course, but that he will be satisfied in California unt has made an eagle—and n the nineteenth hole, at that.

Arvid Gillstrom, who is d ing the current Juvenile co for Jack White, directed the picture in which Baby Peggy individually starred. Little nie Fox heads the cast of the production, which deals with Scout life.

Perfume Replaces Music Now

Sid Grauman, profiting by an example of the ancient Greeks, long ago learned to put his audiences into an easily impressionable mood by wafting perfume through his theatres. A night scene in a Hindu temple brought soft lights and a heavy, oriental perfume. A spring afternoon in the sunlit meadows brought brilliant lights and the odor of new-mown hay.

Now comes Carmel Myers with a page from the same book. For several years directors have realized the aid music on the set gives to the picture player. But Miss Myers declares music is an intellectual diversion rather than an emotional stimulus with her and that perfume is the one thing that inspires her moods.

So with each gown she has an individual perfume. For by her gowns you may know her picture play moods. Appealing to the senses of men, in seductive black silk or velvet, she uses the heavy narcissus. Frivolous, in a fussy, furbelowed gown, she uses djer-kiss. Simple and demure, in a straight-lined gown of plain materials, she uses a suggestion of violet. Changeable and chameleon-like, she combines the narcissus and the djer-kiss.

Alberta Vaughn is now engaged at Robertson-Cole in the first of a series of two-reelers, titled "The Telephone Girl," in which she is being featured. Under the direction of Mal St. Claire, the first picture is to be named "Julius Sees Her."

Experience Aided Him

Tom Bates, who plays the role of Judge Halloran in Richard Walton Tully's screen version of "Flowing Gold," is one of the real old-timers. He claims he has performed with traveling repertoire troups in everything from dining-rooms and livery stables to sawmills.

Spiritual Trend in This Part

Cullen Landis is preparing to give to the silversheet his first role of big spiritual proportions in the Finis Fox production, "The Woman Who Sinned" in which he will play an evangelist. Usually cast for sympathetic characterizations and supplying in a picture the note of tenderness and kindness, Mr. Landis goes a step further in an opportunity that will show him a power for good.

With many other serious actors, Mr. Landis believes that the present age is full of uplifting influences following the debacle of the world war and the aftermath of loose ends and that the public welcomes pictures that inspire thought. So he is happy to play such a role as is provided for him in "The Woman Who Sinned" for he thinks it will not only do him no end of good but every serious minded person as well who will see the completed picture.

Freckled Mickey Daniels of Hal Roach's "Our Gang" comedies praises his elders now and then with a classic line. The other day he came to his director wrinkling his nose and squinting his eyes—"Say, Mr. Goldaine—'Why Worry' 'Rosita' about 'The Spat Family' when 'Our Gang' is around?" .....

JOE DED * * By Bert Tracy

Joe Ded says

the difference between Lon Chaney and a gambler is that one hunches his back and the other backs his hunches.

She Went Right Into the Limelight

In the short space of three years, Estelle Taylor, one of the most charming of leading women, has gained an enviable reputation in the picture industry.

Indeed, Miss Taylor's rise has been phenomenal. Cecile DeMille had no sooner engaged her for one of the leading roles in "The Ten Commandments," than Mary Pickford immediately signed her to play Mary Queen of Scots in "Dorothy Vernon of Hadden Hall," which is being made under the direction of Marshall Neilan.

Few dramatically inclined young women merge from schools of dramatics with any degree of success in view. In fact, most of them suffer many trials and tribulations before attaining any measure of popularity. Not so with Miss Taylor. She sprang out of Sargent's Dramatic School in New York into the theatrical limelight in the short space of fifteen months, the time required to complete the course.

It was George B. Hobart, theatrical producer, who first saw the remarkable dramatic ability and versatility in Miss Taylor. And he promptly engaged her for the leading role in "Come on Charlie." Her success was instantaneous. She was in demand not only by theatrical producers, but also by motion picture producers.

Fortunately, she was enabled to accept and perform in both professions. That is to say, while playing before the footlights, she was also able to appear before the silent camera.

Miss Taylor's entire physical appearance, as well as her personality, fulfilled in every degree DeMille's picture of Miriam, the famous Prophetess and sister of Moses, that she was acclaimed a find for "The Ten Commandments." Of medium height, brown hair and brown eyes, and olive skin—this, in short, describes Miss Taylor.

Throughout her entire motion picture experience she has played leads or heavy leads. For the past two and a half years she was with Fox Film Corporation. Some of the most prominent of Miss Taylor's appearances have been made in "While New York Sleeps," "Blind Wives," "Footfalls," "Bavu," "The Count of Monte Cristo," "Scarlet Shadows," "A Fool There Was," and "Thorns and Orange Blossoms."

The Star of Bethlehem

And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord came upon them; and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, "Fear not: for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you; ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger." And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and singing, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men." Luke 2: 8-14.

Christmas . . . cold, bitterly cold . . . swirling snow through a black sky . . . the frosty gleam of a myriad stars . . . echoes resounding o'er the countryside . . . Yuletide clamor in the cities . . . the warmth and cheer of a thousand hearthfires . . . three thousand miles away . . . the soft lapping of the tide on a southern strand . . . gay zephyrs capering through languid palm trees . . . the call of a nightbird . . . snow-capped mountains . . . the voluptuous fragrances of semi-tropical lands . . . Christmas.

Great monarchs, warriors, scholars and artists, geniuses whose names and achievements Time cannot dim, have come and gone in the centuries since the Star of Bethlehem heralded the birth of the King, yet today there is no time of the year when we so unanimously turn to commemoration and celebration. It seems that when Christmas draws nigh, urged by some unseen power, our thoughts turn to the fine things of life with increased fervor and devotion, and our efforts and enthusiasm are all directed to bring greater joy and happiness to one another.

Entrenched armies in the height of terrific battle; great naval armadas moving to war; soldiers and statesmen directing the destiny of the world, all have declared a lull when Christmas came 'round, and peace has hovered over them while they spread cheer in the true Christmas spirit. Why they have thus momentarily dropped their quarrels is unknown; even they would be at a loss to explain it. It is just the Spirit of Christmas and it has worked in this miraculous fashion for hundreds of years.

It is the same story from one end of the earth to the other, in the snowy regions of the north or the everlasting summer of the south. Christmas has a great, an indefinable meaning, that all respect. It embodies joy, happiness, peace, fraternity, good-fellowship. It is a suggestion of the ideal state toward which the people of the earth have been striving since time immemorial. And its symbol is the Star of Bethlehem, leading on and on to perfect and well-ordered mortal life, and then leading on to what we do not know, but of which we have conjectured much. And while the world and its people are still far from the goal it seems that they are making progress, if one will only overlook some of the sad conditions of today and compare them, even in their present state, with conditions a century or two ago. Yes, the world is coming along nicely and the wish for "peace on earth; good-will toward men" is a genuine and inspired one that will some day resolve into an accepted state of affairs throughout the universe.

And this Christmas may the reflected light of the Star of Bethlehem lead each and every one of us to greater endeavor in the year to come, and create among us a more harmonious and fraternal intercourse. Thus we will be doing our bit to make the Christmas spirit abide with us throughout the entire year and the years to come.

The Shorter Feature

By MAURICE TOURNEUR

The picture business will see striking improvements the next season. The improvements will be evident in every phase of picture making, from the time a story is purchased for production, through the production process on to the final stage of publicity and exploitation.

It is my opinion, therefore, that next season will bring about—

First: Shorter, more dramatic features.

Second: The two-a-day policy will gain greater vogue in the larger cities.

Third: Waste in production will be eliminated, and more efficiency will be utilized in the present method of making pictures.

There is no doubt in my mind that the shorter length feature of the five or six-reel type will be made by all far-sighted producers. It has often been contended that a producer could not do justice to most stories within this limit. A contradiction to this belief and its proof can be found in the fact that during the earliest days of picture making the most powerful and dramatic of stories were made in three or four reels. They resorted to no padding in those days, and there is no reason why the early state of affairs cannot be put in force today with all the modern contrivances and lighting technique.

But a mere glance at the trade journals, and a conference with leading exhibitors throughout the country, has convinced me that the shorter feature is in great demand. And quite naturally so. For it gives an exhibitor an opportunity to vary his program, to make it more interesting and worth while for his patrons. This fact born in mind by producers will be a great factor in swinging the public pendulum toward a greater appreciation of the motion picture.

Heretofore, very little if any attention has been paid to the two-a-day policy. A handful of theatres have tried and are still trying the experiment, and in many of these cases it is proving very valuable indeed. Only production, of course, of a very high calibre can help to increase the idea of the two-a-day plan. Next season will see these productions, and next season will also see a large number of theatres in the bigger cities putting over this effective and profitable policy.

The curtailment of waste in the business has been dealt with in every form and variety, by leading producers. Some of their arguments are sound and constructive, but they all fail in pointing out the key to the entire situation. Briefly, it is this: When a story is finally selected for production, the entire skeleton leading to its production must be gone over carefully. The waste in production has been due to carelessness in not thoroughly planning beforehand. Producers merely made notations of what was needed, and then proceeded to film themselves into financial ruin. If the elements necessary to picture making are carefully weighed, discussed and scheduled there can never be a just cause for expenditures far beyond a producer's dreams.

Alberta of the Chic Shrug

By JAMES M. FIDLER

An expressive shrug of a pretty shoulder, chic raising of the other, may have lead to the fall of more men than one, but it brought out the rise of Alberta Vaughn in the motion picture industry.

Like all young girls who are now playing featured roles in photoplays, Miss Vaughn had to start in the business. Like most of them, her debut was not without its hardships. Plodding from studio casting office to studio casting office was only one of her woes. At the time when she decided to make her career one of entertainment of the world at large, Alberta was very, very young—barely fifteen years of age.

Her first experience before the camera was a lucky one; lucky, in that she was required to wear an evening gown that was cut exceedingly low in the back. In Virginia, where the youthful Miss Vaughn hailed from before her initiation into Hollywood society, that gown would have won for her the combined censure of every minister and possible Blue Law advocate in the state. But in the movies, it was quite the thing.

Miss Vaughn had at that time, and still has, one of the most beautiful backs in the studios. Her appearance in the evening gown was startling, not because the gown was more immodest than others or because there weren't others on the set just as low-cut; but simply because Miss Vaughn's beautiful shoulders and back are such that people who see them gasp and stare in undisguised admiration. On this particular occasion the entire aggregation of people on the set stared. Not the least important of those who expressed admiration was George Melford, then and now a producer with Famous Players-Lasky. It was Melford who was making the picture in which Miss Vaughn made her debut before the camera. That picture was later titled "The Faith Healer."

To a certain extent, Miss Vaughn's back worked a disadvantage to her. This was because, on account of its beauty, Melford requested her to stand close to the camera—but with her back toward the lens. A severe blow! However, Melford's attention rivited on her throughout the scenes that followed. He perceived that she "could almost talk with her shoulders"; that she expressed more with her back to the camera than most of the others did facing the lens.

Melford immediately gave her a bit. Miss Vaughn was just as pretty in the face as her shoulders and back indicated, but she was very young—only fifteen. It was this age that proved a handicap. Had she been older, she would have played an important role in "The Faith Healer." As it was, Melford predicted great things for her and sent her to interview L. M. Goodstadt, Lasky casting director. Again, her age was against her. Paramount had no opening then (this was two years ago) for a fifteen-year-old girl. But Goodstadt, interested in her beauty, her expressive eyes and her beautiful shoulders and back, placed her name in a book for future reference.

However, the initial foundation for fame had been already been laid. The story of the expressive back and of the "talking shrug" passed from mouth to mouth. It became common knowledge within a few days and little Miss Vaugn was called to the Fox studios.

There her actual career began. She was cast in small bits. Her ability brought her newspaper notices and her personality elicited fan letters—something almost unheard of for a player of such small parts. It is an actual fact that when she was not given screen credit, fan letters arrived at the Fox studio addressed to "The pretty brown-eyed girl who played in such-and-such a picture."

Between times, Miss Vaughn went out and won honors in several beauty contests. But she became so busy that limited time prevented her making a practice of this. She entered three contests, carried off two first places and was one of several winners in the third.

All these things seized upon the attention of Mack Sennett, who makes few bad selections when he chooses his leading ladies. He called Miss Vaughn she had now passed her sixteenth birthday) for an interview. Out of it came a contract, and she became a leading lady in Sennett comedies; wonderful progress for a girl who had been in the

Alec B. Francis, and his bride spent last week in San Francisco on their honeymoon. On Saturday evening Mr. Francis made a personal appearance at both the California and the Granada Theaters to speak in behalf of the forthcoming Wampas ball, and as usual met with a warm reception from the large audiences.

Milton E. Hoffman, managing director of the Metro Studios, and his wife spent a day or two last week in San Francisco, en-route to Honolulu. They said that the trip was one purely for rest and pleasure after two years of very hard work, and that they were looking forward even more to the pleasures of the sea voyage than to Honolulu itself. They expect to be back in town in time for the Wampas ball in January.

Articles of incorporation for the Mazdashea Picture Corporation, a new production organization to have headquarters in San Francisco, were filed with the county clerk last week. The capitalization is $500,000.

"Scaramouche" is in the fifth and last week of its successful run at the Capitol Theatre. "The White Sister", screen version of F. Marion Crawford's famous novel, will follow in the theatre, opening on the evening of Dec. 23rd. This picture made in Italy, and starring Lillian Gish, has been drawing huge crowds in the east wherever it has been shown, and is said to be not only one of the largest and most expensive pictures of the year, but one of the most artistic. Ned Holmes, who is handling the exploitation of the film came to town last week, and is a guest at the St. Francis.

Garrett Graham, head publicity man of the Roach Studios, and at present loaned to the Wampas, came to town last Saturday to begin the advance work for the staging of the big Wampas Ball and Frolic at the Civic Auditorium on the evening of January Nineteenth. Even before his arrival the event had been started off with a rush by the purchase by Louis Graf, president of the film organization that bears his name, of a thousand tickets. Prominent city officials, the members of the press, educators, and social leaders are all willing to lend their hearty support and endorsement, and the honorary and active committees of the mammoth ball will read like "Who's Who in The World of Affairs."

Max Graf, director of production for the Graf Films, will return from New York where he has been for some weeks on business for the organization, within a few days. He will stop over in Los Angeles on his way home to make some of the preliminary arrangements for the filming of "The Wise Son", screen version of Charles Sherman's widely read novel, work on which will begin early in January at the Pacific Studios in San Mateo.

One of the largest advance sales ever recorded in San Francisco is that for "Lightnin'" coming to the Columbia Theatre next Sunday. The play's record-breaking run of three years on Broadway, and two in Chicago, the fact that Frank Bacon, its author a until his death, its leading man, was a S Francisco boy, and the promise of part of t original New York company, has combined make an unparalleled demand for the seats.

The members of the Screen Civic Clu which includes in its membership considerab vaudeville talent, entertained the wounde veterans at Letterman General Hospital wi a varied, and enjoyable program one nig last week.

Two committees visited Los Angeles la week to lay before the Southern Californ Picture Producers, the advantages and poss bilities of San Francisco as a picture makir center. The committies included F. T. Litcl field, director of the industrial department the Chamber of Commerce; L. V. Riddle, pres dent of the Homebuilders association; Cly Healy, assistant city engineer, John Daniel, the Parkside Realty company; Supervisors Emmet Haydon, Angelo J. Rossi, Richa Welch, and Daniel O'Brien, chief of police.

Margaret Stewart, charming screen actres arrived on the liner Wilhelmina from Hawa last week. She has been working on a pictu there.

Richard Thomas, young director was i Oakland lately and announced the early filn ing of William Dudley Pelley's story "Wh Women Love", to be made in Oakland an backed by Oakland capital. The filming wi begin early in January, and the technical sta

Palmborg's Paragraphs

(Being one of a series of impressions of film folk and cinemaland anecdotes as written by a motion picture insurance man. By C. F. Palmborg, special analyst and Hollywood representative of the New York Life Insurance Company).

Never have I heard anything but praise for Conrad Nagel. Wherever his name is mentioned—in the office, the studio or the home, people become interested and make statements such as "Now there is a fine fellow, I admire him very much," or "He is a man I would like to know."

I, too, am one of his admirers. There is something about him that wins a person right from the start. Perhaps it is his friendliness, which is so sincere, or his smile that is bound to inspire confidence.

His personal appearance is very pleasing—a tall chap, slight of build, active and agile, with blue eyes, and golden hair. One immediately feels his wholesomeness—that he is strong, gentle and refined, a man who can be depended upon.

I had the pleasure of meeting his father Dr. Nagel, a fine, serious-minded man, with decided opinions of right and wrong. The influence of his training and association with his son is plainly seen. He, also, is an artist of note—an accomplished pianist.

Conrad Nagel would succeed in the business world, just as he has in his chosen career. He has a goal in view towards which he is working; he has directness and force and a certain purpose in life which he aims to carry out. He is not one who is carried hither and yon by the winds of fate; he knows the direction he is headed for and he is sticking to that course.

Being very popular he is much in demand and his working hours are long. While he and I were conducting our business it was necessary for me to see him several times. As he often left for work early in the morning and did not return until late at night our appointments were at the studio or on locations, snatched at times when he was not on the set.

It was interesting to watch him swing into the character he was playing, instantly changing from the Conrad Nagel I knew, to the man in the story. His facial expressions would change immediately and his walk and manner of carrying himself, until there was an entirely different person before me. He did it all so naturally and easily—he simply stepped into another man's personality. As soon as he was through, he was back with me, picking up the threads of the conversation, as though there had been no interruption.

He has a dear little daughter named Ruth who is the apple of his eye. His wife is a cultured, winsome lady devoted to her home and family. They have a delightful home nestled on the side of a Hollywood hill, with a spacious lawn about it for the small daughter to play on.

The three are great pals and are seldom separated. Whenever he is called east, which is often, the rest of the family pack their luggage and go with him. I should judge that he is not contented without them and a man cannot give the best that is in him when discontented. Realizing this his wife establishes their home wherever he is called.

We can look for big things from Conrad Nagel—he is a builder, a thinker, an industrious worker. He has laid a firm foundation and his future is assured.

PEACE: GOODWILL:

By Eric Mayne

A Merry Christmas to us all, and God bless us every one.

The Angeles sang, "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

The Heavenly introduction of the greatest spiritual and moral teacher this earth has ever known.

The Angels sang that song of glorified humanity, but the world of men has never joined in the chorus.

Today the greatest evidence of strong and acceptable manhood is the readiness to fight.

If a country thinks well enough of a man to accept him as a countryman, he must be ready to fight.

If a man has any pride in, and devotion to his country, he must fight.

The greatest proof of Patriotism is the readiness to fight.

If a man will not fight, neither shall he live;—at any rate not as a straight forward, self-respecting man—.

There are no exceptions to this Pacifist prejudices, conscientious objections are of no avail. If a Country wishes to live it must fight, and if a man wishes to live in that Country he must fight. Before God and man he can do no other.

And yet the Angels sang of "Peace on earth, and good will toward men."

The words are easy, but the desires of man are not in harmony with the Spirit.

The ear of man is not yet attuned to that song.

The message of Christ was simple, but the eye of man has not yet seen its beauty, or the mind grasped its significanc.

Elaborate and gorgeous tapestries, melodious and sensous music, subdued and restful lights sometimes cloud the vision and perplex the understanding.

But civilization is advancing. There is more manliness, more beauty, more strength, more good will in the world today than ever before.

Christ taught the individual. The multitude is reached through the individual.

When the teaching of Christ dominats the World, Angels and men will join in the great Chorus, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

GOLDWYN ANNOUNCES FIRST THREE OF "BEN-HUR" CAST!

FRANK LLOYD NAMES SILLS AS "SEA HAWK"

Will Buccaneer In Title Role

Milton Sills to play the titular r[ole] in "The Sea Hawk."

After deliberating for six weeks m[ak]ing innumerable screen tests a[nd] many interviews Frank Lloyd, i[nd]ependent producer-director has p[ic]ked Mr. Sills from more than t[hir]ty internationally famous s[cr]een players as the man best fit[te]d to play the dual character of S[ir] Oliver Tresillian and Sakr-el-[Bah]r, hawk of the seas.

The selection of Mr. Sills for t[he] title role of "The Sea Hawk" i[s] regarded in Hollywood as a d[is]tinct tribute to the artistry of t[he] actor for the leading charac[te]r of the famous Sabatini novel [and] perhaps a more dominant per[so]nality than even "Robin Hood."

Mr. Lloyd will begin production o[f] "The Sea Hawk" by filming the [g]reat sea battles on the high seas a [fe]w days after Christmas. "The [Sea] Hawk" will be a First National Picture and because of its ac[tio]n and its cost, is expected to be [on]e of the legitimately big spec[ta]cles of 1924.

Barbara Tennant With Baby Peggy

Barbara Tennant has been [ad]ded to the cast of "Captain [Jan]uary," Baby Peggy's first fea[tu]re production for Principal Pic[tu]res Corporation.

Miss Tennant will be remem[be]red for her fine performance as [the] mother of Jackie Coogan in "Circus Days," also made by Prin[ci]pal Pictures. Her role in "Cap[tai]n January" is that of Lucy [Tri]pp, who befriends the little [Cap]tain, played by Baby Peggy, [and] endeavors to protect her from [the] well-meaning but unimagina[ti]ve townspeople who set out to [ta]ke her away from her daddy-[Cap]tain, played by Hobart Bos[wo]rth.

Hersholt Again With Connie

Jean Hersholt is supporting [Con]stance Talmadge for the third [ti]me in "The Gold Fish."

Irving Ready For Kickoff

I. W. Irving, who will produce features for the United Producers and Distributors release, has completed the continuity for his first story, the working title of which will be "Devotion" and in the cast of which will be such popular photoplayers as Sheldon Lewis, Gladys Brockwell, Joseph Dowling and June Norton.

Has Swift Recovery From Hurts

Jackie Vernon, who ranks among our most popular present-day juveniles, is making speedy recovery from injuries sustained recently during the filming of Norman Taurog's production at the Fine Arts studio. He speaks in highest praise of Ben White, Taurog, and others who gave him immediate attention, rushing him to the hospital and seeing that his every want was fulfilled.

Todd Adds Lustre to Gibson Film

Harry Todd, whose eccentric antics have delighted motion picture fans many years, is again adding his humor to a Hoot Gibson production at Universal City.

He recently played an important role in "Courtin' Calamity," Gibson's latest feature to be completed and has been cast for one of the principal roles in "The Cocopah Kid," filming of which has just started under the direction of Edward Sedgwick.

Finishes As Monty's Mother

Martha Franklin has just finished the role of the mother in "Racing Luck," the new Monty Bank's comedy for Grand-Asher release.

Creighton Hale has given up plans for a short vaudeville tour, having tried out some one-act plays and finding none to his liking.

Walsh, Olmsted and Key Chosen for Coveted Roles; Will Start Soon

"Ben Hur" has been chosen, with two other members of the cast for the film version of that story.

That was the announcement made yesterday by F. J. Godsol, president of the Goldwyn Pictures corporation, which is preparing to film the Lew Wallace classic on a scale never attempted before.

George Walsh will play Ben Hur.

Gertrude Olmsted will play Esther, leading feminine role.

Kathleen Key will play Tizrah, sister of Ben Hur.

The announcement that Walsh is to play the title role sets at rest rumors which have identified almost every actor in pictures with the part.

The picture, which will be made abroad, will be filmed on a gigantic scale. Charles J. Brabin, who has been selected to direct the production, and Edward J. Bowes, Goldwyn vice-president, with a large technical staff, are now in Europe, preparing to begin actual camera work.

They will be joined shortly by June Mathis, Goldwyn editorial director, who adapted "Ben Hur" to the screen. She will remain in Europe with the company during the making of the picture.

Just when the members of the cast will leave for Europe has not yet been decided. Announcement of other players for the cast will be made soon, according to Mr. Godsol.

Filming Early Hollywood Days

Fred Caldwell is now shooting "Hollywood in 1900" the fifth of the series of pictures for Selznick distribution. The cast selected by Caldwell and Dent, the latter being west coast representative for Myron Selznick, include Victor Potel, Charles Mack, Muriel Reynolds, Violet Schram, Cecil Caldwell and others.

Jennings Signed For Philbin Film

DeWitt Jennings has been signed for one of the leading roles in "The Inheritors" starring Mary Philbin for Universal. Jennings will play a man of recently acquired millions, who buys the castle, bumps into old families and marries his son to the girl.

Carmel Signed For "Poisoned Paradise"

Carmel Myers has signed a contract with B. P. Schulberg to portray one of the featured parts in Robert W. Service's "Poisoned Paradise."

Miss Myers has just completed her characterization opposite John Barrymore in "Beau Brummel" and will start shortly in the Schulberg production. She will portray the part of Mrs. Belmire in the popular Service novel. The characterization will be somewhat similar to her part in "Slave of Desire" which marked her foremost portrayal during the past year.

McKim Up to Bad Tricks Again

Robert McKim's ironic villainy is much in demand at Universal City. He finished a four weeks' engagement with the Jack Hoxie company and was immediately cast for the "heavy" in Hoot Gibson's new starring feature, "The Cocopah Kid," now in production under Edward Sedgwick's direction.

McKim plays a type of role for which he is famous, that of an old time western gambler, including the high hat and frock coat. The story is a romance of the early days in California when highwaymen were gentlemen and robbed only the men and killed only when it was absolutely necessary.

Hoot plays the role of "The Cocopah Kid," a youthful cowboy who plays bandit to make his girl think he is heroic and whose characterization is so realistic that he has to do a lot of hard riding and close shooting to keep his neck out of a noose that dangles from the limb of a cottonwood tree.

Gagsters Give Christie Lift

Al Christie has added two new members to his prolific scenario staff. Archie Mayo, who has been active for years in the field of comedy both as a writer and as a director and Earl Rodney, have been signed by the Christie organization in the capacity of gagmen. Frank Conklin, Robert Hall, and Walter Graham, veteran Christie writers, have long been working overtime in preparing Christie Comedies and the new members were welcomed with open arms. The writers are now preparing stories in which Bobby Vernon and Jimmie Adams will star.

Will Enjoy Installment Tour

Jacqueline Logan plans to see the world a part at a time during the next few years.

Unable to get away from her studio activities for any great length of time, the actress will visit foreign nooks in the vacation between pictures. Her first tour, which will be taken next Spring, is to be to Honolulu. Her second trip will not take place until the autumn months of 1924, when she plans to go to Panama and South America.

In this way, says Miss Logan, she will be able to spend more time in each place than she would on a hurried tour of the world. She believes that by touring in this way, she will receive real benefit from her trips to foreign climes.

Will Have Yuletide Office-Warming

The new U. P. D. Building, 1606-B Highland avenue, Hollywood, was completed last Saturday and the United Producers and Distributors are moving in now, expecting to be entirely installed before Christmas.

Gilbert Through

John Gilbert has finished work in his latest Fox picture, "Just Off Broadway," adapted by Frederic and Fanny Hatton from their stage play of that name, under the direction of Edmund Mortimer. Supporting Mr. Gilbert is Marian Nixon, leading lady; Ben Hendricks, Jr., heavy, and others.

Bennett Starts in Two Weeks

Chester Bennett has so far recovered from his recent operation that he expects to be shooting the first scenes on his next production starring Jane Novak within the next two weeks.

Tom Mix has finished work in his new William Fox production "Ladies to Board," direction of Jack Blystone. Supporting Mr. Mix is Gertrude Olmsted, leading lady; Philo McCullough, heavy; Pee Wee Holmes, Fay Holderness and others.

Sherwood Says:

Without a doubt the foremost critic and writer on motion picture subjects in this country is Robert E. Sherwood, dramatic editor of the New York Herald and contributor to "Life."

It is unusually interesting, therefore, to note what he has to say in the December 13th issue of "Life," where in his impressionistic short story entitled "Another Christmas in Hollywood," he writes of the thoughts and Yuletide ruminations of a film extra, likening him, in modern parallel, to Dickens' character Scrooge in "A Christmas Carol." The following excerpts from his tale reveal Sherwood's esteem of The Digest of the Motion Picture Industry:

". . . .So the Old Extra was alone in his limited apartment. He prepared himself for the night, hung up his clothes to dry, and retired silently, taking to bed with him a copy of "Camera!" that he might learn of the pictures contemplated for production and the possible chances for employment . . . So, as he turned the pages of the trade paper which carried all the up-to-the-minute news of studioland, he mused upon the dear, dead days when Christmas was Christmas—in the true Dickensian sense . . ."

We thank Sherwood for this fine recognition, and wish to assure him that we will always endeavor to maintain "Camera's!" high place as the Voice of Filmdom even as "Life" is the Voice of Fundom.

Producer Adds Himself to Cast

If you look carefully, when you see Richard Walton Tully's forthcoming First National production "Flowing Gold," you may see the famous producer, himself. Yesterday, after most of the actors had been excused for the day, it was discovered that one more short scene was necessary. They were shooting on the big hotel lobby, built to represent the leading hotel of Dallas, Texas, and "atmosphere" was needed. Not only did Tully, himself, pass through the lobby, but Billy Wood, the art director, George Reehm, assisting director, and numerous others of the Tully technical department became actors for the moment.

"MISSOURIAN" AS INITIAL DENNY STELLAR VEHICLE; MEXICO TALE

"The Missourian," a popular novel by Eugene P. Lyle, with a romantic background and a sweep of historical narrative that is interest-compelling, has been purchased by the Universal Pictures corporation as an elaborate starring vehicle for Reginald Denny.

"The Missourian" will be produced after long preparation and will represent the highest methods of picture making. A story of the fight of Mexico for freedom against Maxmillian, the fickle-minded, power-intoxicated emissary of Napoleon the Third, with a hero who gained the nickname in the Civil War of "The Storm Center" because of his insatiate appetite for "action," this novel presents the most intensely dramatic elements possible. The hero is an ex-confederate soldier whose intense zeal and bravery in the losing fight won't die when he is defeated, and to work out his destiny he goes to Mexico, joins the patriotic forces under Juarez and lives up to his title of "The Storm Center" by crashing thru the solid ranks of the Maxmillian puppet army and knocking the European imperial rule into a tumbled mass of tinsel.

The spirit of adventure and reckless abandon in this story gives it big possibilities for the romantic hero of "The Leather Pushers," "The Abysmal Brute," "The Kentucky Derby," and "Sporting Youth." Bernard McConville and James Spearing have made the adaptation and Spearing will prepare the scenario. Under McConville's guidance as supervising editor of Universal-Jewel and super-Jewel "specials" the story has been constructively criticised and discussed from every angle in frequent staff conferences.

"The Missourian" will be produced after the filming of "Love Insurance," Earl Derr Biggers' novel in which Denny will start work when he is fully recovered from the effects of a near-fatal automobile accident which confined him to his bed for ten weeks.

"Men May Come and Men May Go, But . ."

From generation to generation, man has been able to point out the whereabouts of woman with the mere statement:

"She's putting on the greens."

Fifteen years ago, according to George Melford, prominent screen director, when a man was asked where his wife was, he would respond, "Why she is in the kitchen, putting on the greens."

"But times have changed," moans Melford. "A few days ago I called on a friend. Noting that it was past the dinner hour and he looked hungry, I asked him where his wife was.

"He replied dismally, 'Why, she is on the golf course, putting on the greens.'"

Jackie Is Out One Tooth

Little Jackie Condon of Hal Roach's "Our Gang" went to bed the other evening with all his teeth, but upon awakening he found one was gone. He's wondering if he'll have to wear a false one.

Bad Man Wants His Daily Tea

Big Jim Gavin who plays the character lead in Hal Roach's new picture "Somewhere in Missouri," caused a young riot among some visitors in the studio cafeteria the other day when he appeared in make-up with his red undershirt, leather apron, big boots and everything to make him look "hard-boiled." He strode in and demanded—tea and toast. Gavin is an Australian and the afternoon refreshments habit is stronger than the thought of public opinion, even if he does not look like tea and toast. Ena Gregory, Stan Laurel's petite leading lady is also an Australian and a tea fan. Every afternoon finds her in the cafeteria at tea time.

Fly Makes Time Fly

One lone fly held up production on the Will Rogers set at the Hal Roach Studios on a recent Sunday. Perhaps it was too cold to act or the fly didn't like Sunday work but whatever the reason—the company had to wait three hours for the insect to light on a lump of sugar. The bit of business was necessary in a new Will Rogers comedy.

Cast Almost Ate Atmosphere

Jack Radke is assisting Joseph De Grasse and George Reehms in the direction of "Flowing Gold," the famous oil story. Radke is one of the best known stunt men in motion pictures, but says his greatest stunt was to keep the food for a perfectly good dinner in existence long enough to photograph it, yesterday. Anna Q. Nilsson, Milton Sills, Josephine Crowell, John Roche and Bert Woodruff were gathered about the festive board. You see, it was real, not "prop" food, and the had been working six hours without sustenance.

Bowlers Clash Each Midweek

The Hal Roach Studios bowling team meets the Harold Lloyd Studio bowling team every Wednesday evening. Members of the Hal Roach team are: Tom Crizer, George Jeske, Charles Levin, Jack A. Howe, Burt Currigan and Harry Gerstadt. Those on the Harold Lloyd team are: Harold Lloyd, Gaylord Lloyd, "Red" Golden, Fred Newmyer, Henry Koh ler and Walter Lundin.

We wish you a Merry Christmas, *of course, but we wish you much, much more than merely a merry one. One full of wistful, misty memories of Christmases gone by. Renewing old ties of friendship, and binding new ones closer. Deepening a sense of home. Dipping down, down into and stirring the pools of sentiment, just a little out of fashion now, perhaps, but the well-springs of the best that life affords us, for all that. And clearer thoughts of life itself, as revealed to us in the One whose birth we celebrate. Sparklers In U. P. D. Comedy

There are three stars in the cast of the first Estee comedy made for distribution through the newly organized United Producers and Distributors and which was completed last week at Universal City. These stellar players are: Harry Tighe, Ned Sparks and Billie Malone. The director is also something of a star himself and in numerous artistic lines, for he is none other than Bryan Foy, son of the famous Eddie Foy.

Is Talented In Portraiture

Anders Randolf, who is now interpreting Sir George Vernon in "Dorothy Vernon of Hadden Hall," is also a brush artist of unusual talent. Mr. Randolf has been engaged through Edward Small to paint a portrait of Corinne Griffith immediately upon the completion of his Pickford role.

Muriel Vamps "Kid" For Doll Dresser

Muriel Frances Dana, the clever screen-kiddie whose sunny smile for everybody around the various studios where she has worked during her two years in the movies has won her the title of "Sunshine Pal," recently completed a prominent role in "Daddies" at the Warner Brothers studio and is busily preparing for the Christmas festivities. The nickname was so appropriately bestowed upon Muriel out at the Ince studio, where she appeared in her first film, "Hail the Woman," and has followed her to the Robertson-Cole, Metro, Warner Brothers and other studios where she has taken her quaint ways and sunshiny smile to play in many pictures.

Under the direction of Ralph Ceder, Hal Roach's "Spat Family" will begin work on a comedy built around a family who set out to give a charity affair, hiring noted actors and actresses to entertain for them, only to be disappointed by their non-appearance. They try to entertain themselves—but that's where the fun begins. Lloyd French will assist Ceder.

England Dickers For Louise

Louise Lorraine who has just completed the last episode in H. C. Witmer's "Fighting Blood" series has received an offer to go to England for a series of three starring productions to be filmed in England and on the Continent.

PRINCIPAL PICTURES PLAN BIG 1924; LESSER IS EXUBERANT

That 1924 is going to be the biggest productive year since the beginning of Principal Pictures Corporation, is the firm conviction of Sol Lesser, president of that organization.

"Fling wide the gates!"

This seems to be the slogan of the Principal plant and studios on the West Coast. With the recent slump in production drawing to a close, the Principal Pictures studios were among the first to resume activities.

Every available square foot of ground and studio space within the seventeen acres of our Hollywood plant will be utilized thruout the forthcoming season, says Lesser.

And when one stops to realize the programme mapped out for the Principal output next year, is it any reason that this statement not be correct?

Baby Peggy has already commenced the first of her super-features. "Captain January" is the title of the story. It will be in full feature length and will be but one of a series of four for the first year. Edward F. Cline is in charge of the direction of this series.

The second Harold Bell Wright production, "The Winning of Barbara Worth," is another big production to be given the screen during the coming year. This and two more Wright pictures will be made before the new season is brought to its close.

"Secrets of Life," the Louis H. Tolhurst series of microscopic pictures will also be in full operation. Twelve of these educational and amusement pictures are scheduled.

In addition to the above, there will be made a series of films adapted from well known books and stage plays. Chief among these are John Cort's famous stage success, "Listen Lester," and Owen Davis' footlight hit "Fools of Fortune." The best known players will be engaged to participate in these offerings and the services of the best available directors will be utilized. Two directors are now under the Principal banner, i. e., William Beaudine and William Seiter. Edward F. Cline is already well under way on the Baby Peggy series.

"For 1924," says Sol Lesser, "I can see an epoch of Westerns. By this I naturally mean Westerns of the highest quality in every sense of the word. They will take the place of the costume plays that have been on the screen for the past two years or more.

"The amusement seeking public do not care for deep plot in picture presentation any longer," continues Lesser. "The time is ripe and the fans are awaiting pictures that contain intimate drama, action, detail, light and shade in touch. The $2.00 attraction is fast giving way and I predict that during the forthcoming season, only an occasional $2.00 picture will be a profitable investment. The public have been educated to attend a picture in a picture theatre and that education has been indelibly stamped in their minds. They want to witness picture presentation in picture theatres."

The first Harold Bell Wright story is already completed and will be released by First National early in the year. "When a Man's a Man" is the title and it was selected from the entire Wright series as the most appropriate story to be made as first of the nine Pincipal Pictures control.

Irving M. Lesser, vice-president of Principal Pictures maintains the eastern organization of the company and is in charge of distribution while Sol Lesser, president and Mike Rosenberg, secretary are located on the West coast. Sol Lesser is devoting his time between the production of Principal's product and his work as vice-president of the giant West Coast Theatres, Inc., chain in California.

That 1924 will be a happy, prosperous year for everybody in the great picture industry is the firm prediction of all concerned and nothing will be done toward slackening the pace that has been started.

"Fling wide the gates"—that's the Principal Pictures Corporation slogan for 1924. The gates are open and the wheels of production are in motion. Their machine will not stop and will endeavor to give to the screen a production offering in series form that will be relished by exhibitor, distributor and picture patrons alike.

SEELING WILL DOUBLE OUTPUT

A ambitious 1924 program has just been outlined by Charles R. Seeling, who has attained prominence as a producer of westerns and short dramas featuring such players as George Larkin and "Bill Boy" Williams.

Upon the advent of the New Year he will commence work on the first of twenty-four features to be produced during the coming year. Twelve of these will have George Larkin in the stellar role.

During the season just past Seeling made six films with Larkin and they were so enthusiastically received that he decided to double his output of them during 1924.

The other stars who will be featured under the Seeling banner will be announced just as soon as final papers have been signed and vehicles selected. It is understood that among the remaining twelve there will be four specials with all-star casts.

Finn Shuffler Yearning For Home

Hank J. Hawkins, distribution manager of the United Producers and Distributors, is speeding up his protracted tour of the United States in order to get back to Hollywood in time for Christmas. "If I can be lucky enough to dodge either being snow-bound or business-bound, I'll make it," he wires from New York.

Was Head of Gobs' Fraternity

Carlton King, star of "Was He Guilty?" scheduled as one of the initial releases of the new United Producers and Distributors, was the active head of the Navy Club of New York City during the world war.

Add Dell Knott to Buckingham Cast

Dell Knott, prominent character actor, has been added to the cast of Tom Buckingham's production, "The Arizona Express," now being made at the William Fox West Coast Studios, Hollywood. Mr. Knott, who is Lydia Knott's brother, has a part excellently suited to his histrionic abilities.

Will Resume Film Roles

Robert Ober, who recently appeared in the leading male position of "The Waning Sex," is enjoying a short rest in his Hollywood home. Directly after the holidays, he will resume his work before the camera. Mr. Ober, it will be remembered, made a decided hit with his portrayal in the Lasky productions, "The Young Rajah," and "On the High Seas."

"WHITE MOTH" TOURNEUR'S NEXT

With the rights to a number of novels and plays in his grip, Maurice Tourneur arrived in Los Angeles last week from New York, where the director spent the past three weeks arranging his producing plans for the coming year.

After conferring with M. C. Levee, producer of Tourneur pictures at the United Studios, Mr. Tourneur announced his next picturization for First National release to be "The White Moth," a modern society drama by Izola Forrester.

"The White Moth," originally appeared in Ainslee's Magazine and is written by the author of "The Gray Path," "The Feast of Lights," and other popular magazine stories. A feminine role is the leading character and for this part the producers will seek one of the foremost and most beautiful actresses of the screen.

Mr. Tourneur also brought back with him motion picture scenes staged in Japan to be incorporated in "Torment," his newest First National offering now being edited. These scenes were photographed by special cameramen sent abroad for the purpose.

"Theatres in the East, both the 'legitimate 'and motion picture houses, are enjoying the biggest season in years," said Mr. Tourneur. "Everyone seems to be going to the theatre and even snow and rain storms do not keep them away. There is every indication that the motion picture public today outnumbers that of any previous year. The progress made within the past year in photoplay entertainment has won many new devotees to the screen."

The work of adapting "The White Moth" for the screen will be started immediately and actual "shooting" will be under way shortly after the first of the year. A busy producing season has been scheduled for the Levee-Tourneur organization.

Jimmy Finlayson, who appears in Hal Roach's Stan Laurel comedies, leaves next Tuesday for Toronto, Canada. He will meet a brother there whom he has not seen for thirteen years. From there the two brothers will go on to New York City to spend the New Year's holiday with another brother and three sisters.

Gaye Portrayals Are Resplendent

Howard Gaye, distinguished actor who plays the Duke of Norfolk in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," has been responsible for an unusual number of historical characters. In "The Birth of a Nation" Gaye enacted General Robert E. Lee; in "Intolerance" he appeared as Christ; while in "The Dancer of the Nile," the W. P. S. Earle picture showing next week at Clune's Broadway Theatre, he is Amonhotes, Egypt's fourth heretic Pharaoh. Other historical figures to have been portrayed by Howard Gaye are Shakespeare, Byron and King Haakon.

HOFFMAN'S WORK HAS HUMAN TOUCH

Hugh Hoffman is one of those favored by Carl Laemmle with a Christmas promotion as a reward for capable work during the year just past. Mr. Hoffman's skillful work as supervisor and scenarist of the Gladys Walton unit at Universal City has been the subject of much favorable comment in the film colony of Hollywood, and so marked has been the improvement in the Gladys Walton pictures since he took over the unit that Mr. Laemmle has shown his full confidence in Mr. Hoffman's ability by placing under his control the production unit of which Herbert Rawlinson is the star. This means added work, glory and reward for Mr. Hoffman, but on his past record there is little doubt of his ability to shoulder his new responsibilities.

Supervision as practiced by Hugh Hoffman is the real thing and not the imitation. The entire responsibility of a production is entrusted to him by the Universal company. All stages of a production pass under his practiced eye which has back of it the wisdom of twenty-five years in the show business, sixteen of which have been in motion picture work in all its branches. He is responsible for the selection of the story, the director, casting, screen results, editing, titling and all. If there is anything wrong with any of his productions, Carl Laemmle knows exactly where to place the blame, but he has had little occasion to do any of that with Hoffman.

With all his varied duties connected with the making of a film, Mr. Hoffman is seldom seen on a movie set. According to his system, the director is in supreme control of the set. That is what he is hired for—to put on the picture, and Mr. Hoffman assumes that the director is capable of doing that without the supervisor hanging around. And so long as the director is getting the stuff on the screen he hears mighty little from Hoffman except in the way of praise and encouragement. If it's not so good, there is an order for a retake, but in the form of a friendly request.

And the same is true with the other men who are on the picture —the assistant director, the cameraman, the editor and title writer; all are considered as capable men, able to do their work. Having started in the show business years ago as a performer who "doubled in brass," Mr. Hoffman says he always thinks of his unit as an orchestra, with every man playing his part competently under the Hoffman baton. If there is a discord, or any member cuts in when he is supposed to have 32 bars rest, it isn't very hard to spot the fellow who is pulling the "blue" note, and Hoffman "gives him a look," as orchestra leaders do when someone in the band pulls a "domino."

Mr. Hoffman says that production supervision is successful or unsuccessful only as the supervisor is backed up by the management, and he ascribes much of his success as a supervisor at the Universal Studio to the confidence and whole-hearted support of Julius Bernheim, Bill Koenig and Carl Laemmle.

Belasco Lures --- Sterling Artists

Two of the principals of Fred Niblo's "Thy Name Is Woman," cast have terminated their engagements with that company and moved across the street to the United Studios where they have been signed by Edward Belasco to appear in the Belasco Production, "Welcome Stranger."

They are William V. Mong and RobertEdeson, both former stage stars and now recognized as among the best character men of the screen.

Other members of the cast of "Welcome Stranger," which have been announced are: Florence Vidor, Dore Davidson, Lloyd Hughes, Noah Beery and Virginia Brown Faire. Several important roles are yet to be cast.

"Welcome Stranger," which is a screen adaptation of Aaron Hoffman's celebrated stage success of the same name, was adapted by Willard Mack. It is under the direction of James Young, who is assisted by Clifford Saum.

Hurt Interest For Lewis

Hph Lewis is going to pay particular attention to the heart interest elements in his new series of ctures. Lewis says the plays that have lived in the popular mi are the heart interest plays like "Shore Acres," "Way Down East" and "David Harum" and he intends to film only pictures that possess these elements to the ultimate. The first of his new series will be "The Country Doctor."

Ila Luxford has been engaged by Harold Lloyd Productions to play the dramatic role of the deserted wife of the heavy. Miss Luxford is a young but versatile actress with considerable talent and her recent work is very commendable.

Announces Unsteady Star System

. F. Wood is opposed to going from one extreme to another. Therefore, he regrets the inclination of motion picture producers to abolish the single-star system only to embrace what he calls a "too-many-stars fad." Mr. Wood is the vice-president and general manager of the United Producers and Distributors, an organization replete with new ideas in both the producing and distributing of films.

Wind Wreaks Havoc at Goldwyn

The terrific wind storm that has swept Southern California recently wrecked havoc on some of the sets standing in the back lot of the Goldwyn Studios at Culver City. Flying pieces of the scenery and swaying walls made it necessary to rope off the back lot area as a danger zone during the storm.

The most damage was done to the huge set for "In the Palace of the King," which is the largest ever built for a motion picture. The castle buildings, which surround an expansive courtyard, tower hundreds of feet into the air. Most of these withstood the onslaught of the storm but one section that is broadside to the wind became loosened from its moorings and the topmost sections flew into the courtyard. Several workmen narrowly escaped with their lives as the piece crashed down. They were engaged in lashing another section that was ominously swaying.

One of the men saw the piece blow off of the top of the set and shouted a warning to his co-workers. They scurried to shelter just in time and the section of concrete and wood came down, with a thunderous crash that was heard all over the studio, on the spot they had been working just a moment before.

Xmas Rush Old Stuff For Him

The mailman whose route embraces that section of Los Angeles in which Wallace Worsley lives has no fear of the last minute rush of Christmas mail for during the past month or two he has been carrying an extra pouch to accommodate the letters of congratulation that have been fairly deluging the well known director since the world premier of his screen classic, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

From every corner of the United States messages of a congratulatory nature have arrived signed by persons who have viewed the screen version of the Victor Hugo novel in one of the several key cities where it is now being exhibited.

Worsley has been receiving on an average of seventy-five letters and post cards a day for the past five weeks—a fan mail that would make the average star turn green with envy. The director's secretary is called upon to acknowledge receipt of every message as Worsley believes in maintaining a constant contact with the theater-going public whom he serves.

Louise Loraine was married, attended three prize fights, and went up in an aeroplane in her last "Fighting Blood" picture.

Louise Takes First 1923 Pause

Louise Fazenda, will come to a pause, her first this year, when in a few days, work on the Ince production, "The Galloping Fish" will be completed. The picture in which Miss Fazenda presents a vaudeville headliner with a trained seal that gets the whole world involved, took the comedy queen on a four weeks location trip to Yuma where the flood scenes were taken on the Colorado river where the sets were built. There were two months of interiors at the studios and concluding shots at Balboa. The picture represented many departures in sundry and "divers" things, for Miss Fazenda did her comedy on straight lines, likewise she could this time pack her costumes in a thimble, for cloudy lingerie and tights as the diving Venus were her allotment for many of the riotous scenes. This picture followed immediately upon a featured role in the Hal E. Roach western "Rex" and Warner Brothers "The Gold Diggers," her three leading pictures of a busy year.

Lionel Barrymore, in addition to his successful starring venture with David Belasco, has been engaged to play the part of Walter Butler in the forthcoming D. W. Griffith production, "America."

NORMA HOLDS FRENCH GOOD-WILL IN HIGH ESTEEM; REFUSES OFFER

There has been a considerable stir in French motion picture circles over the reported decision of the French government to allow an American firm the absolute entree to the Palace of Versailles, for reproduction of the film of the life of the ill-fated Marie-Antoinette. French producers, as it seems, resent this infringement on their privileges and are protesting vigorously, declaring that such a picture should be made by a French company with a French star. Many French playwrights and historians disagree with the Syndicate of Producers—an organization that includes most of the cinema owners of France—and still maintain that as American stars are more popular in France than their own stars, such a gigantic undertaking should be placed in the capable hands of the greatest emotional actresses on the screen, irregardless of nationality.

The honor of appearing in this film was offered to Norma Talmadge last October through an official representative of the French government, and at first, Mr. Schenck, President of the Talmadge Productions, and Norma Talmadge were very much inclined to accept the great honor. But because of the opposition to this American productions on the part of the French producers and exhibitors, Miss Talmadge has now decided to decline although she deeply appreciates the wonderful tribute paid her by the French government in making her their choice.

The following telegram has been received from Joseph M. Schenck by Beulah Livingstone, his New York publicity director:

"In view of opposition on the part of French producers and exhibitors, regret that Miss Talmadge and I must decline the Marie-Antoinette proposition. As you know, this proposition was voluntarily offered us by the French government, and we were at first both willing and eager to accept it, but on account of the insistence of certain French producers and exhibitors that this film should be made by a French company with an entire native cast, a patriotic sentiment in which Miss Talmadge is quite in sympathy, we have decided to decline, although we are extremely appreciative of the great honor conferred on Miss Talmadge by this invitation from the French government.

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK."

Under the original plans, the story of "The Queen's Necklace," used by Alexandre Dumas, pere, in one of his romances, was to form the basis of a scenario written by Messrs. Funck Brentano and Pierre de Nohlac. This story called for scenes in the Palace at Versailles and other famous French public places. The arrangements were made whereby the original Marie-Antoinette costumes, and even some of the jewels from the national museum were to be placed at Miss Talmadge's disposal. Miss Talmadge was to have taken with her an American director, an American leading man, cameraman, continuity writer and executive staff. Hundreds of French players would have obtained work in this mammoth production, but Miss Talmadge feels that since the French syndicate of cinema directors have hinted that they would boycott the film, and raised a protest that the French government was ignoring its own screen players, that she would not care to appear in any production, however interesting in its story and publicity possibilities, wherein she did not meet with the full co-operation and approval of the French people. She and her sister, Constance, have always met with great popularity thruout France, and Miss Talmadge would infinitely rather keep the good will of the people, the exhibitors and producers than to be even the indirect cause of any friction in the French cinema world.

movies scarcely more than a year.

There is no need to dwell on Miss Vaughn's progress during the past twelve months. As a Sennett lead she became popular throughout the country. Her fan mail increased. Officials of the Sennett organization said of her "She is the most promising player Sennett ever had."

But Sennett has lost Miss Vaughn!

Less than one month ago Robertson-Cole became aware of the fact that the Sennett contract was nearing an end and that no new arrangement had been agreed upon between Miss Vaughn and the comedy king. What R-C did not know was that the two were discussing a new contract though no definite conclusion had been reached. But what R-C didn't know evidently didn't hurt them, because they landed Miss Vaughn under contract.

Now she is being featured in a series of twelve pictures to be known as "The Telephone Girl" group. The first is titled "Julius Sees Her" and was written by H. C. Witwer. Mal St. Claire is directing. The first picture is nearly completed in titling and editing. The series will succeed the popular "Fighting Blood" and critics who have previewed the first of the new group declare that they will be even more popular than the series laid in and about the fight-ring.

Probably, within the next eighteen months or two years, Alberta Vaughn will be starred.

And if she is, she can hazily remember back to that first evening dress she wore and the fact that the Good Creator endowed her with a most beautiful back and a pair of very expressive shoulders.

For those members probably saved Alberta a lot of time and a lot of steps.

An Aquatic Interview

By LUCILE ERSKINE

It's customary to write nonsense about a comedienne. But I've always had a suspicion that it takes a lot of gray matter to get the ha-ha-s from the grown-ups and even the hollers from the children. And certainly under the twisted braids of Louise Fazenda is a generous distribution of brains.

For five years she toiled as patiently as any clerk over a ledger, until a gingham dress and those comedy touchs raised the laughs that shot her from obscurity. For a long, dreary stretch, she was just a bathing girl at Sennett's. Only, after studio hours, Louise would always hie herself home to her parents (Spanish Los Angeles was the birth-place of this girl of Spanish blood) and curl up on a divan with a book to shovel more food into her brain this way.

"I read everything from recipes to the Russian realists," she said to me climbing out of the water on the set of "The Galloping Fish" at the Ince Studio and shivering in her wet clothes. So unattractive was this chill work that a mother had purposely brought her "movie-mad" daughter just to watch Louise and discover for herself that being a star isn't all ermine cloaks and fan adulation.

"The director said if I was afraid he'd get a double. But I began to coax myself, said. 'Oh, that water is going to be all right,' and plunged in. 'And it was all right.'"

I wondered if unconsciously she wasn't giving me the key to her success, that mental attitude of harmony with any kind of work.

"I started out in a matter-of-fact way. No one discovered me. Teaching was what I was aiming at, when one Christmas time, needing some extra money, a neighbor who worked in a studio took me along. This insignificant part I obtained led to another, equally small. I crept, step by step, learning what were my good points, and when to flash them, for I'm not pretty. At first I was content to work just because I needed th money," she went on simply. "Then I grew to love the work just for itself and studied my own possibilities in it."

From mental concentration came the "tricks' that turned Fortune's face towards her. Now Louise is building a home in the Wilshire district.

"And according to the gloomy statistics of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce," I said to her, "you are one of the five who succeed out of the five hundred thousand who try."

"No girl ought to come here," she shook her head very decidedly, "without money or an anchorage. It was a little easier when I went in. But pictures are now new gold mines set on the spot of the old. And every bag has all the number it can hold sitting on it tight."

"Are you going to get all your development from books?" There was one at her elbow. "What about having your heart broken, so you can act better?"

"I admit that fifty per cent of a wo development comes from the smash-u the sentimental center. But the other per cent comes from the mind."

And with the smile of a care-free chil plunged back into the icy water again.

Otto Matiesen's art is well characterized in the soubriquet which he bore in Europe. "The man of a thousand expressions," he was called in London and on the continent where he appeared in repertoire.

"Expression, not putty makes the character actor," says Mr. Matiesen, who turns the trick in a characterization with a subtle touch of the makeup pencil and a dominating thought that fairly moulds the features. In portraying a historic character as Judge Jeffreys in "The Dangerous Maid" he went to photographs and an actual painting of the bloody judge, thence to the transformation of his own features in the likeness of his model with the result that the similiarity was so perfect it was startling. In "Scaramouche" with no makeup aids, he presented another characterization that might have stepped out of the pages of history when he created th radical preacher which won the greatest praise from Rex Ingram who directed the picture. Now he is doing an Apache in Metro's "Revelation" with Viola Dana which is said to be another marvelous piece of work.

"Let the face do it," says Mr. Matiesen. "Putty fairly shouts an actor's limitations in facial expression. The idea is not to create another face but to do it with the one nature gave the actor. Acting is mental—the expression of the inward thought."

In the old country where Mr. Matiesen learned his art, he played hundreds of roles and managed to make them all different by being so possessed of the characterization that for the time being his own life was completely merged in it, a custom that still prevails in his work.

"Back of acting is the thought, first, last always. So why make the face a plasterer's shop?" he says.

which are known as Seasons, or Flowers and Seasons. These are duplicates of the numbers one to four which correspond to the four Winds, 1 being East, 2 South, 3 West, and 4 North. The Flowers are distinguished from the Seasons by the difference in the color of the numerals. A group of four Flowers is called what? The same as any group of flowers, a bouquet. A group of four Seasons is also called a bouquet. If you use racks, don't forget to return your tiles to the table before a shuffle, for a new deal. You are responsible for that. The odd-colored rack shall be passed to the player who is East, for that deal.

First turn the tiles (136 or 144) face down and shuffle them. Now, each draw, at random, enough tiles to build a wall two tiles high and seventeen tiles long, without the Seasons, 18 with the Seasons. Now, supposing there are only three of us, the wall would be 23 tiles long and two tiles high. Push them together to form a hollow square. If any have a short or long wall, you may adjust it without penalty before beginning. If such an error be due to any player having left some of his tiles in his rack from the hand before, he must pay ten points to each of us. Your duty is to attend to your own wall. You must swing it into position for the draw, and replace all loose tiles if they are drawn in the play, etc. If you have exposed a tile during the building of the wall, so that its position is known, you must reshuffle and rebuild the wall. Next week we will continue our game by "Breaking the Wall."

Mary Wants Merry Christmas

A most unusual problem is today confronting Mary Pickford. She is wondering how she can find time to do her Christmas shopping. Every minute is taken up by the rigid production schedule laid out for "Dorothy Vernon of Hadden Hall," the feature she is now at work on.

"I haven't even had time to think of the Holidays," said Mary. "Present indications are that there will be empty stockings in our household, for there doesn't seem any possibility of my getting away for a tour of the stores."

One of this little lady's great joys has always been the privilege of buying in person all of her Christmas gifts. Unless things alter themselves within the next week, however, this will undoubtedly be a Christmas by proxy for Mary, for someone else may have to buy the presents she will give away.

THE NEW UNITED STUDIO

M. C. LEVEE, President

Anticipating by several months the necessity for lower production costs, the $800,000 improvement program of the United Studio has been completed.

With these improvements finished, this plant offers the independent producer economy in production through new facilities and efficiency methods designed with this end in view.

Keeping pace with the progress of the industry the United Studio has not only retained its leadership as the largest and most efficient leasing plant in the world, but has increased its own facilities a hundred percent.

The Declaration of Independence informs us that all men are created equal. In the sense the word "equal" is employed in that famed manuscript it undoubtedly refers to our status as human beings and the rights we enjoy, or should enjoy, as such. It does not go on, however, to state that the state of equality is carried on into other phases of life and it is well that it does not for it would be a gross error. To substantiate this claim we have only to point out to you that while some among our terra firma inhabitants rapidly accumulate fortunes of El Doradon proportions, becoming the owners of great country estates, fine motor cars and such and enjoying all the luxuries of life, others must eke out a bare living from day to day in various occupations that soon become tiresome and assume nicknames akin to "the daily grind," etc., causing many disillusioned folk to rail at life, its hopes, joys and future possibilities. Those who by any chance speak of the silver lining are instantly dubbed optimists and the others are relegated to the vast clan of pessimists. Thus, in its varied ups and downs, wends life and time speeds by.

In one respect, nevertheless, all of us, poor man, rich man, beggar-man and thief, are equal. And that, as you have probably heard countless times prior to perusing this page, is in the amount of time we have to work or play in. The basic fact is that insofar as Time is concerned John D. Rockefeller and Henry Ford are no wealthier than you or I. It is plausible that their knowledge of how to use time to best advantage has placed them in their present monetary positions. If so, there is a lesson to be derived therefrom, one worth our close study and sincere application. The thing is for us to devote our time, or at least our spare hours or moments, to our own advancement and thus insure more time for greater enjoyment in the future. Time is precious, it is the crown-jewel of life, and many of us are wont to be extravagant with it. Are you wasting your time? What progress have you made this past year? Have you really gone ahead in the way you should have with three-hundred-sixty-five days at your disposal? What do you plan to do with the year ahead of you? It is your great chance! As Dr. Johnson said, "Exert your talent and distinguish yourself!" The time to do it is this coming year, 1924. Make up your mind now, and start in hot pursuit of that ever-elusive "success." You're bound to win if you set your mind on it!

Ten years ago the first great photoplay, "The Birth of a Nation," came forth. Since that time the motion picture industry has been more or less subject to fluctuation in its activity, being seriously hampered by the advent of the great war. Now all seems golden again. Producers, directors, players, executives and people in every branch of the industry hail 1924 as the bonanza year. Enthusiasm is flying sky-high and adequate preparations have been under way this autumn to insure the success of next year's programs. Optimism is infectious, the bug is bound to bite you if you've got any red blood in you. The unanimous opinion is that 1924 will be the year we have awaited so long, when everyone will have an opportunity to make progress and share in the fruits of victory. Fellow-filmfolk, 1924 is OUR BIG YEAR! We have it before us now. What are we going to do? Fight? You bet!

Naldo Morelli is one of the players in the all-star production "The Great Struggle," a William B. Brush production which is being directed by Bertram Bracken at the Hollywood Studios. This organization is one of the first local units to herald in the new year with an active producing schedule.

The story itself is a romance of an American village of Italian fishermen and is replete with human interest, affording Morelli unusual opportunities to display his histrionic ability which is indicative of fine things to come. Others in the cast include Lew Cody, Josef Swickard, Renee Adoree, Dick Sutherland and "Buddy" Post.

ring the twelve months now ending she een over most of the familiar parts of old globe.

ng early in the spring she was still suf- with enthusiasm for Hawaii, where she sent by Famous Players-Lasky to be d in a picture titled "The White Flower". Compson liked Hawaii—and Hawaii Betty. Before she left the officials of the s Beach of Waikiki tendered her a ban- and invited her to return there sometime, e. Maybe she will.

er, she went to Europe. She was beyond tlantic for a number of months. During time she sojourned beneath the livid sh moon, she inhaled the perfume of s marvelous flowers, she walked the far- byways of Paris and she inspected al- every other country. She evaded Russia, because she had no desire to see that ry of unshorn faces, but because there a few too many revolutions in progress e time Miss Compson was near its boun- s.

London Miss Compson made two motion es, surrounded by a cast largely made English actors and actresses. "Woman oman", the first of these pictures (and it be given an American release), Betty es is the best thing she has ever done. s enthused over its possibilities, not be- of her own work, which she modestly ims; but due to the beauty of the story, orthy work of the cast and the surprising- usual and deft direction.

in all, Miss Compson tells those who her with "Well, how has 1923 treated that it has been a very marvelous twelve s.

the next twelve treat me as well, I will have every reason to be the happiest girl on earth",, smiles Miss Compson. (And somehow, when she smiles, it makes a fellow want to race around on a search for this guy "Fate" and make sure that he hands Betty only the best of things in 1924).

Coming down to the point of thinking, it looks as if 1924 IS going to be unusually fortunate for Miss Compson. Let's see, now, what she has already planned for herself:

To begin with (oh, you thought we had forgotten it), she is to become Mrs. James Cruze. That is, in private life. On the screen she remains Betty Compson—and she is going to remain on the screen.

Secondly, she will be hard at work for some time to come as the star of "Prison Born", which the Oakland Film company is making at Hollywood Studios. Stuart Paton is directing her.

Thirdly, she is shortly to return to the Paramount plant to be featured in a screen version of the popular stage play, "Rain".

Then, she is soon to be featured in a picture which Cruze will direct.

From these things, it looks as if Betty Compson will see none of Europe and Hawaii this year—not unless she can travel to one of the two places, maybe by aeroplane, overnight.

"A funny thing", laughs Betty, "is that my plans are far more definite now that I am not under contract than they were when I was signed up with Famous Players-Lasky. Then I seldom knew, during the production of one picture, what I would do next. Now I know my plans for months ahead, generally speaking. That is one of the reasons, if it should be inquired, why I am much in favor of free lancing and have decided to remain free, at least until I have given it a very thorough trial."

(Note: A slight pause occurred here while the writer was jotting down notes. He looked up to find Miss Compson putting on her make-up. Her expression indicated that the interview was over, so the writer, with a word of thanks, departed.

But two days ago a letter arrived. It was from Miss Compson. It follows:

"I believe you told me that the story would appear about the first of the year. Then I have been terribly, terribly neglectful. Please add to it my very happiest wishes to the whole wide world for the very luckiest and most prosperous New Year ever before enjoyed."

There you are.

Considering Raiment in Life's Kaleidoscope

By SADA COWAN and HOWARD HIGGIN

her consciously or subconsciously, every and woman is a dramatist in the affairs or her daily life. Of course, there is er consciousness along this line in the pean races, because they are more sticated, and also because they have trained, racially and individually, to a er appreciation of the importance of the g, so to speak. We all try to arrange ffairs along dramatic lines as we would hem; either we do this purposely, or own saving instincts lead us to do it ut our realizing exactly what we are and why we are doing it. In other s, we usually, and we should always, s the part." Every producer and di- of a stage play or of a photoplay, es the importance of the settings and ostumes of the players. Naturally, in laily life we try to have harmonious gs for the drama which we expect to —that is why we furnish our homes and offices tastefully and decoratively. At ame time, we endeavor always to make settings appropriate for the dramatic n—if we may call it that—which is to pire in these rooms.

t, of course, we can determine the set- only of our own characters. Therefore, ust provide as far as possible for the g which we carry with us in our pere- tions. The only thing we can be sure s we go from place to place, is the es we wear; hence their importance. the successful man or woman is the one either through careful thought or instinctive judgment, picks the right clothes for himself or herself.

It is not always merely a matter of lines, although much stress has been laid on this aspect. In other words, the tall, thin person should not wear clothes with longitudinal stripes, the stout woman should not wear circular skirts, with broad bands, and so on. These are obvious "don'ts" with which we are now all familiar.

There are two fundamental instructions for dress, and they both have dramatic backgrounds First: Study the part you are going to play on a certain mission, and then dress the part. Second: Study your own type, and be sure that your clothes harmonize with it.

We all know that the man or woman who is looking for a job always dresses as neatly as possible and tries to look as prosperous as possible. In other words, this person has dramatized himself as a successful employe, naturally he dresses that role. The man with the threadbare collar and the frayed sleeves, must prove his ability before he can land the job; give him a new suit, clean linen, well-shined shoes, and so on—his appearance proves he is a successful employe, and he can get the job with a minor demonstration of his ability. And usually at a much better salary.

The girl who comes down to her office work in a gown which is more appropriate for a tea-dance at the Ambassador or the Biltmore, does not look like a worker, she does not feel like working, herself; and she does not inspire others with whom she comes in contact in the office, to work, either. Her clothes, and the bearing which she naturally assumes when she wears those clothes, make

Public Payment By DELBERT E. DAVENPORT

When someone makes an expensive blunder during the processes attending the filming of a photoplay, someone has to pay for that blunder. And, who do you suppose does the paying? It does not require the supernatural powers of a wizard to trace the trail of the charge directly to the public, the same public that ever and anon is paying bills, bills, bills!

Whether it realizes it or not, the public has been paying unjust movie bills for many a moon and not all of the excess charges have been due to blunders either, but, on the contrary, are traceable to the determination of many of the high executives to line their pockets with gold in the form of abnormal and non-productive, annual salaries.

All of the foregoing is the contention of W. F. Wood, vice-president and general manager of the United Producers and Distributors, the newest million-dollar motion picture company to enter the national field, and, which, by the way, makes this entrance with a veritable wealth of revolutionary ideas such as presage much in the way of alleviating the sufferings of not only exhibitors, but the great masses of people, who are desirous of getting their full share of cinema diversion, but who have been denied the pleasure by the ever-mounting prices asked at the box-offices.

"Simply because a huge amount of money is spent on a production, it is the rule for the producer thereof to automatically consider the output a fine one, but we believe the right man under the right conditions can make a better picture for $75,000 than the wrong man under wrong conditions can make for a half million dollars," declares Mr. Wood. "I know, from personal experience, that oftentimes a big share of the total cost of some pictures is absolute waste, and, I also know all of this waste can be eliminated by simply applying sound business principles with the same unerring persistency which obtains in any other industrial enterprise. To embrace the economic soundness fostered by automobile manufacturers, iron-masters or textile captains, is the fundamental purpose of our organization so far as its business management is concerned."

The main idea actuating the United Producers and Distributors is one of faithfully passing along the benefits of saving in the producing department to the exhibitor who purchases the output, and, the exhibitor, in turn, will be urged to pass this same saving on to the public by reducing his admission prices to such a radical extent as to place U. P. D. pictures within the reach of all the masses of common people. At least, this is the way Mr. Wood makes the point.

"The public has had to pay for errors and extravagance long enough and we are determined to take a most effective initiative in freeing this same public from the shackles of excess costs in the pursuit of being entertained," he adds. "We are perfectly frank in admitting that we will obtain this highly desirable result by resorting to straight commercialism in both the making and distributing of films. However, we will not sacrifice anything of the artistic side of the business, because we shall always engage the services of the best artistic brains and talents available, but these will be dealt with in a thoroughly business-like method instead of the haphazard, gambling way which has been too typical of the film industry up to now."

No doubt many fans have wondered why they constantly are being asked to dole out more money than ever at the theatres. They have surely read much of the view-points of prominent producers, all of whom are agreed that the mounting costs must be checked. However, so long as there is no visible action looking to relieving the situation, it must naturally be difficult to impress those devotees. to the great cinema art. Unquestionably the one way in which to convince them that the unsound condition had commanded due attention from the powers that be. would be ot reduce the admission rates and let them see just-as-good or better motion pictures for less money. This is precisely and definitely what the United Producers and Distributors aim to do, according to Mr. Wood.

"We will not merely talk about the desirability of such reductions, but we will immediately bring about conditions that will make possible the accomplishing of the act so far as our products are concerned," he specifies. "While we are not prepared to state exactly the percentage of reduction, we can assure the public that any theatre which has charged as much as fifty-five cents per ticket will be able to show one of our features at twenty-five cents a ticket and yet the exhibitor will make more money than ever."

In a grea many quarters this whole plan w sound rather altruistic, but, as a matter fact, it is all based on pure business principl it is averred. The foremost principle involv in this case happens to be one of merchand ing. The United Producers and Distributo claim they will know to the penny the cost a motion picture production at the maxim and the assured income therefrom at a mi mum before a single camera is allowed to st photographing it. There will be no guess-wo about it at all. The same degree of accura and regularity characteristic of an autom bile factory, for instance, will be in vogue U. P. D. studios, excepting their objective w be to produce satisfactory entertainment cc taining elements of art rather than a co modity in which mechanics prevail.

"The public has been obliged to pay heav and unnecessarily mainly because the rule h been that pictures have been made first a the costs ascertained afterwards," Mr. Wo concludes. "Every dollar spent, either wis or unwisely, has had to be charged up agai the production concerned. A large percenta of those dollars have been spent on non-p ductive things such as fabulous executive s aries and another large percentage of th dollars have been spent because someone ma blunders. Of course, needless to add, the p lic has been called upon to settle for the wh outlay. In plain words, for every dollar theatre patron has been spending at the b office, he has received about twenty-five ce of what he thought he was buying in the w of amusement and the other seventy-five ce has gone towards the upkeep of a few f magnates and the defraying of the expen incurred by a multitude of ridiculous busin and picture-making mistakes."

And, if the United Producers and Distrib ors have their way about it, there will be immediate cessation of all tendencies towa any goal other than economic soundness, wh alone, they assert, will prove the means whe by the movies will be given back to the cc mon people as the great democratic form diversion it was in its beginning. Explici the public will be asked to pay exorbitantly longer and will be given exactly one hund cents worth of screen pleasure for each dol expended, all of which is laudable enough warrant a very general rejoicing.

Dramatic Conquest By EDITH M. RYAN

Cullen Landis might be called one of those "fortunate" individuals who is both actor and type were it not for his long and varied record of hard work. While this actor believes that some may be more fortunate than others, that occasionally there is an element of luck, he has on the credit side of the ledger of experience unromantic figures that mutely stand for day-in and day-out toil. To be sure, he won his first opportunity because he happened to be a type, but as the "curly kid" in the Rex Beach story which Goldwyn filmed, he demonstrated that he could act. A long term contract followed, when he was become an outstanding actor in the cast of Goldwyn productions.

Today one of his interesting roles has been given to him by Famous Players-Lasky in "Magnolia" in which Landis, as the male lead, is now working at Natchez, Miss., where the company is on location. "Fortunate," his fellow actors might say who do not know of the long years of preparation to be ready for a plum like this. Again Mr. Landis is the "type," so much the type that James Cruze directing the production declares that he is the only one for the role. On the other hand, there is so much light and shade, so much that is subtle in the delicate humor and gaucheries of the boy "Tom" that only a well-seasoned artist could deliver the goods. Mr. Tarkington, in one of his playful moods has "kidded" the fire-eating spirit of the South as it has never been done before and out of it all a "Tom" is evolved who starts out gentle and meek and ends as the town terror.

Mr. Landis, it happens, is a southerner who combines in his interesting personality and mildness and suavity which ignites in a dangerous way when there is just provocation. This combination has made him a valuable screen asset, for his acting is liberal and full of vividness. He will be sweetly sympathetic at one moment, and another, a veritable volcano.

Landis will be able to take himself seriously in the role of "Tom" and so will adde the greater humor to his part. Even in his heart he will not "kid" it, for only those who know

Palmborg's Paragraphs

(Being one of a series of impressions of film folk and cinemaland anecdotes as written by a motion picture insurance man. By C. F. Palmborg, special analyst and Hollywood representative of the New York Life Insurance Company).

By handing in this article the last minute before publication the editor will not have time to read it over—and that is just what I want to happen, for I do not want to run the risk of having blue pencil marks run through my statements or having another article substituted. As I am taking the members of the Camera! staff for my topic, and as the editor is an exceedingly modest man, no telling what he would do to it, if he got hold of it.

The past few months I have had numerous business dealings with the Camera! force and as I have my office next door to theirs I see a great deal of them. I have yet to meet a finer group of workers. In the first place they all work together with a harmony and perfect understanding that is inspiring. All have the interest of Camera! first and foremost in their hearts and each day they work and plan to make the next issue the best.

Mr. Lawson, the publisher, is a sincere, capable man, who gives his best to the development of his paper. He has been both director and actor, so knows the needs of the industry. His ambition is to give the picture people information that will help them in their work, as well as interesting, up-to-the-minute news on all phases of the industry. He also aims to have a magazine that will appeal to the general public and give them real facts of the picture world. He has big plans for the development of Camera! and has the intelligence and force to carry these plans out.

Mr. Fox, the editor, is one of the most conscientious, likeable young chaps I have ever met. His heart is in Camera! and he gives all of his time to it, working long days and way into the night. He is one who never watches the hands of the clock, but stays on the job until his work is finished, no matter what the time. His editorials are always inspiring, based on topics of the day and carrying messages that are worth while. Like most newspaper men, he has served time as a reporter on big daily papers so knows all the ins and outs of newspaper writing.

Miss Thompson, the pulse editor, has work that calls for much time and painstaking care for it is she who consults each studio and producing company, so as to give Camera! readers last minute news of the work that is going on in the studios; just what pictures are in progress and the names of the directors and those in the cast. In doing this she covers a big field and has many people to deal with. She is an enthusiastic, diligent worker.

Mr. Woolway, the studio representative is always on the job—I have decided that that man never sleeps. I find him at the office any time of day or night, industriously at work. He has had many years of experience along publicity lines both in the United States and abroad and is a very capable man. Many an actor can trace his success to the co-operation of Mr. Woolway. He is particularly good in establishing the new actor or actress.

Mr. Cornyn, the advertising man, is a live wire. Placing advertisements and then writing them is not a simple task by any means. He likes his work and as a result is successful in it. He has clever, original ideas that bring results, so naturally has a large following.

This coming New Year will see big development for Camera!. This intelligent, capable, conscientious group are putting their best efforts into it and such a combination is bound to bring big results.

Philosophy

THE NEW YEAR.

By Eric Mayne

A PRAYER

That the Supreme Power, which directs the destinies of man, may guide us to those things which will be for our present and eternal welfare.

A RESOLVE

To do our best to make the world better and brighter.

A WISH

A Happy New Year to us all.

On the Birthday of a New Year we have it in our power to begin our life over again.

Our success in the New Year will depend very much on what we have learnt in the Old Year.

There is much Happiness in the world, there is also much—very much—misery. However little we can do to alleviate the misery, and however little we can do to increase the happiness of the world, will help to increase our own happiness.

We shall find our greatest happiness in trying to educate and develop that which is best in us.

The man who sits at home and wonders why he is unhappy has the reason there with him.

There is the duty of happiness, as well as the happiness of duty.

Sometimes we have to sacrifice happiness for duty, it may be the way to the greater happiness.

We often mar our own happiness, and the happiness of those around us, by our discontent with what we have and our desire for what we have not.

We shall be happy if we attain our desires, if we have the right desires.

Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace!
Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand!
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be!

HUGE 1924 FILM PROGRAM IS OUTLINED BY JESSE L. LASKY

Great Activity Is Promised for Paramount

Los Angeles, the ideal motion picture producing center of the world, not only is in no danger of losing its supremacy but will even more firmly establish that supremacy during the new year! Seventy-five per cent of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation productions will be made in the Lasky Studio in Hollywood and the other twenty-five per cent in the Long Island plant!

The Lasky studio will reopen January 7 with three productions, inaugurating a season of steadily increasing activity. Additional pictures will start weekly, so that by the middle of February ten units will be at work in our Hollywood plant. By the middle of April, we will have twelve producing units in operation here!"

In these emphatic words Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, today set at rest all rumors of a transfer of motion picture production from Southern California to the East or of a continuedtinued slump in the photoplay-making industry.

In announcing plans for the reopening of the Lasky studio on his return today from an extended stay in New York City, where he completed the reorganization of the Paramount production department, Mr. Lasky expressed unbounded optimism over the future of picture productoin and declared the temporary closing of the studio had accomplished all the results hoped for.

"There was nothing mysterious about the closing of the studio," said Mr. Lasky, "though our action has been erroneously explained and misinterpreted in dozens of ways. We simply hoped to point the way for the whole industry to return to a sanity in production following a period of reckless competition and by a reorganization in our producing forces insure the making of better pictures with less waste.

"As we are making ready for the complete resumption of producing activity, I am certain that our effort has been crowned with success. A new spirit has developed—a new mental attitude and a new sense of responsibility—especially on the part of our directors. It is the director who actually spends the money and it is only through his complete understanding and cooperation that costs can be controlled. At meetings of our directors both at our Long Island studio and here, this cooperation has been pledged to me. In fact, the most heartening development in the formulation of our new policy has been the attitude of helpfulness and willingness of everyone connected with the two studios.

Mr. Lasky admitted that he will spend more of his time in New York hereafter, but emphasized that this does not indicate any transfer of production activity away from the Lasky studio in Hollywood. "I probably will spend six months of each year in New York," he said, "because it will be necessary for me to be closer to the center of things where our policies are worked out. Some of the most important productions of the season will get under way with the reopening of the Lasky studio January 7. Cecil B. De Mille will start on "Triumph," featuring Leatrice Joy and Rod LaRocque. George Melford will begin "The Glorious Tomorrow." and James Cruze will be back at the studio on that day from Natchez, Mississippi, where he has just gone to film exteriors for Booth Tarkington's "Magnolia."

"Herbert Brenon will begin January 14th on "The Breaking Point" by Mary Roberts Rinehart. Patsy Ruth Miller, who plays 'Esmeralda' in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" will have the feminine lead. Matt Moore will play opposite her and Nita Naldi and George Fawcett will be other prominent members of the cast. On January 21st, Sam Wood will start Rita Weiman's and Josephine Quirk's well known story "Bluff," co-starring Agnes Ayres and Antonio Moreno. Irvin Willat will begin on Zane Grey's favorite story, "Wanderer of the Wasteland," featuring Jack Holt. This picture, for the first time in the history of our company, will be entirely in color.

"Victor Fleming will get under way February 18th on "The Code of the Sea" by Byron Morgan. Rod La Rocque, who has created a sensation in Cecil B. De Mille's "The Ten Commandments," will be featured. Early in February Dimitri Buchowetzki will begin production of the Pola Negri picture "Men," adapted by Paul Bern from a well known continental novel. An all-star picture featuring Leatrice Joy, which has not yet been given a title, will be started early in February under the direction of Joseph Henabery.

"In brief, the Lasky studio will open with three productions, increasing to six before the month is over. Ten units will be under way by the middle of February and by the middle of April we will have an even dozen, with four producing companies in Long Island, which ratio will continue in effect.

1924 IS HAILED AS GREAT FILM YEAR; OPTIMISM RAMPANT; FOUNDATION IS FIRM

That 1924 will mark the most successful and most active year in the history of the Los Angeles motion picture producing industry is the consensus of opinion of leading factors in every branch of the business here.

An indication that Los Angeles will not only remain the home of motion picture production but will draw additional Eastern producers here and increase the present volume of film output is had from Samuel Goldwyn, now arranging to establish headquarters in Hollywood.

"The coming year will see greater activities in Los Angeles than ever before," said Mr. Goldwyn at the Ambassador yesterday. "There is solid foundation for this optimism. Despite the recent cry of 'wolf' in motion picture producing circles, every producer with whom I have spoken since I arrived, is planning ambitious producing schedules starting with the New Year. Plants that have been closed during past months will again open with a rush of activity such as Hollywood has never seen before. Various Eastern producers, including myself, will be 'shooting' in Los Angeles soon after the New Year is ushered in."

J. C. Levee, President of the United Studios, the largest leasing point in the world, said: "Our producing facilities will be running full capacity by the middle of January. Three new companies will be starting production between the first and fifteenth of next month. Others already established here will be going full blast before the fifteenth. Every indication points to the most active year in the history of filmdom."

Maurice Tourneur, prominent director says: "I think the motion picture business has finally found itself. Never have directors seen the light with more clarity than now. The fall season has proved a lesson to every creator in filmdom. Some have been very costly, but, necessary. Never before. has the director been in a better position to know what the public does NOT want. We have all made mistakes but I do not think we will make the same mistakes next year. I have never faced a new year with greater confidence. I believe every creator in filmdom will make greater strides in perfecting the art than during any year in the past."

Conway Tearle, popular leading man, said: "Actors who have drawing powers may rejoice at the prospects of the New Year. Producers will pay a fair salary to those who warrant them. There seems every indication for a most active producing year. Players will be in greater demand than ever before. Players whose talent and box-office assets have increased during the past year will find their monetary returns increase accordingly. This is business law and not even the cry of 'wolf' can change it."

Blanche Sweet, who during the past year scored her most notable characterization in "Anna Christie," has this to say: "I honestly believe Mr. Ince has shown a new path with 'Anna Christie'. It is my contention that 1924 will bring out more distinct screen characterizations than any year in the past. Producers are going after stories with powerful themes and characters. It certainly looks like a wonderful year for the player."

Potel Is Going To New York

Victor Potel, clever comedian, wires from Chicago, where he went to attend the funeral of his father-in-law, Leopold Pam, former theatrical manager, that he and Mrs. Potel are continuing their trip East at once that he may undertake an engagement in a New York production.

NEW FILM COMPANY FOR 'FRISCO; LUBFIN, TRAXLER ARE AT HEAD

Plans have just been announced for the formation of what bids fair to be the largest picture producing organization of San Francisco, and the Bay District, and also a real addition to the ranks of the film world at large. The new company is called The Cinema Arts and Crafts Corporation, and its personnel are people who have gained a wide and varied experience in the business with the largest producers and are excellently equipped to handle the affairs of the new organization on good, sound, and conservative principles.

Herman Lubfin, the President, was till lately Vice President and General Manager of the Pacific Motion Pictures Corporation of San Francisco, and is at present the Executive Manager of the Golden Gate Pictures Corporation of Los Angeles.

Ernest Traxler, Vice President and General Manager is well known to the industry through his connection with Famous Players-Losky Corporation, Universal, Astra Films, and Goldwyn, as director and Production Manager. Having recently completed his work as production manager with Eric von Stroheim in his filming of "Greed" for the Goldwyn Corporation.

Jack Dewey, Secretary, Production Manager, and Art Director, has held the same positions with the Benjamin Hampton Productions, Louis J. Selznick Corporation, Mary Pickford, Thos. Ince and Charles Ray.

The new organization plans to have six production units, starting each unit as fast as plans can be formulated. Each unit to make a different type of pictures. They also have under consideration a proposal from a well known national distributor for the marketing and distributing of their entire output.

The plans are also well under way for the construction of a modern studio, to be located in San Francisco, within easy distance from the heart of the city. It will have not only room for the company's own six units but renting space to accommodate several other independent producers who may wish to come to San Francisco Pending the building of their own studio, temporary headquarters have been established at 331 Turk Street, which will be used until the studio plans, which are already well under way, can be carried out. More detailed activities of the organization will be announced early in 1924.

Ah, for a Glimpse of the Big Bagdad

Lloyd Hughes may never see New York City.

At least, that's how he feels about it.

For over a year Lloyd and his wife, Gloria Hope, have shared an ambition to visit the big city and see what it's like.

Every time they planned for the visit something happened to prevent. For the past two months they had dreamed about New Year's Eve on Broadway. This would give them an opportunity of seeing Manhattan at its gayest.

But the fates have decreed, it shall not be. James Young, director of Belasco's "Welcome Stranger" has been hurrying things along to let Hughes get away but it just can't be done. Lloyd will be working in the picture until the end of the week.

Again he will NOT see New York.

Fan Now Has Lewis Guessing

Ralph Lewis has just received a fan letter from Des Moines which has him considerably nettled as to its actual meaning. The letter was from a boy who had just seen him in "The Mail Man" and read, "I have just seen you in the 'Mail Man' and think you would be good to animals."

Critics Laud Von Eltz

Theodor von Eltz is figuring handsomely in the allotment of praise to Warner Brothers "Tiger Rose" which is now showing in New York. All the dramatic critics in the metropolis are commending Mr. von Eltz's portrayal of the young engineer in the production who plays opposite Lenore Ulric. His likeable personality, the sincere note he strikes, his big art are among the ingredients of the praise sounded.

Has Distrust of Studio Seats

Ruth Hiatt's mother always carefully tests the chair or bench or stool before she sits down in the Lloyd Hamilton studio.

Not that Mrs. Hiatt is overweight, but comedy studios abound in what is known as "breakaway furniture"—the kind especially built so that when the comedian, in his most dignified manner, sits down, the chair flies all to pieces, like the one horse shay of poetic fame.

Yes, Mrs. Hiatt sat down without looking—once!

Beery Pummels Star Prior to Trip

Virginia Valli left for New York in a black and blue condition which was caused by a terrific fight with Wallace Beery for a dramatic scene in "The Signal Tower", a Universal-Jewel production which Clarence Brown is directing.

Virginia was forced to call a physician to straighten out the kinks which the villainous Mr. Beery had put in her joints.

Finis Fox ranks high as one of the most progressive of our independent producers and has made many notable contributions to the human interest drama. His current production is "A Woman Who Sinned" which is being filmed at the Hollywood Studios. His recent films include "The Bishop of the Ozarks," "The Man Between," and "Bag and Baggage."

Round Two With Tully for Evelyn

Richard Walton Tully believes in using a player twice if their work merits it. Evelyn Sherman, whose work as Mrs. Bagot in "Trilby" excited favorable comment, is appearing in an interesting role in his forthcoming production of "Flowing Gold," which will also be a First National picture.

Jean Should Have Shut His Eyes

Jean Hersholt says the most difficult acting he ever did was to inject the required touch of humor into his role of the German, supporting Constance Talmadge in "The Gold Fish". Hersholt was an aviator with the A. E. F. during the late war.

Actor's Schedule Is Definite

Howard Gaye, the distinguished player who recently returned from London where he was featured in Gaumont's special production, "Byron," is completing his present role, The Duke of Norfolk in "Dorothy Vernon of Hadden Hall." Mr. Gaye has been proffered a contract by a Hollywood company, which is to do an English story, to fill the capacity of technical director commencing immediately upon the completion of his present engagement.

Lewis is Assembling Words for Filmplay

Ralph Lewis is writing a scenario based on the life of the famous Dr. Johnson, which Ralph plans to film as his second starring vehicle to follow the "Country Doctor" in the new series for Ralph Lewis Productions.

Actor Falsifies Ye Olde Adage

The old adage that "oil and water will not mix", has been disproved by Milton Sills. As soon as he completes his strenuous work as Calvin Gray in Richard Walton Tully's screen version of "Flowing Gold," the thrilling Rex Beach oil story, he has signed to appear in the title role of Frank Lloyd's First National production of "The Sea Hawk."

Really Sounds Worse Than Bigamy

Louise Lorraine wore three different wedding gowns all of the same pattern in the final episode of the Fighting Blood Series. She ruined one where she jumped from an ocean liner and then spoiled the second one when she had to jump the second time for the foreign negative. There were no casualties to the third creation when she went through the wedding ceremony in the final scene.

HAS LAUDABLE AMBITION TO GLORIFY WOMANHOOD ON SCREEN; WILL MAKE SERIES

e of the actuating ambitions of F. Wood, vice president and general manager of the United Producers and Distributors, is to dicate his big film distributing organization to the cause of glorifying American womanhood by releasing a series of photoplay features in which various of the admirable traits of the good women of this nation will serve as the basic themes. He claims the World War like any similar catastrophe has engendered a spirit of carelessness in many men to the extent of causing them to be lax in the consideration of woman and her importance in the God-given scheme of mundane affairs. The constantly increasing number of shocking cases which monopolize newspaper space nowadays is cited as proof of the unsavory condition.

"I am firm in the belief the screen can go far in the matter of hastening a correction of this threatening evil simply by the proper visualization of compelling stories in which American womanhood is glorified as it deserves to be," Mr. Wood says. "Let us forget the socalled sex appeal dramas and the mushy puppy-dog romances. Let us substitute for these useless stories a few first-class productions in which true drama is resorted to in demonstrations of the value of the exalted in actual life."

It is reported the United Producers and Distributors will release several feature photoplays designed for this very purpose and Mr. Wood frankly states that his hope is to thus have his company do its bit towards eradicating the new-born disregard of the worth of the gentler sex.

Wind Works for Cline

An ill wind has been blowing about Los Angeles and vicinity for the past week, leaving much destruction in its wake. Huge trees have been felled by its force, screen doors have been blown off, and brush fires have been fanned to fury.

But it has blown somebody some good, thereby following out the old adage. Baby Peggy and her company in "Captain January" were on location at Laguna Beach when the wind arose, and while it blew away from its moorings a crate of live lobsters that were being used in the picture, it also stirred up a high surf that whipped the old lighthouse with fury, working right into Director Howard F. Cline's hands for a big storm scene, and making some gorgeous photographic shots.

Beery Added To Lloyd Cast

Wallace Beery is the latest addition to the large cast of stars and featured players being assembled for Frank Lloyd's big First National spectacle "The Sea Hawk" it was announced yesterday upon the departure of the Lloyd company for Camp Lloyd, Catalina Island, a village which will accommodate more than 700 people during the five weeks to be required for the making of ship scenes and early sequences of the Sabatini story.

Mr. Beery, true to type, is to play the role of Jasper Leigh, a piratical sea captain who kidnaps Sir Oliver Tressilian on the eve of his trial for murder and by so doing forces himself and his captive into several years of interesting and unexpected adventure. Beery, six feet, two inches tall, will have as part of his character a number of spirited battles with both fists and swords, in defense of Sir Oliver, played by Milton Sills.

It is expected that the cast for "The Sea Hawk" will be completed within a few days.

Coffin's Genius Will Now Shine

Ray Coffin, publicity director for Richard Walton Tully, has turned actor for the time being, and is playing the part of a reporter in Tully's "Flowing Gold," a dramatization of the Rex Beach novel of the oil country.

Tully is a stickler for realism, and as one important sequence of the story calls for Milton Sills to submit to a press interview, the producer called his Wampas member to bat. For once in the history of motion pictures, a reporter will appear without notebook or pencil.

Not only that, with true metropolitan methods, Coffin carries a press photographer with him, and still with an eye to realism, Tully engaged Russell Ball, from New York, photographer de luxe for an eastern fan magazine who happens to be in Los Angeles on assignment, to enact the part of comera man.

Coffin says he expects to incur the eternal jealousy of Milton Sills, John Roche, Crauford Kent, Bert Woodruff, and Charles Sellon, and other noted male members of the cast, but refuses to longer hide his light under a bushel.

P. D. Head Retired Medic

The president of the United Producers and Distributors is a retired physician and surgeon, who in more recent years has been a highly successful capitalist. His name is Dr. G. R. Ringo and he was formerly head surgeon of one of Chicago's largest hospitals. It's a pun, of course, but it wouldn't be surprising if he should develop a marked ability as a film doctor!

Humanly character as we find it

Considerable progress has been made in the modernization of the motion picture sections of the daily newspapers within the past few years, and several developments of salient significance have taken place right here in Los Angeles. The following columnists and critics are, we believe, worthy of high places in the Film Editors' Hall of Fame. "Camera!" awards the laurels to:

Ted Taylor

. . . because he writes on "Cinematters" for the Los Angeles Record . . . because he has endowed this column with delicious satire . . . because he makes publicity bunkum ridiculous . . . because he was formerly the editor and publisher of "Camera!" . . . because he can tell the truth in a manner that incurs no enmity . . . because he fears no one . . . because he believes in the motion picture as an art.

Jimmy Gruen

. . . because he has done much to make the film section of the Los Angeles Examiner really worth-while . . . because he is original . . . because he so cleverly blends the light with the serious . . . because he knows what he is talking about . . . because he gives credit where credit is due . . . because he has no false and swollen estimation of his abilities . . . because he pans bum pictures . . . because he praises good ones . . . because he is a budding artist with the pen as his sketches in the Examiner reveal . . . because he is a hard and conscientious worker.

Don Eddy

. . . because he brings humanness to his column "Real and Unreel" which is a credit to the Los Angeles Examiner . . . because he knows motion picture people and cause he is genuine . . . be they know him . . . because he has his own inimitable style of making-up his column, using the interruption idea to distinct advantage . . . because he can talk about half-a-dozen things simultaneously . . . and talk about them sensibly . . . because people buy the paper to read his stuff as enthusiastically as they do to follow the adventures of Barney and Sparky . . . because he is a poet and a boiled-in-oil newspaperman in one.

Helene Awaits New Year's Gift

Christmas isn't over for Helene Chadwick.

Every year her aunt, Mrs. Lucy Chadwick Harris, sends a gift to her on New Year's Day. Mrs. Harris, the only one of the Chadwick family to retain stock in the Chadwick Mills at Chadwick, N. Y. which were started by Helene's great-grandfather, has a prejudice against what she terms the commercialization of the Christmas spirit. She refuses to give gifts at Christmas time. But on New Year's Day she wraps a dozen or more packages and starts them on their way to friends of life-long standing, and to relatives.

"My earliest memory is of the Shetland pony and wicker cart I found standing under the port cochere on New Year's Day fifteen years ago," Miss Chadwick says. "I had begged for a pony for a whole year, but mother had sternly refused me, declaring that if I wanted to go anywhere I could ride in the family brougham. When I saw the pony and cart Aunt Lucy had sent me I could have screamed for joy. I'll never forget that minute as long as I live."

Mrs. Harris, who still lives in Chadwick, N. Y. where Helene was born and brought up, always includes a box of preserves made from the fruit and berries on Miss Chadwick's old home.

Jean is Jack-of-Film-Direction

Jean Hersholt who plays one of the principal supporting roles with Constance Talmadge in the "Gold Fish" is equally proficient in directing pictures as in acting before the camera. Hersholt directed a number of big features for B. B. Hampton before taking up acting as a permanent vacation.

New Juvenile is With Finis Fox

Finis Fox selected Rex Lease to play the leading juvenile role in his production of "A Woman Who Sinned" taking the place of Cullen Landis who was unable to fill his contract owing to a broken leg. Although Lease is a comparative newcomer in pictures Finis confidently expects that he will soon be one of the top notch juveniles.

Pat Treasures Critics' Words

Pat O'Malley, leading man for Laurette Taylor in "Happiness," received a lot of Xmas gifts but the criticisms of his work in "My Mamie Rose," which comprised the bulk of his press clippings received by him yesterday gave him more joy than any present received this year.

Critics everywhere are unanimous in their opinion that Pat's characterization opposite Mary Philbin in this picture, marks the best characterization of his career.

Five Years Ago..... Being a line o' type or two gleane from the pages of yesteryear. Cherished words from memory's treasur box that so indelibly impress upon us the fleetness of Time. Republishe from the "Camera!" of December 29th, 1918.

D. W. Griffith is cutting his current Artcraft and has not announced when casting will begin for the next.

Culver City is working three Goldwyn companies. The illness of Miss Normand has laid off her company temporarily, but she expects to be back at work in another week or so. Mae Marsh, it is expected, will be starring in about two weeks. At present Reginald Barker is in his third week with a star cast, making a Rex Beach feature. Clarence Badger is in his second week with Madge Kennedy, and H. Beaumont is in his second week with Tom Moore. Report has it that the Goldwyn companies do not expect to remain long in the West.

Mae Marsh is again able to be around the different studios and is renewing her acquaintance with former friends.

At Lasky's George Melford is starting with Ethel Clayton; Edward Jose is starting with a star cast; James Cruze is in the middle of a Wally Reid picture.

Seven Universal companies are under operation. Jack Ford is starting with Harry Carey, with J. Brown at the camera; Rupert Julian is beginning a feature with himself as lead; Jack Dillon is finishing with Edith Roberts; J. P. MacGowan is on the second episode of his circus serial with Marie Walcamp; Ida May Park is finishing a Mary MacLaren picture; Harry Harvey is in the middle of a Helen Gibson Western. Lyons and Moran are making comedies.

Mocks, the carpenter at the Paramount studio, is back on the job after a severe case of flu.

Andy Reid, with the Clifton company, remarks that the next picture is going to carry a credit line, "Camera number effects by A. D. W. Reid." Whatdayaknowaboutthat?

At the National, Francis Grandon is starting with Billie Rhodes, Bert Bracken having finished. Harry Pollard is directing Bill Parsons in a comedy, and Louis Chaudet is in his third week with Walthall. Joe Bretherton is cranking the camera.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Lytell spent the Christmas holidays at the Lytell ranch in Napa County.

At the Metro Studio Henry Otto is replacing George Baker with May Allison, already under way. Director Harry Franklin is finishing the first Hale Hamilton picture. John Ince is getting started with Bert Lytell. Nazimova is in the third week of her Chinese picture. Herbert Blache is in the middle of a feature with Viola Dana. Edwin Carewe and Chas. Swickard are on the waiting list. Five companies are producing.

Charlie Chaplin is in the seventh week of his work on the third First National Comedy.

An item of interest gleaned by William Duncan on his recent trip to New York was the fact that while all the remaining members of his family are contented to attend the evening performance at the neighborhood theatre of the weekly change of program on the Duncan-Vitagraph serial, Bill Duncan's father never fails to buy the first ticket sold for the matinee.

William S. Hart has started another Artcraft and expects to go to San Francisco on location this week. Hillyer is directing, as usual, with Joe August at the camera.

Two companies are starting, one is under way and three are resting at the Brunton Studios. Ernest Ward is starting with Frank Keenan, Chas. Kaufman cameraman. William Worthington is starting with Hayakawa, Dal Clawson at the camera. James Kirkwood is in his second week with Jack Pickford, Tony Gaudio cranking. Kitty Gordon, Bessie Barriscale and Lillian Walker are waiting for stories.

Lou Howland is assisting George Melford at Lasky's.

Clara Horton is a busy little person. She is supporting Jack Pickford in his initial First National production, and is keeping up her studies at the same time. Clara knows she cannot acquire too much education and does not want to shirk any study.

Henry King will soon be the only one of the "famous three" directors left at the American studios, and will probably continue to direct the William Russell productions which he has brought into such prominence. In a very short time King has risen to the very front rank of directors, and any picture directed by him is always looked forward to by the exhibitors both here and abroad. He has just returned from San Francisco where he took a number of scenes for Bill Russell's "Brass Buttons."

Eddie Peil is with the Clifton company at the Paramount studios.

Astra has begun work on the long-talked-of serial which is to be in fifteen episodes, starring Ruth Roland and Larkin, neither of whom is new to the serial game. Robert Ellis is directing and H. Hardy is cranking the camera. The work is being done in the Glendale studio formerly occupied by Diando. Charles Rehfeld is the casting director.

Fred Bond is here, en route with a short vaudeville tour, over Pantages time.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Chaplin have gone to San Francisco to spend a few days and be present in the Bay City over New Year's Eve.

Constance Talmadge is starting at the Morosco Studio under the direction of Robert Vignola, for the present leaving the guiding wing of her former director, Walter Edwards. F. E. Garbutt will handle the camera.

Adolph Zukor is expected in the city Sunday.

Lois Weber expects to finish first Anita Stewart picture so time during the coming week.

Parke Frame is assisting Je Hampton at the Willis and In studios.

Harry Lamont is playi crook parts at National, w "Go Get 'Em Parks", in E Parsons comedies.

Al Jennings expects to leave New York next week.

Oliver (Bunny) Marsh is w the Reginald Barker compa at Culver City.

Lloyd Hughes and Frank C rier are at Metro with the Vi Dana company.

Chas. E. Whittaker is rec ering from the flu.

Tom Wilson is recovering fr the ordeal of getting away wit twenty-five-pound turkey on 25th inst.

Ed Thomas and Omar Whi head are at Astra.

Ralph and Vera Lewis are s porting Henry Walthall at National.

Bert Sutch is still getting touch with Southern Califor air. He is at Griffith's usually.

Frank Braidwood is playing juvenile with the Romayne S erfilm Company.

Bertram Grassby has comple a long engagement under J. Barry, who is making a multi reel feature of a propaganda ture. Grasby has a splendid pa the heavy, one of the best he e essayed. Mr. Grassby is one the "very worth while" film a ors.

Scenarists Must Be Sincere

Looks Like Hoe Labor for Anna

It's a hard old world, says Anna Q. Nilsson, who is deep in the pastime of moving when she has a moment off from her strenuous work in "Flowing Gold", the Richard Walton Tully production in which she is appearing for First National. Miss Nilsson has become a farmerette! Her husband has been siezed with the "back to the soil" movement, and purchased a ten-acre ranch out on Ventura Boulevard.

Anna laments the fact that the days are now so short, as it is going to utter darkness when she arrives home for dinner from the studio, and she fears she will not be able to assist with the chores.

Want to Marry? See Tully Agency!

Richard Walton Tully, whose production of the Rex Beach, novel, "Flowing Gold" with an all-star cast headed by Anna Q. Nilsson and Milton Sills is now under way, is seriously considering opening a matrimonial agency.

The little blind god seems to be eternally hovering over the Tully productions and releasing his darts in the most unexpected directions.

During the filming of "The Masquerader", last year, Edward Kimball, who played an important role in the production, was married.

Last spring, when in the midst of his production of "Trilby," Tully was startled to learn of the elopement and marriage of Andree Lafayette, who had the title role, to Max Constant, another member of the cast. Jimmie Ewens, his assistant director was also wed during production of "Trilby."

And now, Bert Woodruff, the well known character actor, who is playing the part of "Pa Briskow" in "Flowing Gold", has married Mrs. Addie M. Sprague, of Quincy, Ill., whom he had not seen for fifty-five years.

Actors desiring quick service in the matrimonial line, should by all means secure a Tully engagement.

Dorothy Gish is one of the stellar lights of "Romola," which is now being filmed in Italy under the direction of Henry King with a great cast including Lillian Gish. It is a far cry from the hoydenish comedies which Dorothy used to make here to the dramatic roles which she has been assuming of late. Her work in "Orphans of the Storm" was a distinct surprise; we will look forward to big things from her when we go to see "Romola."

Music Served With Previews

A projection room with music in it! That'll be something new in the Hollywood film colony, but it is what the United Producers and Distributors will offer in their new building, which they have just occupied. A fine organ will be installed and there will be no showing there of the silent drama in cold silence.

The latent highbrow in all of us tends to bring out an intellectual sneering at the works of Robert W. Service, Harold Bell Wright, and other protagonists of the "great open spaces". Naturally, Winifred Dunn, scenario writer at Metro Studios, shared this attitude, until she was assigned to adapt "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" for the screen. This famous Service poem will be produced by Sawyer-Lubin for Metro release.

Should Have Cabled Seven-League Boots

"Please report in London for the opening on New Year's Day."

That is the conclusion of four cablegrams received yesterday by Adele Rowland, vaudeville and musical comedy star and wife of Conway Tearle, motion picture star. Each was from a different London theatrical agent and offered her the lead in a new comedy by Franz Lehar, author of "The Merry Widow," to be called "The Three Graces."

"I suppose they figured she could take the afternoon train and arrive in New York tomorrow to catch the boat," said Mr. Tearle, in telling of the English conception of American distances. "Of course she would not have accepted the offer anyway; Los Angeles is our home now and we are going to stay here, together. But then it is flattering to have received such a hurry call, she feels."

ESTHER INVITED TO BUILD RHINE DOMICILE; PETITIONER NOT BACKWARD

Fan letters, which is the technical term for the epistles indited to motion picture favorites by their admirers all over the world, have provided a new gasp for one Hollywood actress, at any rate. Esther Ralston, whose blonde beauty illuminated Universal pictures for two years, and who recently played with Ernst Lubitsch in "The Marriage Circle," had received the usual type of fan letter, ranging from the Filipino who wanted her picture because she was "his most favorite actress," to the proposal of marriage from the supposed millionaire in Oskaloosa, or some other metropolitan center.

The other day, however, Miss Ralston got a letter from a young man named Joseph Schaefer of Bonn, on the Rhine, which certainly proves that the Germans lead the world when it comes to novelties. Herr Schaefer suggested that, since he admired Miss Ralston's work on the screen so much, and since she had "such a good, kind face," he was appealing to her to send him between eight hundred and a thousand dollars, so that he could set up house, and marry the girl to whom he was now engaged. Herr Schaefer promised, furthermore, to keep this a secret from his fiancee, just to show her the house as a surprise wedding present. The petitioner promises to repay the loan to Miss Ralston in installments during a five year term; but when she figured that it took four thousand marks for just the letter to get here, her mathematical sense was overwhelmed by the string of ciphers in the changing of one thousand dollars into German money.

Incidentally, the writer also suggests that perhaps Miss Ralston could not make this loan to him all by herself, so he is willing to have her tell the circumstances to her friends and comrades at the studios, so that they can combine to make up the amount of the loan.

Esther Ralston hereby challenges any actor or actress in Hollywood to produce an authentic letter which can even tie this one, much less beat it!

CARMEL MYERS TO PLAY SIREN IN FILM VERSION OF WALLACE TALE

Carmel Myers—she of the dark and exotic allure—will play Iras, the Egyptian siren of "Ben Hur," which the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will produce in Europe on a scale of magnitude never attempted before.

This was the announcement made yesterday by Vice President Abraham Lehr after a search which has extended over two continents. The fairest charmers of both America and Europe were considered for the part. That the United States should win out in this unofficial world-wide contest of beauty and feminine appeal is a tribute to the American girl.

Dozens of film tests were made in this country by June Mathis, Goldwyn Editorial Director. In Europe, Charles Brabin, who will direct the picture, photographed the most noted beauties of the continent and sent the pictures to the studio for consideration.

The part was particularly difficult to cast because the producers wanted Iras to measure up to Gen. Lew Wallace's description of her: ". . . a wonderfully beautiful woman, beautiful of face, beautiful of form . . . with large, soft, black almond-shaped eyes declarative of her race—eyes which looked more than lies in the supremest wealth of words to utter . . . tall, slender, graceful, refined, wrapped in rich and floating draperies, wanting nothing but a fitting mind to make her . . . terrible as an army. In other words, as she returned to his fancy, the whole passionate song of Solomon came with her, inspired by her presence."

Nikolas Muray, the famous Hungarian painter, sculptor and photographer, recently declared that Miss Myers was the most beautiful woman he had ever photographed. In analyzing her face Muray says he finds it impossible to measure beauty in terms of features. It is the total impression that counts. He affirms, however, that Miss Myers' mouth and eyes are extraordinarily beautiful.

Miss Myers is the fourth member of the cast to be announced. George Walsh will play the much-coveted title role. Gertrude Olmsted will be Esther, and Kathleen Key will enact the role of Tizrah, Ben Hur's sister.

Miss Myers was born in San Francisco and entered pictures at the Griffith studios in Los Angeles. She also appeared on the New York stage in "The Magic Melody," a musical comedy, and made a short tour in vaudeville. She has recently scored heavily in "demi-vamp" parts, including "The Famous Mrs. Fair," "Slave of Desire" and "Reno."

Seek Valli Society Drama

Virginia Valli will have a chance to exhibit herself in an array of fine gowns in her next starring picture if rumors coming from the Universal studio have any foundation. It is said that the company is looking for a society drama for the beautiful young star.

Since returning to the screen after an absence of over a year, Virginia has appeared in one costume play, "The Lady of Quality," which will have its local premiere soon. In her last two pictures her wardrobe has consisted of g i n g h a m gowns. She has appeared in but one society drama in her career.

Morey Cast in "Captain January"

Nearly all of the real picture pioneers have passed into the limbo of things forgotten. A few have made successful comebacks after long periods of retirement, but only one or two have come down the years steadily, with picture after picture, their popularity never wavering.

Such a one is Harry T. Morey who, with Alice Joyce, formed the old Vitagraph team that for six years dominated the field of motion picture players. It was these two who made the first screen version of "Within the Law," more than ten years ago.

With the growth of the industry Harry Morey found his proper niche and became known as the best character man in pictures. He has supported this title consistently, as is proven in his characterization of Hull Gregson, the trader, in "Where the Pavement Ends" and as Major Crespin in "The Green Goddess." This latter production found Morey and Alice Joyce reunited after a period of six years.

And strange as it may seem, in this long screen career, Harry Morey is to make his first picture on the Pacific Coast. "When I was in Los Angeles on a visit ten years ago," he says, "Hollywood was an orange grove that you looked at and admired on your way to Pasadena."

Morey has been cast for the heavy role in "Captain January", Baby Peggy's first production under her Principal Pictures contract, which is being made at the studio of the company in Hollywood

Kenyon Deluged by Masterpieces

A few months ago, Charles Kenyon, the eminent playwright and scenarist, addressed a group of amateur screen authors, and volunteered to read their scripts in his spare time and give them some definite suggestions for their treatment. Naturally, he has been receiving a continuous deluge of would-be "film masterpieces," and he has been conscientiously trying to live up to his promise. Many successful authors, in fact, give their leisure time to such work, always hoping that the miracle will come to pass and they will discover a real genius among the myriad who keep trying.

The last couple of months have been very strenuous for Kenyon, and now he is working against time to finish his modernization and revision of a story which he wrote in collaboration with his brother, Albert, some five years ago; it was then used as a starring vehicle for Gladys Brockwell, but now is being rewritten for Jack Gilbert, also a Fox star. Because of this activity, and the fond hope that he may be able to enjoy some of the delights of the holiday season, Charles Kenyon is praying that the amateur output submitted for his criticism will be diminished for a month or so.

And fourth, sequence in which she is the ulation "heavy," villianess of deepest dye! Fifth, of course, combination of all of these, ch is the truest character of since that is the way we are posed.

Don't Dwell on Acting, Says Melford

Young men who are in Los Angeles in search of film careers should set their aims on assistant directors' jobs and go after them, states George Melford, prominent director.

An investigation into the ranks of young men who have come into the city this year reveals that only a few have anything on their mind except acting, says Melford. These few, determined to start at the bottom and work up, have had far less difficulty and are many of them on the road to success, not as actors but as directors and technical directors.

Melford says that members of the film industry look with far more favor upon the young man who asks for a job with the stated intention of working up, rather than those who walk into the studio and expect their good looks to win them instant success before the camera.

Lloyd Has Film Album Fever

Lloyd Hughes is negotiating with various distributing companies for the purchase of prints of motion pictures in which he has appeared from the day he started at the Metro studio five years ago.

Doctor Prescribed Screen Career

Many present day movie stars started their screen careers through peculiar circumstances.

Estelle Taylor, playing Miriam in "The Ten Commandments" however, is the first actress to become a movie star by a doctor's orders.

Miss Taylor's family, strict Methodists, objected to Miss Taylor's screen ambitions when she graduated from high school and expressed the desire to become a film actress. All her pleas were in vain until she sought the aid of her family physician who had brought her into the world and attended her through all her childhood illnesses.

The physician, an intimate friend of the family, proved a valuable ally. Calling upon her parents he prescribed a motion picture career as necessary to the girl's health and happiness.

"Let her ride a horse, shoot off a couple of guns and swim streams—as they do in the movies," the doctor told her parents. "She will never be entirely well until she can work off her nervous energy and the movie studio is just the place for her to do it. Above all, if you want to see your daughter happy, let her do the thing she wants."

It took considerable persuasion but the physician finally won out and Miss Taylor was sent to Sargent's Dramatic School in New York to receive her training. Shortly thereafter she received her big screen opportunity, made the most of it, and became one of the most sought after actresses for the screen.

Her first long term contract was signed with William Fox calling for her services for a period of three years. In "While New York Sleeps" with Marc McDermott she registered her first big success. Followed "Blind Wives," "Footfalls," "Monte Cristo," "A Fool There Was" and other Fox successes. Among her other more recent portrayals were those in "Forgive and Forget" and "The Ten Commandments." She is at present portraying the part of Mary, Queen of Scots in Mary Pickford's "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

Is Good Good or Not So Good?

When is good, bad, and when is bad, good? Is the serious question which has arisen in the Jackie Coogan Company, now engaged in filming "A Boy of Flanders" on the Metro Studio lot.

To those unfamiliar with the mechanics of photography in motion pictures, it might be well to explain that after the cameraman has finished "shooting" a scene, his assistant holds in front of the lens a small black chart on which is written the number of the scene and sequence. If the particular scene which has just preceded this registry is bad, it is marked with the popular negative sign, "N. G." —if it is satisfactory it is marked "O. K." or "good." The chief cinematographer's name is always on this chart so that credit or blame can be placed after the film is developed and screened for the production supervisor.

The man responsible for the exquisite photography in Jackie Coogan's "Long Live the King" and the head of the Coogan camera department, bears the hearty cognomen of Frank Good. So each and every scene in a Jackie Coogan picture is marked "Good," and director Victor Schartzinger declares that Good is very good, while Good in all modesty claims that Good is not so good.

Helene Refutes Obituary

"I am NOT dead!"

Helene Chadwick gave vent to the above exclamation and to use the Mark Twain bromide, added that the printed report of her death was greatly exaggerated.

From Hartford, Conn., Helene received a newspaper notice clipped from the Hartford Times which said: "Helene Chadwick, Goldwyn star, died as the result of burns last week," and told of the fact that she had recently been elected queen of the Los Angeles chamber of commerce excursion at a banquet given in honor of the party, at San Luis Obispo.

Miss Chadwick admits to the banquet but emphatically denies that she died of burns received when a geyser erupted at Yellowstone Park and scalded her.

GOLDWYN TO RETURN; BELIEVES IN HOLLYWOOD AS FILM PIVOT

Samuel Goldwyn, one of the leading Eastern motion picture producers, arrived here last week and put at rest rumors that producers here were contemplating moving from Los Angeles to New York and other cities.

"There is absolutely nothing in the story that big producing companies with headquarters in New York are contemplating a transfer of their Los Angeles studio organizations to New York. Quite to the contrary, I propose within the near future, to move my producing organization from the East and locate it in Los Angeles.

"I have talked with practically every big producer in New York within the last few weeks, and I know that Los Angeles will always be the home of motion picture production."

In connection with his own plans, Goldwyn said:

"I am here for the purpose of establishing producing headquarters in Los Angeles. Within the next few months I will have under way my first Los Angeles production in several years. 'Potash and Perlmutter in Hollywood.' For this picture I will bring on from New York, Alexander Carr and Barney Bernard, the celebrated stage stars who have made Montague Glass' stories famous. In addition to this picture I propose producing many others here.

Considering Raiment

By Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin

people want to have a social chat with her, rather than discuss humdrum business.

For clothes actually affect us when we wear them. Take a studio example: A very prominent director—we shall mention no names—saw starring possibilities in a girl who had hitherto been a bathing-beauty, pert and saucy; he clothed her in gorgeous raiment of silken and gold cloth, gave her jewels galore, even to be-gemming her slippers; he dressed her hair in most exotic, elaborate fashion; her dresses all had long trains and tight hems. As a result, she lost the free and easy stride of the bathing-girl. she carried her head erect and queenly. Her whole attitude changed without any instruction, so that she could show her clothes. Naturally, and entirely subconsciously, she assumed the queenly bearing that her clothes demanded. After a few months, the impulse was so strong that this actress would have looked just as imposing in a bathing-suit as she did in her gorgeous studio evening costumes; in short, the clothes had sold her a certain attitude which was now hers, on the set, in the street, or at home. Similarly, we can all change our entire bearing, as well as our carriage, posture, etc., by the type of clothes we wear. Therefore, having thought out exacttly the parts we want to play in the human drama, it behooves us to dress ourselves for those parts, and then in a short space of time, we will find ourselves assuming them naturally, gracefully and convincingly. The drama of the studio and of the screen is after all the drama of life, merely focused to a small pinpoint. The same rules apply in the larger sphere as in the lesser.

The second instruction regarding dress is to adhere to type. The well-drssed man, as well as the well-dressd woman, is well-dressed because he has studied his own type and has seen to it that his clothes show him off to best advantage, irrespective of the minor change in the mode from time to time. Of course, the exemplification of this idea is the more colorful with the female sex, since men's style have but minor changes with the seasons or with the period. The matron looks ludicrous in the flapper costume, and vice versa. There is nothing more appealing to every man, whatever his age, than a youthful matron who realizes that her callow days have gone, and who dresses the part she really holds. Naturally, in dressing this part, she will assume the proper carriage and demeanor for it.

Some of us are beautiful—but these people can wear almost anything. But most of us have just one or two points of interest about us. These are the things we should study, just as any stage or screen director or playwright studies his characters. Having studied them, we must use our best thoughts to dress them correctly. Then we will, consciously or subconsciously, play these parts convincingly and attain success in whatever sphere of life we are acting.

Dramatic Conquest

the young actor intimately can appreciate how he can "take himself in" when it spells greater charm in his work. He is the capable man who can hand out freely all the drama in the world, and yet be like the eternal boy who still believes in ghost stories.

This past year has witnessed success after success for him, the variety of characterizations he has played in his entire career is most impressive, but his name on the dotted line for "Magnolia" in a role so uniquely outstanding as that of the young hero who had to learn to fight to demonstrate that he was a true southerner, means more than a "big" part. It is nearing the goal! And Landis has proved that if an actor keeps moving he will reach the goal and find that all the hard work and the long hours are worth while.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

The newly organized Marriott Productions have taken as their temporary headquarters and studio almost the entire first floor of the Hotel Van Dorn at 242 Turk Street, and expect to begin production there the first of the new year. The organization is headed by Frank B. Marriott, Englishman and globe-trotter, as its president, and Forrest B. Creighton, well known, and with long experience of both the spoken stage and the screen, as its director general. The Marriott Productions have absorbed as one of its branches the Mandarin Photoplays, organized some months ago, and will carry out their plans for the filming of "Young China", by Charles Caldwell Dobie, one of the sweetest romances ever written about San Francisco's Chinatown. The exteriors are to be filmed in Chinatown itself and the interiors in their studio now being equipped at 242 Turk Street. The organization will also make a series of two-reel sport pictures. Good, clean outdoor stories, each one dealing with some branch of sport, tennis, baseball, fooball, and the many varieties of college athletics.

"Half-A-Dollar-Bill," latest production of the Graf films, had its world premier showing at the Warfield Theater last Saturday, and is being welcomed by crowded houses of enthusiastic film fans. For it is not only the best picture that the Graf organization has made, but its one of the best pictures to come to any local theater this season. A good, clean story with lots of human interest, well photographed in attractive and unusual surroundings, and beautifully photographed in attractive and unusual surroundings, and beautifully played by a cast of well known stars, including Anna Q. Nilsson, Mitchell Lewis, Raymond Hatton, William T. Carleton, George MacQuarrie, Alec B. Francis, little Frankie Darrow, and the two dogs "Cameo" and "Irish." It's one of those pictures that make you laugh, gives you real thrills in the big fight scenes, and when the faithful "Irish" jumps off the high pier and swims after the ship that is carrying away his friends, at last to be hauled on board hanging to a rope by his teeth, a lump comes into your throat. But it's one of those real pictures that everyone, old and young, will enjoy. The story is from the pen of Curtis Benton, and S. Van Dyke wielded the megaphone. Little Frankie Darrow, and "Irish" are making personal appearances for the first few days of the showing.

Joseph Jackson, director of publicity for Goldwyn, and president of the Wampas, Ray Leek, chairman of the Frolic and ball committee and Harry Beall arrived in San Francisco on Sunday morning. They spent the day inspecting the Civic Auditorium, and working with Garrett Graham on the plans and arrangements for the big Wampas Ball on January 19th. Everything points to the most successful affair that the Wampas has ever put on, the ticket sale going on merrily, and they returned to the south on Sunday evening much pleased with the outlook for some grand part.

Gouverneur Morris, famous author of the screen, spent a few days as a guest at the Hotel Plaza last week.

Grace Sanderson Michie, head of the scenario department of the Rellimeo Films of this city and Hollywood, has gone to New York to spend Christmas with her husband, Gordon Michie, business manager of the organization, who is there completing arrangements for the release of their recently completed pictures, "Eight Bucks" and "The Yellow Stigma."

Mrs. Wallace Reid, her mother, and little son Wally, Jr., spent a day or two in San Francisco the first of last week. They were en route from Canada, where she has been speaking before clubs, and many other organizations on the narcotic evil, in connection with the showing of her film "Human Wreckage," to her home in Hollywood, for the Christmas season.

William Matthews, well known to the film world and lately production manager for the Kenmat Productions is now the head of a new film organization; the Nova Productions with offices in the Golden Gate Theater building. The company already have all their plans under way for the making of a series of reel feature pictures of the great outdoors. first will be from the story by W. C. T published in "Adventure," and will be under the working title of "Sticky Ro Louis King will direct, and the cast will clude Tom Santschi, Clair Adams, Ge Nicols, and the newly discovered wonder Baby Mary Rore. The studio work will be at the Gerson Studio at 1947 Page street, the outdoor scenes in San Francisco and Bay District. The full cast will be ready announcement within a few days.

This is a week of new pictures in the l ing houses of San Francisco for besides world premier of "Half-A-Dollar-Bill" at Warfield, "Under The Red Robe" makes local bow at the Imperial; Lillian Gish's picture "The White Sister" comes to the C tol and much interest is aroused in "Ste Steps Out" at the California on accoun Doug Fairbanks, Jr.

The incomparable Nora Bayes comes to as this week's headliner at the Orpheum, ing ourneyed all the way jto the coast f special four-week's engagement, before goes to New York with a new play.

Ted Oliver, who played heavy in the two pictures made by the Gerson Films, is now to win laurels for himself in a branch of the business, as he has written scenarios that are to be filmed by a local ganization in the very near future.

"Lightnin'" Frank Bacon's masterpiece ened to a packed and delighted house on day evening at the Columbia Theater. of the original cast is still with the comp and Percy Pollock who plays Bacon's own role gives a charming and adequate perf ance. On the arrival of the company on urday they were met at the ferry by a com tee from civic bodies, the native sons, other organizations, and driven to the city for a formal welcome by the mayor, and leading citizens gathered to do honor to memory of Frank Bacon, one of San F cisco's best loved sons.

The Speech for Fame

By HAROLD WALLACE

That the road to success in the "movies" is not without hardships, but rather the result of conscientious effort and hard work has been proven in several cases of present day stars.

Among these is Monte Blue, and none will dispute the fact that his was an humble beginning. For Monte's first work for a motion picture company was not before the camera but as a utility laborer at the D. W. Griffith Studios, which paid him the handsome sum of $1.50 per day.

Until his decision to break into pictures, through any available medium, Monte had roved over the world—a soldier of fortune, as sailor, soldier, lumber jack and cow puncher as occasion demanded. Tiring of this, he returned to America and began his work at the Griffith Studio.

It was on a noon hour, when he was exhorting his fellow laborers on their rights as workmen that he was first noticed by Mr. Griffith, who was impressed by his earnestness and naturalness—and Monte wasn't acting. Later, when a picture offered a small role for a "stump speaker" Griffith recalled the impassioned speech of the laborer, and had him make up for the part. The result was satisfactory, and on the strength of his work in that first picture, he was given other "extra" roles and "bits."

The struggle was a long one, but that M made good his opportunity is born out by present position among the screen's stars t and the prominent place he occupies in hearts of the fans.

His work in "Orphans of the Storm," first big picture, and then in "Peacock Al and "Broadway Rose," brought him a con with the Warner Brothers. Under the Wa banner he has appeared as star in "M Street" and "Brass"—and more recently in Ernst Lubitsch production, "The Marr Circle"—in which his work is said to ec all his previous efforts.

Helen Lynch Signed for Sawyer Film

Miss Helen Lynch who was one of the thirteen baby stars selected by the Wampas in 1923 has demonstrated in her work that she more than justifies the signal honor.

Miss Lynch has been selected to appear with Barbara La Marr in "The Shooting of Dan McGraw" which is now in preparation.

Chaplin Aide in Talmadge Film

Nellie Bly Baker of the Chaplin Studios, has been loaned by Chaplin to Constance Talmadge for a role in her next picture, "The Gold Fish."

Miss Baker will be remembered for her characterization of the masseuse in "A Woman of Paris," Chaplin's latest dramatic production. She has had a number of calls from the various other studios but Chaplin did not give her permission to work elsewhere. She is his secretary but will give up that position for a prominent part in his next production.

Old-Timer Will Attend Frisco Frolic

The first star ever photographed for a motion picture expects to attend the Wampas Frolic in San Francisco Jan. 19th. Cissy Fitzgerald, who made her first camera appearance for Thomas Edison in 1898 at Orange, N. J., and who is now appearing as "The Suicide Blonde" in Richard Walton Tully's production of "Flowing Gold", is making preparations to attend and let the public see the "perennial flapper."

Dixon Resigns Exchange Job

Thomas Dixon, Jr., director and secretary of Shadowland Productions, the local Olive Street exchange, has resigned his secretarial duties to give more time to his script work for local production companies.

Figures That Lie

By MARGUERITE COURTAT McKEE

Jade is growing in vogue for pendants, buckles and almost every other ornament or article into which it can be fashioned. Some of those little shops in the side streets or in the West Lake section are very comfortable and are carrying a great many new ideas in tortoise shell. Among the most graceful are bangle bracelets. They are like the Chinese charm bracelets, which a few years ago were worn as charms—inexpensive affairs, and the fad of the day.

Mah Jong!

By RAYMOND McKEE

Last week we four were seated around the table with our tiles built into a wall two tiles high and seventeen tiles long, without the seasons, 18 with the seasons. Then we pushed the four walls together to form a hollow square, remember? Now we will break the wall. "E" will begin by throwing the dice, you remember that East is the one who threw the highest number. Now then, "E" throws the dice to determine which wall shall be broken. Starting with his own wall as number one, and counting to the right until he reaches the number thrown. His own wall will be 5 or 9; that on his right 2, 6, or 10, the fellow opposite is 3, 7, or 11 and on his left, 4, 8, or 12. Now count it, then I'll be sure that you understand. The player whose wall is to be broken, shall throw the dice, then add this second throw to the number thrown for his wall. Taking the total of the two throws, and counting the stacks of tiles in his own wall, from right to left until he arrives at a number corresponding to the total of the two throws. the stack arrived at shall be lifted and placed on the top of he wall o the right of the opening, the lower tile of the two, next the opening; the upper one farther from it. These are known as "loose tiles." Should the number exceed the number of stacks in the player's own wall, it must be carried on to the next wall on his left. It shall be the duty of the player whose wall is broken, to make another break to the right of the opening separating seven stacks or fourteen tiles, including the loose tiles, from the rest. These tiles cannot be used in play, they are reserved for replacing kongs. Whatever that is, we'll find out later. If they are reached before any player goes Mah Jong, the game is drawn, the hands are all thrown up and the position of "E" passes to the right. Now for the draw. Beginning with "E", each player in turn to the right shall take two stacks, or four tiles from the end of the wall at the left of the opening. Then each in turn takes four more, until each has 12. Each then takes one tile, making thirteen in hand, then "E" takes the fourteenth.

It is always good form, if th player whose wall is being drawn from, will swing the open end of it to the center of the table in such a position that all may reach it. He shall also see tha teach player takes tiles in the proper order. Never look at any of the tiles you have drawn until you have drawn a complete h It you should, you must pal ten points to of us for every tile so looked at. Any p having looked at any tile in his hand the number is more or less than thirteen, not correct the error, but shall play with foul or stale hand, as the case may be, settle accordingly at the end. And should knock over or expose a tile or tiles while d ing to your hand, you must take those tiles your own hand then allow the player to such tiles would have gone to take the that would have gone t oyou. I know it's to follow so you'll have to listen closely. member those of you who play Mah Jong, these rules are as the Chinese play it, you'll have to take my word for this fo Chinese have no book of instruction. play the game as children and consequ feel no need for a book of rules. Such as "Chow," "bamboo," "characters," "D "Dragons," etc., are merely colloquial, have no equivalent Chinese character i Chinese written language. All of the te ology used by Americans in playing Mah was devised by a man named J. P. Bab Mr. Babcock lived a great many years i interior of China and spoke the language, died their art, in fact was dependent en on the Chinese for recreation so of cour became interested in their national game. has written a book of rules and for the a you may own one. Write to Joseph Park cock, 36 Spear Street, San Francisco, Cali haven't yet read his book but I'm sure it be quite complete.

Next week we will play the game.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN WILL RETURN TO SCREEN IN "BEN HUR" ROLE

Francis X. Bushman, at one time the most popular actor on the screen, will return to the silver sheet as Messala in "Ben Hur," which the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will make in Europe.

This was the announcement made yesterday by Abraham Lehr, Vice-President in charge of production at the Goldwyn Studios.

The selection is of particular interest to motion picture fans because it will be the first picture in which Bushman has ever appeared in which he was not the star and the first picture in which he has played the villain. Messala is the noble Roman who is the chief antagonist to Ben-Hur, the idealistic young Jew. The story is laid in the time of Christ when the Jews were under the rule of the Romans.

The announcement of Bushman's selection as Messala marks the fifth member of the cast to be chosen.

"I would rather play the 'heavy' in 'Ben-Hur' than to star in any other picture," Bushman said yesterday. "As a boy I saw the stage version in Baltimore and it has always been my ambition to appear in it."

William S. Hart played the role of Messala on the stage for several years before he became the good bad man of the flickering drama.

Film tests of Bushman, taken by June Mathis, Goldwyn Editorial Director, showed him to be ideally fitted for the role of the Roman soldier. His features are classic and his body athletic. For four years he was the most sought after model in New York for such sculptors as Karl Bitter, Daniel C. Franch, Isidor Konti and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney. In fact, there is hardly a large city in the country that does not possess a monument or painting for which he has posed.

He will be a worthy antagonist for George Walsh, a perfect specimen of physical manhood, who plays the title role.

Cameraman Is Champ Golfer

John Mescall, who is photographing Ruper Hughes' current picture "True As Steel," recently won the Los Angeles City Golf Championship. Mescall also held the same title in 1917.

New Edit Plan For Fairbanks

Douglas Fairbanks and his editorial staff have developed a system of cutting that obviates all the confusion and delay caused by the old method.

Instead of waiting until the picture is finished, "The Thief of Bagdad" has been assembled and cut as the production progressed. Hence, the cutting is completed at practically the same time as the final scenes are made.

A great advantage of this method is that it gives Doug a very definite idea of just how his story is developing and is a day-to-day guide to his editorial department.

Editing Three For Louis Mayer

Three big productions are now in the final stages of editing at the Louis B. Mayer studios. John M. Stahl's "Why Men Leave Home," based on Avery Hopwood's great stage comedy, will probably be the first ready for release to be followed shortly by Fred Niblo's colorful production of "Thy Name Is Woman" and Reginald Barker's stirring epic of sea coast life, "Cape Cod Folks." Dividing their time between supervision of the editing of these pictures and preparations for their next, all three directors will probably start "shooting" simultaneously along about the end of January.

McDowell Signed By Arthur Sawyer

Nelson McDowell has been signed by Metro, to play a character beachcomber in the production "Shooting of Dan McGrew." The company leaves for Catalina Island January 3rd to do the exterior work.

Policeman Figures in Party Fray

Reports issued from police headquarters late Friday indicate that a policeman assigned to the traffic squad had been acting as go-between for Courtland Dines, wealthy oil man shot at a New Year's party at which Mabel Normand and Edna Purviance were present, and Horace Greer, chauffeur for Miss Normand who shot Dines.

This policeman had made statements at the Good Samaritan Hospital to the effect Greer was being subjected to rough treatment during his detention by the authorities.

Greer's bail has been set at $10,000 and the preliminary hearing has been set for January 11th in Justice Hanby's court.

Not So Funny, Avers Charles

Charles Cruz, who recently finished the lead in "The Spark of Life", written and directed by Perley Poore Sheehan at Universal, is recovering from severe whip cuts he received during the filming of the picture. The whipping scene, in which Howard Truesdell inflicts punishment on Cruz was indeed realistic, and as Cruz says, should be of interest to those contemplating a screen career.

Is Familiar With All Sorts o' Shacks

Wm. Henshelwood, ("Billy Wood, for short) has designed all the sets for "Flowing Gold," the Rex Beach epic of the oil fields being picturized by Richard Walton Tully for First National. This art director has found his vast experience extremely necessary in the wide variety of settings required for this production.

From bunk houses to millionaire's mansions; modiste's shops to hotel lobbies; Texas farm shacks to governor's suite, pool halls of the oil fields to streets of oil boom towns, is a wide variety, but the artist, it is said, will show some startling effects.

Production Ceases At Pickford-Fairbanks

Production activities at the Pickford-Fairbanks studios were completed with the ending of the year 1923.

Actual filming of Mary Pickford's new offering "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," was finished on December 31st, and Marshall Neilan and the editorial staff are now in the midst of cutting and editing this feature.

The finishing of this picture completes Miss Pickford's production schedule which called for two pictures during the past year.

While no release date has yet been arranged for "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," it will be distributed through the United Artists Corporation and will probably reach the public some time in March.

Douglas Fairbanks' production, "The Thief of Bagdad," was completed almost simultaneously with Miss Pickford's, the month of December being devoted almost entirely to the filming of scenes of magic and fantasy, with the star alone appearing in these sequences.

"The Thief of Bagdad" will be given the usual Fairbanks" New York presentation in one of the legitimate theaters, with possible showings in other key cities to follow. Plans for the general distribution of this production will be held in abeyance, to be announced following the New York premier which will probably occur during the month of March.

Old-Time Lids Slated for Stan

Sometimes things are so old that they are new. For instance in making Hal Roach's latest Stan Laurel comedy "Rupert of Cold Slaw" under the direction of Perc Pembroke, the regular gold braid suits and inverted brimmed derby with horse's tail stuck in the top in the proper costume. The hats used in the picture were originally purchased by the United States Government and used for army dress parade in 1882—the infantry buttons and date are stamped on the inside.

Wreaks Vengeance With Banana-Cream

"All things come to him who waits!" hissed George Jeske, Hal Roach director, as he picked up a banana cream pie and let it fly full in Will Rogers' face. Vengeance wrecked, Jeske laughed one of his famous laughs. For many years he played the part of a Keystone Kop—and has stopped hundreds of pies in his day, and it has been his life's ambition to do that pie-throwing act with someone else as the target. But as that "gag" is obsolete as far as Hal Roach comedies are concerned, he did not have the opportunity to get even until Will Rogers and Rob Wagner decided to use the pie "gag" satirically. Then Jeske did the "dirty work."

WARRENTON CAMERAMAN FOR HIS MOTHER'S STAGE ASSOCIATE OF YEARS GONE BY

Many years ago, Joseph De Grass played opposite Lule Warrenton in "The Two Orphans" and "The Octoroon," upon the stage. Now DeGrasse is directing the Richard Walton Tully screen production of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold," and Gilbert Warrenton, the son of DeGrasse's former playmate, is one of his cameramen.

Miss Warrenton will be remembered by theater-goers as one of the most versatile leading women of the stage. As a child, she played in stock at the old California Theater in San Francisco, and also in the company of her uncle, Sheridan Corbyn, throughout California, traveling by stage. Later, she toured the entire country as a reader, and as leading woman with her own company. She co-starred with W. V. Ranous in Shakespearean plays ,and with Franklyn MacLeay, was one of the last pupils of the late James E. Murdoch. Miss Warrenton instructed in elocution at St. Mary's Notre Dame, for two years, and was the only original member remaining with the Ulrich Stock Co. during its entire run of six seasons at the Grand Opera House in Los Angeles. During this time she appeared with and under the direction of DeGrasse. She has been working in pictures of late years.

Gilbert Warrenton, her son, is now rated as one of the most accomplished of cinematographers. He was responsible for much of the photographic beauty of "Enemies of Women," "Little Old New York," "Under the Red Robe," and other recent successes.

The Straight Dope About Palmborg

An item in a Hollywood newspaper the other day stated that Mr. C. F. Palmborg, Hollywood motion picture representative for the New York Life Insurance Company, had severed his connections and had gone into business for himself. This was, of course, a very absurd error, as Mr. Palmborg has no intentions whatsoever of leaving that company, as he handles the bulk of their film business. It is true, however, that he has opened another general insurance agency at the same address to deal in various forms of insurance. While financially interested in this new enterprise he is devoting the majority of his time to New York Life interests, the general agency being under his supervision but not detail management. There is not one iota of truth to the statement about his severance from the New York Life and he will continue to serve motion picture people in his past capacity as agent of this company for whom he has done such splendid work in the past eight years.

Lew Cody for Title Role in 'Dan McGrew'

Lew Cody has been chosen to enact the tile role in the S.L production of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," for Metro. Announcement of the selection of Mr. Cody was made yesterday by Arthur Sawyer, supervisor of S-L Productions, following the compiling of the votes cast by exhibitors, exchange managers and salesmen for this coveted role.

Several months ago Mr. Sawyer sent a form letter to five hundred leading exhibitors and to all Metro exchange managers and salesmen asking that they vote for the actor they would pick for Dan McGrew. He enclosed a short synopsis and a week later was flooded with answers. Lew Cody was the popular choice.

Mr. Cody has recently appeared in "Nellie the Beautiful Cloak Model," "Reno," "Souls for Sale," "Within the Law" and other successful productions.

Barbara La Marr is the only other member of the all-star cast signed to date for "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." Miss La Marr will have the part of "The Lady Lou" in the screen adaptation of Robert W. Service's poem, which Clarence G. Badger will direct. Winifred Dunn prepared the continuity.

Actual production will start on "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" at the Metro studios this week.

"Ridin' Kid" Is Next for Cullen

Cullen Landis, upon his return from Natchez, Miss., where he is playing the leading male role in "Magnolia," a James Cruze production for Famous Players Lasky, will take off the fine raiment of a southern gentleman and don the outfit of cowpuncher. For preparations are being made for Mr. Landis' first independent starring production "The Ridin' Kid From Powder River," with the starting date to be announced. The story by H. H. Knibbs is now being put into continuity by Anthony W. Caldeway who adapted for the screen among other successes "Ruggles of Red Gap."

Lois Zellner, well known screen writer, is considering a contract to co-direct four of her own photoplays for an independent Hollywood company. One of these "Closed Doors" is now being developed by Miss Zellner into a six reel feature.

Now Rogers Has Become "Pie-ou

All that goes up must c down—all that starts must s and in the language of the po "I hurled a pie into the air was stopped by somebody. Wh I do not care." But this tim happened to be Will Rogers is now in the process of makin picture for Hal Roach under direction of Rob Wagner, ca "Warehouse Players," who on the receiving end of some en "gooey" pies. When the s had been shot and Rogers scraping some of the pie from face he was heard to remar "Who thinks up all this tu stuff anyhow?"

Beal Dons Make-up for Tourne

Another director has tur actor.

Scott R. Beal, assistant to M rice Tourneur, donned the m up yesterday for a brief ad scene in "Torment." In broadcloth, brass buttons jaunty cap he made a bell-ho to carry the luggage of a prin which is just what he did.

Beal emulated the example his chief, for in "The Brass tle," made last spring, Mr. T neur dropped his megaphone step in front of the camera as English merchant when an a who was ill failed to report the one brief scene in which was to appear.

Mr. Beal filled in yesterday a similar emergency.

'Twas a Farm Xmas For This Celebr

Anna Q. Nilsson spent Ch mas upon her new farm. Yes, know she is a farmerette, having purchased an acreage fifteen miles out of Hollywood course, it makes a rather long to her work upon "Flowing G the Richard Walton Tully pro tion upon which she is enga but Anna is rather a stren young lady, and doesn't mind.

Comes of Renowned Theatrical Folk

Joan Standing, who plays an important comedy part in Reginald Barker's new Louis B. Mayer-Metro offering, "Cape Cod Folks," is a member of one of the most famous theatrical families in history. A daughter of the late Herbert Standing, a noted stage figure for over two score years, she has six brothers on the stage, and all of them of stellar prominence.

Friendly Faces for Cowan-Higgin Walls

One of the strongest traditions of the motion picture world is that the scenario writer is the universal "goat." Actor, producer and director—all usually unite to blame the luckless writer for anything and everything. Such, however, is not the experience of Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin, well-known scenario team. Their story "Fashion Row," starring Mae Murray, brought them a photograph with the following inscription: "To my dear friends who wrote 'Fashion Row,' for which I am very grateful. Fondly, Mae Murray." They have just finished the script for Bill Hart's "A Lighter of Flames;" this star thanked them also for the adaptation, which he called "great stuff."

In fact, the walls of the Cowan-Higgin office are lined with a veritable photograph gallery of the leading lights in filmdom; and all the pictures carry messages of warm friendship. Among those represented are such well-known actors as Wallace Reid, Richard Bennett, Elliot Dexter, William H. Crane, Monte Blue, Bryant Washburn, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Kosloff—such scintillating female stars as Mary Pickford, Nazimova, Gloria Swanson, Clara Kimball Young, Wanda Hawley, Carmel Myers, and Jane Cowl—and such leading directors as Ernst Lubitsch, Dimitri Buchowetzski, Cecil B. de Mille, his brother, William, Sam Wood and Syd Franklin.

Tully Gives Filmdom Real Chill

All Hollywood experienced a thrill yesterday, when it was thought for a time the United Studios were ablaze. Flames were leaping heavenward and smoke in denseblack clouds hovered over the lot. Inhabitants of movieland and tourists from Iowa madly rushed toward the scene of the holocaust, only to discover that Richard Walton Tully was only staging some of the thrilling fire scenes for "Flowing Gold," Rex Beach's great tale of the oil fields, a forthcoming First National picture.

The completed picturization of this sequence can scarcely be more thrilling than was the actual taking. Several players escaped serious injury, and startling events not on the schedule transpired. And the four grinding cameras caught it all!

The bird that invented that "makes your mouth water" stuff ought to take a good look at this one! For here we see none less than the distinguished cinema artists Evelyn Adamson, Lew Cody and Naldo Morelli indulging in a couple mouthfuls of real, old-time spaghetti. To insure getting the proper "atmosphere" Morelli was called upon to prepare the delicacy, being initiated in the secrets of the spaghetti art, and the resultant stampede upon the piece-de-resistance by Mr. Cody and Miss Adamson brought out fully the completeness of the Morelli cooking talent. As Morelli said, "I guess I wasn't the only Italian at that table insofar as the spaghetti appetite was concerned." This is a scene from the forth-coming William B. Brush production "The Great Struggle" which Bertram Bracken is directing at the Hollywood Studios with a notable cast. Oui, oui, cherchez la spaghet!

FILM ACTOR SAYS PERSONALITY IS MORE INDUCIVE TO SCREEN SUCCESS THAN ACTING

Does acting ability or personality contribute most to the success and popularity of a screen player? This pertinent question was raised recently at a studio discussion by Bertram Grassby, well known actor now playing one of the principal roles in the Fox production "The Shadow of the East" who gave it as his opinion that of the two factors, personality is more important to the player, at least in so far as his box office value is concerned.

"Acting ability, while in itself something to be strived for by every intelligent actor or actress, will never get a player into the front rank of favorites," says Mr. Grassby. "While the public appreciates fine acting to a certain degree, its heart goes out more fully to the actor or actress of charming personal mannerisms and quaint individuality. This is not peculiar to the photoplay for a search of the records of both the spoken and silent drama reveals that the player of personality has ever been more popular and highly paid than the player who relied solely upon his acting ability.

"The success of virtually every prominent actor and actress on the screen today who is drawing a large salary because of the esteem with which he or she is regarded by the public, can be attributed more to their distinctive personalities than to any marked histronic superiority. Some of the present popular stars are relying almost exclusively upon their personal attractiveness, and boast little, if any, dramatic talent. On the other hand, there are any number of fine actors and actresses in the films who are meeting with only moderate success, and consequently receiving comparatively small salaries, because of the fact that they have colorless and unmagnetic personalities. This state of affairs may be deplored by many who go to the theatre in search of fine acting, but the bulk of theatergoers are quite satisfied with it, and will no doubt continue to be.

"The ideal to be striven for by every player is, of course, a combination of both acting ability and personality. This, however, is a rare achievement, and when we find the two qualities combined in one actor or actress, a John Barrymore, Mary Pickford, Lillian Gish, or Richard Barthlemess is the result."

Cameraman Speaks For Harry Wilson, etc

Glen Mac Williams, cameraman on "Captain January," starring Baby Peggy for Principal Pictures, says Robert Sherwood forgot an important phrase in the Movie Vocabulary of his book, "The Best Moving Pictures of 1922-1923."

"Credit department," is the expression, meaning, according to MacWilliams, the publicity office, which he says is the only place you can get any credit.

Here's a good one: A Venice fortune teller told Anna Q. Nilsson he could visualize her as signing some sort of contract soon.

Anna Q., who is at present playing the role of "Allegheny Briskow" in Richard Walton Tully's all-star production of "Flowing Gold," almost has a chronic case of writer's cramp from her contractual propensities. She's never without 'em!

. . . the fortunate young- the six-year-old son of George Crane of Hollywood, is a elous raconteur of original es. Out of his own fertile imagination and without any prep- aration, he weaves the most en- chanting tales. He first displayed this gift when but two years of age.

"Since then he has delighted large audiences at school, and charitable entertainments, with his art. His story-telling was a reg- ular weekly feature of the public library in Tampa, Florida, where his family formerly lived.

"Not only is this unusual prod- igy extraordinarily accomplished, but he is also extraordinarily beau- tiful. He has golden hair, sap- phire eyes and a captivating smile. He is physically perfect, his bod- ily measurements harmonizing thoroughly . . ."

Now the talent of this boy is to be brought to the screen. One of the independent producers in the Hollywood field, quick to grasp the possibilities of the contest winner, signed him for a photoplay deal- ing with a Fairyland theme. George is to portray the role of the Prince, (for every fairy story, as you know, is built around some Prince Charming), as the blind girl, played by Doris Eileen Whit- mer, imagines him to be. He ought to be a veritable revelation in such a role and certainly no better op- portunity could be afforded to bring out the nigh-ethereal quali- ties possessed by him. There is something fragile in his make-up that at times leads one to believe he was not fitted for such a mun- dane existence as we lead in this modern hey-day of civilization and hard-boiled business. He seems to belong to the age of Mer- rie Old England when knights rode forth to battle for fair ladies and prove their mettle on the tournament grounds in mighty jousting. Yet this impression is as quickly done away with when some American-boy expression comes forth from him with bom- bardment-like directness, and we as quickly relegate him to the ranks of today's kids. George Ezra Crane, Jr., has great fasci- nation for everyone with whom he comes in contact and therefore it is not hard to prophecy that he will attain all due recognition from cinema enthusiasts if he is af- forded the proper guidance in es- tablishing his own distinctive per- sonality before the camera. May he progress rapidly and in secur- ity. He brings a welcome change to the order of things a la cinema- kids.

GOLDWYN BREAKS HORNET'S NEST; ACTORS DECLAIM "THIRTY-THREE"

Samuel Goldwyn has stirred up a hornet's nest with his statement in the Los Angeles press that there are only thirty-three good actors in Hollywood.

Prominent players located here registered indignant protest last week and took issue with the mov- ie magnate who is now arranging to establish producing headquar- ters in Los Angeles.

"I respect Mr. Goldwyn as one of the most powerful factors in motion pictures today but I cannot conceive on what basis he estab- lishes his statement that there are only thirty-three good actors in Hollywood," said Conway Tearle, popular leading man, at the Unit- ed Studios last week.

"Thousands of actors find work in Hollywood studios. Hundreds of them are graduates from the spoken drama, men who estab- lished reputations as actors before they entered the silent drama. If Mr. Goldwyn is right then many producers are wrong for they are engaging daily, hundreds of men who they consider good actors.

"There can only be one way in which the merits of an actor can be judged and that is by his popu- larity with the public. Hundreds of actors in Hollywood are draw- ing millions of people to the thea- ters throughout the world. While all great screen favorites are not great actors yet it is certainly safe to say that ninety per cent of the popular players who work in Hol- lywood are considered good actors by the public and that is really what counts."

"If there are only thirty-three good actors in Hollywood then it is about time that hundreds of men who are making their living as actors, find other employment and make room for new talent," said Pat O'Malley, leading man for Laurette Taylor at the Metro studio. "However, I disagree with the contention that there are only this limited number of capable actors in Los Angeles. Like in every other calling the capabilities of actors are measured by degree. I cannot agree with the belief that there are only thirty-three good actors appearing in pictures—and there are hundreds of them—do so because they are capable actors. I am confident that from four to six hundred could be named and that any committee of critics would de- clare them artists of the first wa- ter."

"I believe that if the question were put to the public the num- ber of good actors in Los Angeles would run four times the number prescribed by Mr. Goldwyn," said Lloyd Hughes, leading man for Mary Pickford, Colleen Moore and other celebrities. " Ishould be interested in reading a list of Mr. Goldwyn's thirty-three and then submitting that list to the public for its opinion. Just what com- prises good acting is no easy mat- ter to decide. What one person considers great another considers poor. I believe there are as many good actors in pictures as there are on the stage, if not more."

"Gang" Work Looks Bad for Ringlings

Hal Roach's "Gang" is having a circus these days—a real wild west show. They are the show people. About fifty extra children appear as the audience. The pic- ture is being made at the Hal Roach ranch and the goat, the bear, Bill, the "Gang" dog, an old white horse that Stan Laurel bought for fifteen dollars, a but- ting ram, ducks, geese and mon- keys help make up the "animal" part of the circus. In the absence of Bob McGowan, Mark Gold- aine is directing.

Esther Is Another Mayflowerite

Esther Ralston, formerly a fea- tured player in Universal pictures and who recently completed her work with Lubitsch in "The Mar- riage Circle," is a bona-fide de- scendant of Governor William Bradford of the first Pilgrim Col- ony. Naturally, therefore, her family tree brings her line back directly to the hardy band of pio- neers who crossed the Atlantic in the Mayflower.

The actors in the various branches of the theatrical profes- sion and the motion-picture field, have in their ranks quite a num- ber of persons who trace a similar descent. At the suggestion of a small group now in California, Miss Ralston is devoting her lei- sure time to the organization of what is tentatively called the "A. D. M.: Actors Descendants from the Mayflower." It is planned to model this new group after the D. A. R.

"Ah, Buy Gum!" Quoth Wrigley

When a man has spent a life time in mastering not only a dif- ficult but graceful art of chewing gum it is only natural that he should wish to pass it along as in his latest Hal Roach comedy "Warehouse Players" in which he enacts the role of an accomplished motion picture director, he has the whole company from the king to the jester doing their jaw calis- thenics in typical Rogers style. It's going to be a great year for the gum manufacturers.

Lures for Tears

One word starts Estelle Taylor to crying.

"Julia," murmurs the director in her ear.

Her mouth droops, her eyes half close. Slowly tears begin to fall. Soon they are cascading down her cheeks —and the camera grinds.

From the time she was a child of five, just starting to school until high school days Miss Taylor and Julia Cunningham were pals—closer than sisters. They walked to school together. They sat across from each other in their classrooms. They studied together; played together; spent all of their time together.

They even had the measles and whooping cough together. And stayed at each other's home when they were sick and had the same nurse.

They planned to go on the stage together. They rehearsed together. They were to have gone to dramatic school together.

Then Julia died.

"Thoughts of her wring my heart," Miss Taylor told the reporter. "When the director speaks her name my thoughts go back to the plans we made for a life together and of-of-of what happened—and I just cry."

Carmel Myers is a creature of exotic personality as well as of bizarre beauty and hence it is not surprising that odors touch her emotions more closely than does music. A drop of fragrant new-mown hay on the corner of her handkerchief makes a lightsome, merry-hearted country girl of her, a strong rose scent transforms her into a blustering Bowery maid.

And "Le Houre Bleu," with its ethereal sweetness reminiscent of a departed lover, puts her first into pensive then into sad mood. Soon her eyes glisten. Then the tears come.

Blanche Sweet has not lived a life of perpetual joy, peace and content. Yet no music can arouse personal memories of sufficient poignancy to bring tears.

It takes the sorrows, the pitiful, heart-breaking lot of others to wring water from her eyes. "There's a Long, Long Trail A-Winding" brings to her all the sadness that hung over the hearts of millions of mothers during the trying war-time days.

"It was a marching song in 1918," she explains. "And to me marching men means men going to slaughter. It was a camp song, a trench song, that mingled with the whine of shell and airplane. Hundreds died with its words on their lips. Its simple tune brings to my heart a hurt that nothing can erase."

When Rupert Hughes, who has directed Helene Chadwick in most of her recent Goldwyn pictures, wants the tears to run from her big sorrowful eyes he quietly asks the orchestra leader (there are orchestras on all motion picture sets, you know) to play, slowly and softly, "Love's Old Sweet Song." The second or third bar brings the flood. It has never failed.

It was at the suggestion of Miss Chadwick's mother, Mrs. Laura Chadwick, that he first tried that particular piece of music. She happened to be on the set one day several years ago when tears were demanded of her daughter.

"Ever since she was sixteen that song has made her sad," she said. "She never has told me why. She just cried the harder when I asked her. It used to send her to bed with hysterical sobbings. Now, after seven years, it brings a more quiet, thoughtful, sad mood."

It is at sixteen or thereabouts that a girl generally has her first love affair.

INCORPORATE FOR "DINKY" DEAN

Four-year-old Dinky Dean, protege of Charles Chaplin, and star of the Selznick film, "A Prince of a King," is to head his own production company.

Articles of incorporation of the Dinky Dean Productions, Inc., have been filed with the secretary of state at Sacramento and the new producing company expects to start activities within the ensuing month. The organization is capitalized at $750,000 and the production schedule calls for four pictures annually covering a period of four years.

Several of these will be big special productions and the remainder five-reel features in which Dinky will be supported by the best available talent that can be procured in Filmdom.

Barker Film Is Down-to-Earth

Notwithstanding the fact that "Cape Cod Folks," Reginald Barker's new Louis B. Mayer-Metro offering, fairly abounds in thrills and unusual spectacular scenes, romance furnishes the real story thread of this all-star special.

The picture tells of the triumph of Captain Joe Cradlebow, an adventurous young skipper in his suit for Emily Swift, the rather snobbish daughter of Jonathan Swift, tyrannic ruler of the fishing industry, and also of the clandestine love affair carried on by Swift's college-bred son and Becky Keeler, the plain little daughter of an old ship captain. A quaint old New England village is the setting for the story and scenes of swordfishing, furious storms at sea, humorous episodes reflecting the life of the fisherfolk, and the daring rescue of a ship's crew during a hurricane furnish a few of the highlights in the action.

Von Eltz Huzzas For New Year

Theodor von Eltz, is among the actors who sees a big year in 1924 for the motion picture industry.

"There will be better pictures of necessity," says Mr. von Eltz. "The public will no longer stand for the hastily thrown together program pictures where so much money and time are given to rush it through. A hurry-up picture cannot be a good one. An actor who is put on a time budget will not give in exchange, for he cannot, a worth while characterization. No longer is a picture merely a hasty pudding. It must be a living thing, so time and thought are essentials. Stories must be worth while. I believe there is plenty of material in many of the standard books, while the industry has plenty of capable writers who can furnish originals. And I could name more than thirty-three good actors!"

George Will Jump Into Drama

George O'Hara is all primed for dramatic productions, for since finishing "Fighting Blood," the young star is looming up as one of the big bets of the coming year. Not so long ago, a leading Los Angeles critic emphasized O'Hara's qualities of fine romanticism combined with a virility that make him a formidable competitor for those actors holding forth in the matinee idol class. O'Hara, with his superior comedy training —he was three years with Mack Sennett and his spacing and timing are highly approved by the veterans of the game—and all the drama that came his way in "Fighting Blood" is ready for the biggest things. Romantic roles if they carry with them plenty of characterization appeal to O'Hara, who in making a selection of the different offers that have come his way will decide for the one that gives him the greatest opportunity to act.

U. P. D. SIGNS SEAFARING MAID

Joan Lowell, a land-lubber of only two short years and with a record of seventeen years as a sailor back of her, has landed the first long-term starring contract with the newly organized United Producers and Distributors. She owes this distinction to the fact that her histronic work in the important role of Madge in the Associated Authors production of "Loving Lies" is so impressive that it was decided to feature her strongly in the advertising for this picture. She already had received her primary education in the cinema art at the Goldwyn studios, where she attracted the attention of such celebrities as Rupert Hughes. Upon seeing a preview of "Loving Lies," W. F. Wood, vice president and general manager of the U. P. D., lost no time in getting the young woman to affix her signature to a contract which calls for her exclusive professional services for a period of three years.

Miss Lowell was born aboard the ship her father commanded and with which he cruised in and out of every port touching the Pacific and Indian oceans for many years. Her mother died in her infancy and she was reared mostly by an old souwester, a pig-tailed sailor with a tatooed arm, whom her father appointed as her nurse. A tarpaulin served as her cradle and goat's milk was her initial bill-o'-fare. Up until two years ago when her father retired from the copra trade in which he was a pioneer and settled in San Francisco, she never had known a woman. Now at the age of nineteen, she is catching up on her schooling, unavoidably neglected during her sea-faring career due to the fact that she had to take her place as "one of the hands," earning a promotion to the position as second mate.

Mr. Wood predicts that she will become one of the sensations of the screen, not alone because she is an unusual "new face," but because of her ability as an interpreter of emotional dramatic roles. Besides, she is said to be a beauty of an extraordinary type, her complexion being of a coppery bronze while her eyes are dark brown and her hair is a chestnut brown.

East Works With West In Hollywood

East is East and West is West and ne'er the twain shall meet!

This old adage was cast to the four winds this week at the studio of Principal Pictures Corporation in Hollywood, when Harry T. Morey, one of the best known character men of the screen, arrived in Hollywood and greeted Hobart Bosworth, a member of the cast of Baby Peggy's feature picture, "Captain January," now in production.

Morey has been in pictures since their very beginning. He was starred and has played feature roles in dozens of popular films. But with all his years before the clicking cameras, he has never before taken part in a film made in Hollywood.

Hobart Bosworth is often called the Dean of the Silent Drama. He also has been in filmdom since its inception, and strange to say, Bosworth has never made a picture out of California.

Now Morey and Bosworth are appearing together with Baby Peggy and between scenes, one may often see the two popular actors in the "side lines" telling each other of interesting episodes in their careers—one in the East, the other in the West.

The "Somewhere in Missouri" company of the Hal Roach studios has gone to Chatsworth where Roy Clements, co-directing with Hal Roach, will shoot the final scenes for that comedy-drama.

Graf Will Lead Scribes to 'Frisco

Max Graf, supervising director and his brother Louis, president of the Graf Productions who have produced most of their pictures at San Mateo, are both working for the success of the Wampas ball which will be held in San Francisco, their birthplace. Max Graf will be the special delegate to leave Hollywood on the night of Jan. 17th to escort the hosts and baby stars as an envoy de luxe to San Francisco. As is quite natural, Max Graf is always a booster for San Francisco and is optimistic about its future. Likewise since he spends so much time in Hollywood, he is also one of its best boosters. The competition between the two is only friendly and good for both, he insists.

TOURNEUR IS ASSEMBLING "TORMENT"

Maurice Tourneur is placing the finishing touches to "Torment," his newest M. C. Levee production for Associated First National release.

Scenes photographed in Japan especially for the film, have just been received at the United Studios and conclude the final "shots" for the picturization. The work of editing under Mr. Tourneur's supervision will be completed within the next week when the production will be shipped to First National in New York for early release.

"Torment" is considered the most sensational of all Tourneur melodramas. The Japanese earthquake and the Russian Crown jewels figure prominently in the story and afford picturesque plot material that is said to keep the photoplay replete with high lights of action.

Practically half of the production is staged in the bank vaults in which all the characters are imprisoned following the first shock of the Japanese earthquake. Thus, within the confines of a limited space not much larger than that afforded the theatrical producer in the presentation of stage plays, Tourneur is said to have concentrated the most thrilling situations of his story.

ANDERSON DISTRIBUTES HARRIS CLASSIC

The first release of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation through Anderson Pictures is "After the Ball," a film version by Charles K. Harris of his famous song of a generation ago.

Mr. Harris, who is one of the most successful song-writers of the day, prepared his own story, from which James Colwell made the scenario. Dallas Fitzgerald directed the picture, and the cast includes Gaston Glass, Miriam Cooper, Edna Murphy and Robert Frazer.

"After the Ball" was produced by the Renco Film Company of Los Angeles, which, under the management of the late Harry J. Reynolds, will be remembered as sponsor for a number of successful productions extending over the past three years.

It is doubtful if any popular song of the past quarter-century ever enjoyed the nation-wide vogue of "After the Ball." To date more than 8,000,000 copies of this popular ballade have been sold in this country alone. Its foreign distribution has been equally as successful.

J. Aldrich Libbey, "The sweet singer of vaudeville" was first to realize the depth of pathos in the Harris song, and for many years it formed the backbone of his repertoire. Since his first rendition of "After the Ball," it has been sung many times over in virtually every vaudeville house and music hall in the English-speaking world.

Its melody may well be said to be familiar not alone to the present generation, but there is hardly a member of the younger generation who has not waltzed to its fascinating measures.

"In our first release for the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation," said Carl Anderson in making the announcement, "we have sought to keep our promise of giving the exhibitor exploitable values in every picture that goes out under our banner. 'After the Ball 'is a melody thoroughly familiar to millions of people all over the world. Its appeal is one o fdeep pathos and intensely human. Mr. Harris in developing his story, has overlooked none of the qualities htat go to make for solid entertainment, and we all feel that in 'After the Ball' we have a genuine showman's picture."

Might Have Bolts and Latche

Josephine Crowell, of the Richard Walton Tully company, no engaged in the making of Re Beach's "Flowing Gold" for Fir National, is considering the circ lation of a petition to the crin commission, enlisting their aid forcing modistes to simplify t methods of entry into their cre tions. She suffered a trying e perience yesterday with a gow designed by Mme. Schlaud a herself. She was asked by Josep De Grasse, the director, to chan her costume. She hurried to h dressing room and proceeded get into the gown in question, b became gloriously entangled in t numerous straps, trimmings, et and was unable to extricate he self. Time passed. The compa waited. At last, after much s fering amidst groans and ne strangulation, a maid found M Crowell crouched upon the flo half in, half out of the marvelo creation.

There is a standing offer complimentary tickets to "Flowi Gold" to anyone who can tell h Miss Crowell manages to get i the dress.

Reveals Limits of Stage and Scre

The student of dramatic c struction can find much that interesting whenever he sees screen adaptation of a stage pl because a comparison will rev the limitations of the two media of expression. Albert Keny well-known scenario writer, poi this out in explaining the proc of translating a dramatic pi from the footlights to the fil as he is doing at the present ti with "The Monster" Crane W bur's stage success which will s go into production by Rob West.

As in the case of "Bavu," Universal picture which Al. K yon also adapted, the process scenarization of "The Monst includes the addition of what finally be about three reels of finished picture in order to p the characters and motivate action. With the background tablished in the spectators' m in the first half of the film, screen play proceeds much as stage play, with minor differe in technique.

Scenarist Has Home On Hotel Ro

Charles Kenyon, the emi playwright and scenario wr works in what is undoubtedly of the most unique studios in orful Hollywood. He occupi suite of rooms on the roof of lywood's most famous hotel. F the open windows he sees the of the entire town, on this sid the hills which shelter Los A les.

This is the only roof studi Hollywood; although there is other well-known studio of nature in New York.

The Spirit of "Camera!"

By FRED W. FOX

I am "Camera!".

I am the Voice and the Echo of Filmdom. I am a part of motion picture tradition. I came to you in years long past to fulfill my duty as a truthful chronicler and a faithful counselor and today I am more avid and enthusiastic than ever before to perfect myself. I am deeply rooted in the premier achievements of the shadow stage, yet I scan the road ahead and mine eyes seek the distant heights. While I pursue the elusive will-o'-the-wisp I maintain my earthly balance with dignity and composure.

I am Comedy and Drama, the incarnation of sorrow and joy. To you I bring Life in the high and low places of the world. I am the representative of the greatest artistic and educational medium in existence today. I am the poet and the dreamer . . . and the man entwined in the drab meshes of Things. I am the light on the long dark road. I am the sunshine in the Valley.

I am the Thought and the Meditation, the Plans and the Activity of the mentors and geniuses of the cinema. I make respectful and uncolored delivery of a myriad messages, and I listen to those who know whereof they speak that I, too, may gain wisdom. I speak of the rosy hopes and acco lishments of the industry of celluloid romance

I embody Fraternity and Sincerity, good lowship and aid for my brethren. I abhor and conceit. I am the sworn enemy of the lee and parasites preying upon the wealth and h of Filmdom. I do not stoop to endorse false cedure and deceit for monetary remuneration. litical hirelings are an anathema to me. I an solved to advance the highest ideals of litera and journalism as established by the true ma of the Pen and Press.

I am Tolerance and Faith. I am not hast condemn my unfortunate kin. I am tolerant their sometime-wayward actions for I know cloak genuiness and big-heartedness. I have g faith in mankind and I believe in its innate pu and worth. I prefer to extend the helping h I do not strike a man when he is vanquishe wounded by life's buffetings.

I am the Idealist with a Definite Purpose to portray my role well and stand before the C unabashed.

I am "Camera!".

EWER CHARACTERS, SAYS LEVEE

how me a scenario with six or ei t characters and, all other th gs equal, I'll show you the st y that will soon find a mar- ke his is the statement of M. C. Le e, producer of Maurice Tour- ne Productions for First Na- ti al and president of the Unit- ed Studios.

One of the chief reasons that M Tourneur and I selected the st y of 'Torment' was the fact th the play had only seven char- acters.

f scenario writers and those w aspire to writing for the sc en would concentrate on the ti tion of plots with six or eight ch acters, I believe the motion pi ure would show new signs of ra d progress.

A careful survey among ex- tors and the public indicates th one of the main faults with nt productions was evidenced by the fact that they had too many ch acters in the story. Sameness of characters in stories should also be eliminated. Where two char- acters look and act alike there im- mediately arises confusion in the minds of the audience.

I believe that most scenario writers who avoid these two items in the creation of plot material, will find a ready market for their product among producers.

As soon as the audience be- comes confused in following the story the entertainment value of the picture immediately drops. Few characters and each character as widely different as possible from the other. This in my opinion, as a producer in constant search of story material, is a rule that if followed, particularly at this time, would prove highly beneficial to both the author and the producer."

Bert Meets Bride In Proper Mufti

A heartless joke was attempted on Bert Woodruff, character actor, by the cast and others on the "Flowing Gold" stage, where Richard Walton Tully is filming the Rex Beach novel, yesterday. Woodruff was nearly forced to meet the train carrying his bride-to-be into Los Angeles, in his eccentric costume worn on the set.

Woodruff, representing Pa Briskow in the story, is a poor old Texas farmer who has struck oil all over his place and invests immediately in the wildest clothes imaginable. He was wearing this screaming outfit that day and George Reehm, the assisting director, would not dismiss him until almost train time, in the hope that he would be forced to wear his makeup to the depot.

Bert fooled them, however, did a lightning change and arrived at the station in ample time to worry a few moments for fear the lady had missed her train.

They were married that evening.

Elements Rage At United Studios

Yesterday another thrilling sequence of "Flowing Gold" was staged on the studio lot by the Richard Walton Tully company—a combination of fire, storm and flood. The flames leaping high in the air, the dense smoke, the artificial rain, the wind machine and lightning flashes attracted the curious for miles around.

Some, bolder than the rest, climbed the studio fence and watched the scenes from this vantage point.

"Hey! called one of these unbidden guests, to Ray Coffin, Tully's publicity man, "ask that guy if he'll move over a bit so we can see."

But the press agent did not deliver the request. The gentleman who was comfortably seated on a camera parallel happened to be Richard Walton Tully, himself, who was really entitled to a reserve seat.

Wood Speaks of Films' Two Faults

In this era of great vogue for motion pictures, it is interesting to note, despite the fact that most of the outstanding screen triumphs have been original stories enacted by artists almost totally unknown to the public previously, most every producer in the field makes a specialty of filming only best-selling books and successful or unsuccessful stage plays with the casts so cramed with stars that they fall over one another in their mad scramble to keep within camera range. "The Birth of a Nation" and "The Miracle Man," the first production of "The Cheat" and "Intollerance" are only a few of the more notable examples of how the story or the production has been "the thing" irrespective of its prior history and also irrespective of who's who in the cast of players. Perhaps the two biggest follies of the photoplay art today are: the alleged exploitation value of an adaptation and the attractiveness of an all-star cast. All the foregoing is according to the opinions of W. F. Wood, vice president and general manager of the United Producers and Distributors, which new company proposes to do things differently from the very inception of its career.

Small Cast for Tourneur

Maurice Tourneur's newest M. C. Levee production for First National Pictures, "Torment," offers a unique story, at least as far as this director is concerned, in that the entire cast consists of but seven players.

This marks the smallest cast ever directed by Tourneur who in the past has seldom produced films with less than twenty leading roles.

My Dear Doc:—

Sorry not to find you in, but might have known you would be terribly busy this week with the new sheet.

Daddy and I want to wish you much success in the New Year and hope you will get over to see us real soon at the Hollywood Studios.

With love,

PRISCILLA.

Wampas Wails

Warning to press agents who photograph their stars in the act of reading the New "Camera!"—you pay for the cut.

Ray Leek and his father-in-law entertained a number of the Wampas boys at a party given last Thursday night in the discarding room of the Leek mansion.

Among those who enjoyed the hospitality of the Leek table were: W. Greene, Al Wilkie, H. Beall and L. Weingarten.

The color scheme of the table covering was green. The host and his father-in-law were blue. The guests were tickled pink.

Harry Brand denies that he has sworn to an affidavit to the effect that the publicity on the Wampas ball started two weeks ago, Sam Cohn and H. Beall to the contrary notwithstanding, or what have you?

Mike Boylan will be spared the pain of writing stories about himself in the future. Mike has engaged Tom Reed, protege of J. Jackson, to write about Boylan — provided First National is mentioned somewhere in the story.

Little Arch Reeve says New York is a great institution and is here to stay. While in Manhattan, Arch purchased an asbestos suit of armor so that no fires could be built under him.

The Wampas headquarters are located at the United Studios where M. C. Levee is President and Maurice Tourneur is producing pictures for First National and Conway Tearle is acting in "Lillies of the Field" and Lloyd Hughes is playing in "Welcome Stranger" and—but those are my only clients working here.

Special train for Wampas Ball in San Francisco, leave Los Angeles on January 18th and brings you back Monday morning, the 20th. Howard Strickling at Metro Studio in charge of transportation and reservations.

In the language of Jeff Lazarus, "Hurry! Hurry! Hurry! Reservations are going fast.

Any Wampi caught giving any printing to any printer anywhere, excepting Tony Martin, will be compelled to listen to Arch Reeve's' experiences in New York.

Jack Hill intends to nominate Art Wentzel as the chairmanship of the Committee on Boxes at the forthcoming ball. Art always takes good care of everything. Big hearted Art will turn over a star's' box to a newspaperman any day.

The Return to Characters

By FANCHON ROYER

He was very tall and distinguished in the costume and neat Van dyke that were habiliments of the fourth Duke of Norfolk and we found difficulty in separating the man from the characterization as we interviewed Howard Gaye, on a Pickford set where "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" was being completed. He was telling us that the Duke of Norfolk had been a relative of his own ancestors, the Howards, and we could well believe it. The historical nobleman before us was more than an illusion!

"What an exceptional role in which to return to the American screen, Mr. Gaye."

"Yes, is'nt it? Fortunate for me, I am sure that I was able to arrive in time for it." Mr. Howard Gaye, so well-known to our picture fans a few seasons back, has recently returned from London, where he went two years ago to fill several engagements in the English studios. We had heard of his great success in the featured role of Gaumont's historical production, "Byron," but foreign films are so rarely seen, that we had, otherwise, almost lost sight of this erstwhile Griffith favorite. We mentioned the fact that we recalled very clearly his vivid protrayals in the "Birth of a Nation," and "Intolerance," when suggested another question

"You've gone in for historical characters quite widely, have'nt yo u, Mr. Gaye?"

"Rather, I branched from leads and suave roles into this sort of thing with the photoplay you have just named. Robert E. Lee was the one and the Christ in the other brought that field before me in a fascinating way. Since then there have been others—from King Haakon to an Egyptian Pharaoh. These roles demand research that adds invaluably to anyone's education In the future, I hope to be provided with many such."

We chatted along, for a time then, and we learned more of this artist's career. Commencing with the Ben Greet Players in London, it first struck into the American films with Kalem in 1913. When that outfit disbanded, Mr. Gaye immediately joined Griffith playing in all the units of the old Fine Arts company. As there were sometimes twenty of these, life was scarcely inactive

"After that came a very great expansion for me," continued Mr. Gaye. We thought we detected a whimsical note in his careful enunciation. "I was contracted to direct a series of ten-reel features by Mena Films. The first of these, 'Restitution' was just completed when the war broke out. Perhaps you recall the production, something of a spectacle including pre-historic, Babylonian, French and other episodes. Naturally there was much satisfaction to me in the enthusiastic reception which it was given. But, there was the war, you know. And I had been feeling it for several years, as it was. I enlisted and the Mena series was not continued."

Before we had time to consider the significance of this sacrifice, the actor was through the war, with a short gesture, and telling us of his subsequent work. With his return from the front, there had been leads with May Allison and Katherine MacDonald, —and always his characterizations. He filled the positions of technical advisor on several European productions and then he returned for a space, to his native land.

A widely read, admirably poised figure, there is an ineffable subtlety in his manner, his philosophy and his work. One feels that where other players might guess at dramatic effects, Howard Gaye knows such values to their fractional parts, and utilizes them accordingly. The screen can very profitably absorb many such personalities.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

The remains of Frank Hayes, famous comedian, were brought to San Francsico for burial Monday morning, at Cypress Lawn Cemetery. Funeral services attended by many of the greatest directors and players of the cinema world, having been held at his late residence in Los Angeles on Sunday, there were only brief words of comfort and prayer spoken at the grave. Mr. Hayes was not only born and raised in San Francisco, but was a member of one of its oldest families. So it is an odd chance that his last picture and the greatest part of his whole career, should have been in "Greed," which was almost all filmed here, and to the preview of which he had looked forward with so much interest, only to die too soon to see its first showing.

Chester Conklin, who has just finished work in "The Galloping Fish" came to town last Saturday for a few days stay, to talk over an offer from one of the local production organizations for his appearance in a series of comedies.

The Rellimeo Films of this city and Hollywood will begin production on their next picture the middle of January. It will be "The Bowery Bishop" from a story by Dr. Alexander Irvine, and Colin Cambell who will direct, is now hard at work on the continuity. Gordon Michie, business manager of the organization with his wife Grace Sanderson Michie, head of the scenario department, are now in New York, but will return to California within the next week or two.

Herman Lubfin, and Ernest Traxler, heads of the newly organized Cinema Arts and Crafts, will leave for the South within a few days on business. They expect to be in shape to begin production with at least two of their proposed six units, early in the new year.

Great consternation reigned at the Warfield Theatre last Tuesday when it was discovered that Irish, the wonder dog, who was making personal appearance with the showing of the latest Graf picture "Half-a-Dollar Bill" had disappeared. Rewards were offered when he failed to return the next day, and he was at last discovered in Daly City in the house of a man who had stolen him, and safely returned to his distracted master. The unusual work of Irish and Cameo, the two dog stars, add not a little to the success of "Half-a-Dollar Bill" which was so warmly received all last week at its first public showing.

Frank B. Marriott, head of the Marriott Productions, thinks that he has the greatest find of a long time in the film world, in littlePepita Riviera, who will play Little Lila Gee in their forthcoming production of the story of San Francisco's' Chinatown "Young China." Her discovery was an accident, as Mr. Marriott first saw her dancing in a pageant at the most fashionable hotel of Shanghai, China, where she was representing her native country Guatemala. Struck at once by her beauty, and her screen possibilities he arranged to have her brought to this country by her guardians, as she is only sixteen, where between her appearances before the camera she will complete her education. Forrest B. Creighton, head director for the organization, feels that little Pepita is not only a wonderful screen type, but that she has that divine fire and acting ability s rarely combined with beauty.

Marie Cahill, famous both on the stage an screen, spent several days last week in Sa Francisco.

Dorothy Devore came to town the latt part of last week to appear at the Granad Theatre all this week in a special skit th has been written for her as part of Pa Ash's big concert. For this week marks t first showing on any screen of the late Christie comedy "Kiddie Katie" in whic charming Dorohty plays the lead.

Much attention is being attracted this we by the world's premier showing at the Wa field Theatre of "Black Oxen" made by t Frank Lloyd Productions from Gertru Atherton's' popular novel. The novel then of the story, Mr. Lloyd's fine direction, ar the beautiful work being done by Corin Griffith, Conway Tearle, Clara Bow ar other members of the cast combine to ma ti a picture that has called forth unstint praise from all who have seen it.

Nora Bayes has been held over as t headline attraction at the Orpheum Theat for a second week, where she is charmi large audiences by her varied songs, also t appearance of her small adopted son Pet who forms a good excuse for the singing "Dirty Hands" as only Nora could sing it.

The ticket sale for the Wampas Ball go briskly on, and much local interest is bei taken in the forthcoming big event. All t leading hotels already have long reservati lists for the week-end over January Nin teenth, and it looks as though Hollywo for a few days would be a deserted village.

Conway Tearle—debonair, sophisticated.

The four words suggest one another as naturally as Beau Brummel suggests "fop." To quote an Iowa miss who came from a Long Beach theater after seeing for the tenth time that week a film in which he appeared, "He wears a silk hat as naturally as if he slept in it."

But this easy-mannered man-of-the-world, who is reputed to draw the largest salary of any of picturedom's leading men, has had his downs as well as his ups. He speaks of them reluctantly, not because he is ashamed of them but because the details of his life appear to him to be of no interest to anyone else.

Of a long line of theatrical people—the Conway's have been noted actors for more than two hundred years—his early life was an easy one. Raised amid comfortable surroundings, with cultured people for his associates, his tastes were formed along lines of elegance rather than ruggedness.

But family reverses soon after he entered his teens changed, for a few years, the whole current of his daily habit and association. He needed money with which to buy food; needed it badly. He was of sturdy build; an athlete. There was no place, just then, for him on the stage.

An athletic trainer who had taught him at school gave him the opportunity to earn a few pounds—he was living in London then—and he took it.

That night there entered the lists of the London prize ring a new contender for the welterweight championship.

But that is history that Mr. Tearle d not wish revealed.

At any rate, he spent a whole season in t ring. A scarred lip, once cut clear throu

Treasurer F. Perrett is wondering why the loyal members who always attend at least one meeting a year, have suddenly discovered the fact that they are behind in their dues.

Too bad that ruling passed some months ago which will prevent a few of the boys from getting a hundred-dollar-trip for six bucks.

In connection with the Frolic and Ball, H. Brand, Chairman of the Publicity Committee said: "Norma Talmadge in 'Ashes of Vengeance' marks an epoch in the progress of the film art."
Take care of that, Jeff.

but now skillfully mended so that a scar shows only on close examination, and a nose that shows a faintest trace of once having been broken testify to that.

"It was terrible; I don't like to be reminded of the experience," Tearle says when, at infrequent intervals, he speaks of it. "I still box. I don't min the punishment. But it was a precarious living I got, amid surroundings that seem like squalor now. My manager got most all the money, I found afterwards. He only gave me enough to keep me alive.

"But," with a grin, he adds, "I was within one notch of the championship when I got a chance to go on the stage."

For many years Mr. Tearle played opposite the great actresses of the American and English stage—Ethel Barrymore, Grace George, Ellen Terry, Billie Burke and a half dozen others.

He has just finished "The Next Corner" for Lasky and is co-starring with Corinne Griffith in First National's "Lilies of the Field" at the United Studios now. His last picture to be shown in Los Angeles is "Ashes of Vengeance," with Norma Talmadge.

T... Skeleton in the closet of the industry i... so-called 'box office attraction!'

W... can lead the public to the box office, b... you can't fool it's palate with a punk pic...

Max Graf, supervising director of the Graf Productions, scattered a few myraids of brilliants in a recent conversation and the above are some of the samples.

"Money in America has always been noted for its vocal powers and in the silent drama of motion pictures the way it has talked has been remarkable," said Mr. Graf, as he chatted over a luncheon table the other day at the Hollywood Hotel. "Bigger and better pictures as the slogan of the producer having been regarded suspiciously for some time by the public is now only a humorous line in its opinion. When we are invited to a dinner does the host have to tell us how much each item of food costs? The public has been introduced so much to the price mark that it is no novelty. Without any discourtesy it certainly could reply: 'Excuse me, but I think we have met before!' The price mark more than anything else will keep pictures in their infancy.

"Sets that flaunt cost are bad business. I have been in the homes of many millionaires, but in no single instance were any so magnificent as those depicted on the screen. Money has talked too loudly, too vulgarly in the past. Now let art talk and let realism assert itself!"

Then Max Graf made an interesting admission.

"There is a silent partner of the bulk of producers, directors and even actors. No dragon of old ever threw a greater fear into a human than this same silent partner—the box office," he laughed. "When my brother Louis, who is the president of the Graf Productions and myself started out on our own, we agreed to snap our fingers at this kill-all art. Yes, that's what it is—a kill-all. We said if we have to genuflect to the box office, we'll just let the other fellow do it instead.

"Now we know the public. We know that it is human and we are making human pictures. But we have not insulted our public ever by thinking of our product in the terms of the box office. Since there is so much about box office attractions why not use this as the title of all pictures. Think of the drawing power in electric lights!

"There is a word that should be eliminated from motion pictures if we want to make 'em better—that same word—"drawing power.' We buy stories because we fondly imagine the author has 'drawing power.' We cast actors whom we believe have 'drawing power.' All we are doing is to keep the industry in swaddling clothes. When an actor with a name is cast in a role in which he is in no way suited, he is not a drawing power at all. The public sees him, goes away and spreads the report that so and so is miscast. There is resentment against the producer who performs this breach of confidence and a question raised in the mind of many people if after all the actor is so miscast but instead, slipping. Stocks of an actor drop every time his name instead of his adaptability to a part, is considered.

"Pictures will improve when producers look for real actors. The star is the actor who really can scintillate. There are a lot of actors who are of stellar calibre, but unfortunately for better pictures, producers are the last by whom the new are tried and again the last to lay the old aside. There are only a few fixed stars in the heavens, but the industry registers a different finding!

"Bit by bit the hokum is being banished. Some day there will be a grand holocaust for the price marks. Some day it will be wretched form to say how much a production cost. And some day into the obsolete phrases will pass—what has been for years the touchstone of thousands of pictures—'a box office attraction!' Some day exhibitors will advertise with pride (that may cause somewhere a tear)—'yes, we have no box office attractions! Just pictures that are artistic transcripts of life. Yes, the theaters are crowded!"

Whereupon, she was naturally incensed, and decided to fulfill an ambition which she had secretly cherished in her heart for many years. Even with the deduction of the three weeks' salary, she had enough money to get to Hollywood and just a little bit more—although it was very little. After the usual tramping around the studios and employment agencies, she finally succeeded in securing extra work here and there, and managed to keep the wolf a couple of inches away from her door at most times, although there were several occasions when she could distinctly hear him scratching at the portal.

Appropriately enough, her first real part was given her as "the extra girl" in "Mary of the Movies," one of those supposedly intimate revelations of the screen world which have been so popular of late. Her next chance came in a fairly small part as a young mother in "The Mail Man," starring Ralph Lewis. If you saw this picture, you will remember the attractive young matron who gave the mail carrier the oddest job of all the numerous chores which he was requested to do on his route. She got him to help her button her bungalow apron, and the screen gave us a flash of a provocatively dimpled and rounded shoulder. (My secretary says this is a good place to stop this paragraph, and like every well-trained "dictator," I invariably yield to her suggestions.) And now it seems that Rosemary Cooper has finally reached the winning line. She is playing the second lead in support of Mary Carr in this star's present production for the F. B. O. Studios.

The race is on.

Palmborg's Paragraphs

(Being one of a series of impressions of film folk and cinemaland anecdotes as written by a motion picture insurance man. By C. F. Palmborg, special analyst and Hollywood representative of the New York Life Insurance Company).

It was a great pleasure to add Jack Mul- al nd his lovely wife to my list of policy ho rs, but it was a greater pleasure to add the to my list of friends. Naturally every ma in business makes friends through his bus ess associations, but it has been my pri ege to meet some of the most inter- st g people in the public eye.

These two young folks enjoy every min- te f life. They are interesting, entertain- ng nd have exceedingly likeable personali- ies nd as a result they are very popular. J. Mulhall has a long term contract with Mr oseph Schenk and at the time we were ra acting our business he was playing with Ho rook Blinn and Miss Enid Bennett in "T Bad Man."

A great deal has been said and written abo the wild life of Hollywood and the p parties given by motion picture people. I doubt if anyone has had more real inside information about the lives of the picture peo e than I, for in the insurance business I mu st careful inspection and examination is sec red before a policy is granted. People wh have been dissipating cannot pass these tests. The fact is that a policy issued by the New York Life is a certain indication of good health and right living on the part of the one to whom it is issued. We find that most of the picture folks pass a number one examination; that these fine looking men, with splendid physiques, measure up to their good looks.

As for looks—Jack Mulhall is one of the finest looking men on the screen, and his wife could easily take the part of his leading lady, as far as beauty is concerned, for she is a very beautiful and charming woman.

However, she prefers the role of wife of Jack Mulhall and claims no honors, but I found her to be as keen a business woman as I have ever met.

Mr. Mulhall leaves his business affairs in the hands of his capable wife. Both of them took insurance but it was Mrs. Mulhall who went into the "why and wherefore" of the policies. She naalyzed the different forms and made sure that she knew all that was offered and then we figured out just what suited their particular needs. She has a keen mind that is quick to understand. I feel that the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Mulhall took insurance thhrough me is a good indication that we deliver the goods.

They were building a new house while I was dealing with them and I had occasion to hear some of her business transactions in regard to the new home. She was familiar with lighting fixture prices, was well versed as to interior decorations—she knew what she was entitled to and saw that she got it. I admired her business ability and her courage to demand that which was rightfully hers. They are living in this new home now and are ideally happy, for it has long been their ambition to have a place of their very own. It is located high up on one of the Hollywood hills, where they have a glorious view of the surrounding country.

Jack Mulhall will always be popular with the public for he is the kind of chap who takes you into his confidece. His audience feels they have always kown him. His easy manner, good looks and personal appeal have brought him a host of friends, who eagerly wait for his latest productions.

RELIGION
By Eric Mayne

Cicero tells us that—"Men were called 'Religious' because they considered carefully and, as it were, went over again in thought all that appertained to the worship of Gods."

Religion is the communion of a man with what he believes to be God.

Religion is the basis of our Individual and our National Life.

In all ages men have constructed Religions according to their mental and spiritual development.

The True Religion is the Religion that helps us to do our duty to ourselves, our fe ow-men, and our God.

he greatest Religion the world has ever known is the simplest.

The essence of the Religion that Jesus taught is simplicity.

Jesus reduced the Ten Commandments One: "Do unto others as you would th should do unto you."

Jesus warned men against paying t much attention to the letter of the Ten Co mandments, and too little to the Spirit of t One. A warning that is still worthy of r tice.

Jesus did not teach contempt for life a its enjoymets. He over threw the tables the Money Changers, but he presided the tables of the Wedding Feast and add to the joy of the gathering.

Religion should beautify the pleasures life and enhance their value.

Life is our greatest gift. Our Relig should teach us how to make the best of it.

"CAPTAIN JANUARY" NEARS FINIS; IS FIRST AMBITIOUS BABY PEGGY FILM

Baby Peggy's first feature, "Captain January," being produced by Principal Pictures Corporation, is fast nearing completion. The picture is in its sixth week and according to Edward F. Cline, directing the offering, another four weeks will be necessary before it will be ready for the cutting room.

"Captain January" is an adaptation of Laura E. Richards' famous child story. The book is now in its fifty-fourth edition and is considered an ideal vehicle for Baby Peggy. Eve Unsell and John Grey are responsible for the scenario.

The cast that will be seen in support of Baby Peggy is one seldom seen in a single production.

The story deals with the life of a little tot cast upon the shores of a barren coast after a shipwreck. She is picked up by an old light-house keeper and taken into his modest home where she lives for many months. How she is finally discovered by rich relatives and how she and the old light-house keeper finally find happiness in the home of the little child's relatives, go toward making up one of the sweetest stories that the screen will present in a long time.

"Captain January" is the first of a series of productions that Principal Pictures will make starring Baby Peggy. Four features are planned each year. The starlet's contract covers a three year period.

Jasmine Returns From Alaska

Arthur Jasmine, prominent character actor, has returned to Los Angeles from Fairbanks, Alaska, where he was engaged in a film production under the direction of Norman Dawn.

Kenyon Writes 1st With N. Y. Locale

Despite the changing fashions in film stories and their locale, it is still true that the scenes of a great many photoplays are laid in New York and Paris. Strangely enough, Charles Kenyon, the eminent playwright and photodramatist, who has given scores of stories to the screen, never wrote one situated in either of these two cities, until recently, when he furnished a story to Fox with a Parisian locale, and the scenario which he is preparing at present is laid in New York City. Thus another film tradition is upheld!

Incidentally, play-goers who remember the tremendous success of "Kindling," in which Charles Kenyon first won literary fame, will be interested to hear that he is also at work on another stage production.

Goldwyn Now Has Rental Department

Organization of a "rental department" of the Goldwyn studios, to care for independent producers who are requesting space at the big plant, has been announced by Abraham Lehr, vice-president.

The new department will be in charge of J. J. Cohn, of the executive staff of the studios, and will include a complete business unit.

Besides the Goldwyn units at work, three other producing companies now are working on the lot. The Tiffany company, producers of Mae Murray pictures, Carlos productions, which made Roland West's "The Unknown Purple," and the entire Truart organization, all have leased space at the studios.

Several other companies are asking for space, due to the unsurpassed facilities of the big Culver City plant.

Donald Mack, local independent film producer, writes in to ye editor to tip him off to the fact the Mack pedal extremities are once more doing full duty after a three-weeks pneumonia confinement

Big Pictures Begin With New Year

After almost three months of inactivity in the local studios production has once more begun on a normal scale. Indications point to the greatest year in motion pictures. This is evidenced in the statements issued by producer, distributor and exhibitor, and is solidly confirmed by the work now well under way.

Judging from the varied announcements there will be no radical change in the type of pictures for the coming year, the spectacular film keeping pace with the ordinary drama of everyday life. At the present time the independents are well ahead in the race for 1924 honors, the larger companies just beginning to swing into line.

For the producer, the player, and everyone this promises to be the long awaited year. Production will be at the height during June, July and the first part of August.

Mission Starts With "Flattery"

The Mission Film Corporation, of which Leon Rice is President and General Manager, has started production work on the picturization of "Flattery," an original screen story by H. H. Van Loan The continuity is by Jefferson Moffatt. Rice is being assisted by Norman Walker, business manager of the company, and Edward McCray, production manager. Tom Forman, who directed "The Virginian," is wielding the megaphone on "Flattery," with Jimmie Dugan, who was chief assistant director on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," as his assistant. The production is being photographed by Harry Perry and King Gray, the former having also photographed "The Virginian." In the cast are John Bowers, Marguerite de la Motte, Alan Hale, Grace Darmond, Edwards Davis, Louis Morrison and Larry Steers.

"Flattery" is a modern melodrama built around a tense theme and big situations, and with a startling climax. It is the Mission Corporation's second production, the first having been "The Barefoot Boy," which is now being given its initial showings.

O'Malley Among Film Pioneers

Pat O'Malley's first picture was "The Alien," a one-reeler made in 1912 by the Kalem Company. Robert Vignola, now a great director making Cosmopolitan productions, played the lead. Allice Hollister supported him.

Maybe She Made Poiret Wealthy

Don't buy your new spring wardrobe, girls, until you see Grace Darmond in "Alimony." Miss Darmond is rapidly gaining a reputation as one of the best-dressed women on the screen. In "Alimony" Miss Darmond wears six evening gowns and wraps and two riding habits of the latest sleeveless mode.

"America" Premiere February 22nd

On the eve of Washington's Birthday, February 21st, "America," the photodrama of the War of Independence, being made for the Daughters of the American Revolution by D. W. Griffith, will have its public premiere at the Forty-Fourth Street Theatre, New York.

The D. A. R., anxious to celebrate the sesqui-centennial of the beginning of the Revolutionary War with an appropriate screen production, requested Griffith to film a drama which would include the leading battles of this country's struggle for freedom. The story was written by Robert W. Chambers, and Griffith and a large force of players, technicians, and historical experts have been at work on the film for months.

The eminent historical and patriotic authorities connected with the production recently voiced the wish that the 1924 celebration of the birthday of George Washington be celebrated by the public presentation of "America," and to accomplish this Griffith and his players redoubled their efforts, working day and night, Sundays and holidays to finish the picture.

Practically every outstanding figure of Revolutionary days has a part in the drama, the filming of which necessitated Griffith and his company visiting the leading shrines of American liberty on special trains to take scenes.

Estelle Goes North for Rest

Estelle Taylor, following her appearance as Miriam in "The Ten Commandments," has just completed her characterization of Mary, Queen of Scots in Mary Pickford's newest production, "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

Miss Taylor left Los Angeles immediately upon conclusion of her work at the Pickford studio for Northern California, where she will enjoy a short vacation before resuming her film work.

Little Dorothy Seay, after completing a part in "Poisoned Paradise," did a Spanish dance in "Happiness," the forthcoming Laurette Taylor production.

COMEDY RELIEF WANTED IN ALL FUTURE U. P. D. SCRIPTS STRAIGHT DRAMA NIL

According to an announcement issued by Adeline M. Alvord, head of the Editorial Department of the United Producers and Distributors, the order given to her by W. F. Wood, vice-president and general manager of this company, is to explore the length and the breadth of Writers' Land in search of drama with strong comedy relief. A dramatic story which fails to provide ample inspiration for frequent outbursts of laughter will receive scant attention from Miss Alvord for the time being. The drama which is all drab and utterly barren of the lighter, brighter touches will be all but ignored.

"There can be no doubt as to the call of the public at this time—it is for entertainment and heavyweight drama is not general enough in its entertaining value," Miss Alvord says. "If there is something new or novel in the mood or treatment of a dramatic impulse or situation, I am naturally interested, but not nearly so much so as I will be if the tensity of that situation is relieved by a logical occasion for real, unrestrained mirth."

Straight-away comedy dramas with a sufficiently equal balance between the serious and humorous elements are said to be unusually scarce just now. As a rule manuscripts submitted to scenario departments are either straight comedies, straight dramas or frank melodramas. In fact, according again to Miss Alvord, stories of the latter classification are much more plentiful than any other kind. Films of melodramatic extremes are not at all objectionable either if there can be interpolated the proper amount of genuine comedy," she adds. "With the aid of the contrast afforded by humor many a melodrama would be saved from being cast aside."

Alberta's Gumming Things Up

Polite society would gasp in mingled horror and astonishment could it obtain a glance at the way Alberta Vaughn has learned to chew gum.

For the actress deftly strings it out at length, loops it twice and cleverly returns it to her mouth without a single mishap.

She had to learn the trick for a situation in "The Telephone Girl" pictures in which she is featured at Robertson-Cole.

Miss Vaughn used a full box of gum before she reached the point where she could perform with the ease and grace of an accomplished artist. Then she removed an apron which she donned for practice and announced herself ready for the scenes.

SEARCH FOR LOST VOICE LEADS DE BRULIER TO FILMDOM; DEATH VALLEY IS AID

From picturesque and verdant provincial England to the dry parched furnace-like depths of Death Valley, Nigel deBrulier traveled in search of a beautiful tenor voice and a robust physique which were once his, but lost in his quest for fame on the operatic stage.

The chronicles of the adventures of Nigel deBrulier, screen artist of national repute and, more recently, a member of the special cast in support of Jackie Coogan in his latest film, "A Boy of Flanders," would do justice to the stories of Sabatini and Jules Verne. DeBrulier in his early youth possessed a rare and exquisite tenor voice, and first attracted notice in the church choir of a small hamlet in provincial England. He sought further afield to develop this gift and attained success on the operatic stage both as a singer and dramatic actor. He played in London, Paris and elsewhere on the continent—then he lost his voice, and in his struggle to regain this priceless possession, found his health undermined.

His physician advised an ocean voyage, so he looked toward America. He landed subsequently in a small railroad town in New England where he took on the combined duties of track walker, baggage master and freight clerk. He drifted then into the borax mines of Death Valley.

In Death Valley, in company with hundreds of strong men who knew no other world, deBrulier, former favorite of European opera stage, voiceless and sick, labored long hours under the glare of a pitiless desert sun. In this waste spot he found his voice and his health, and came to California to rest. California, the Golden State, claimed him, and his achievements on the silver sheet in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame,' "The Three Musketeers," "Wild Oranges," and "The Four Horsemen" are known to picture-goers the world over. His latest role of Jehan Daas, the aged grandfather of little Nello (Jackie Coogan) in the little star's adaptation of Ouida's child classic, "A Dog of Flanders," will add another success to his long list of admirable character portrayals.

He'll Tell You About "Moving" Pictures

"Kewpie" Morgan, who appears as one of the convicts with Lloyd Hamilton in "Going East," began his cinema career in "moving pictures that moved."

That is to say, he worked with the traveling Lubin company, which made dramatic pictures as they travelled all over Texas, where Morgan joined them, Colorado, New Mexica, Arizona and northern Mexico. That was ten years ago, when the picture business was "still in its infancy."

JUVENILE DESERTED COLLEGE EDUCATION FOR CHANCE IN FILMS; IS MAKING PROGRESS

Prominent among the juveniles who have forged ahead in the year just past is Jackie Vernon, whose work in this time has placed him in line for greater things to come. By an odd co-incidence he was born in the same town (Charleroi, Pennsylvania, about thirty miles south of Pittsburgh) where the late lamented Olive Thomas first saw the light of day, and like her decided to follow the light of the Cinema.

He made his entry into the realm of flickering celiuloid in Chicago where he spent one summer in the studios. Then he returned home to enter West Virginia University after refusing several flattering offers from some of the leading eastern colleges who desired to annex him to their grid-iron squads because of his reputed prowess as a pig-skin warrior. In the end, however, he failed to enter the University for on the eve of his departure for football camp with the "Mountaineers" he went back to Chicago where he once more plunged into the activities of the Windy City's film colony.

He resumed under the direction of F. W. Corbett who was producing features known as the F. W. Corbett Productions, playing bits, and parts and performing various stunts for the camera. Later he was featured by the company and not much later he came to Hollywood to try his luck in the capital of filmdom. He has been here a little over a year now and has already made excellent progress. In addition to his histrionic ability he is gifted as a writer of short scripts and at the present time is hard at work preparing a screen vehicle for one of our foremost celebrities.

Jackie Vernon is a hard, sincere and conscientious worker. May he meet with all the success he so justly deserves.

Helen Gordon has an enviable record as leading woman for some of our foremost comedians, having played opposite Monte Banks, Sid Smith, Larry Semon, Joe Rock, Harry Sweet, Bobby Dunn and Buddy Messinger. She is now being considered for the lead opposite Dan Mason in his forthcoming series for Grand-Asher, which will start about the 18th of this month. Twelve pictures will be made under Jack Nelson's direction, with Al Martin writing the stories and titles. Paul Gerson will act as general manager for the unit.

1923 Unsell Scripts Rank Foremost

1923 has added to the laurels of Eve Unsell, scenario writer of note. Three of her adaptations have been selected for special mention by Robert Sherwood, viz: "The Hero," "Long Live the King" and "Shadows."

"Long Live the King" was also listed in the Box Office Honor Roll for 1923 of the Motion Picture News, together with "Circus Days" and "Daddy," both of which latter were edited and titled by Miss Unsell.

This talented writer is at present associated with Sol Lesser as consulting editor on the Harold Bell Wright series. The adaptation of "Captain January" for Baby Peggy was also prepared by Miss Unsell and John Grey.

The titling and editing of "The Good Scout" and the new Bebe Daniels picture, both of which Bennie Zeidman has made for Principal Pictures Corporation, are now engaging the attention of this clever screen writer.

"Bloody" Incorrect, Contends Tearle

Conway Tearle, who spent a good part of his stage career in London, points out that the slang word "bloody," put in the mouth of the Englishman on the American stage to designate his nationality, is never used by decent Englishmen.

"It is counted unspeakably filthy over there," says Tearle. "A man who used it would be ostracized. If he spoke it in the presence of a woman he would be knocked down."

Now that is settled.

Maybe He's Got a "Forty-nine" Muff

Jean Hersholt, nowp laying one of the principal supporting roles in "The Gold Fish" supporting Constance Talmadge, is quite proud of his long residence in Hollywood.

When asked how long he had live din the cinema metropolis, Jean replied that he had resided there long before the wagon was even covered.

Remembered Pat for Five Years

Pat O'Malley's portrayal of a character in a picture he made in 1915 so impressed Marshall Neilan, that "Mickey" bore him in mind for five years until, in 1920, he made "Go and Get It" and gave O'Malley a part in which he made motion picture history.

Actress Awaits New Antipodean Laws

If the Australian Government deems it advisable to prevent the importation of foreign talent into the country, Barbara Tennant will be signed for a prominent role in a picture to be made there.

Miss Tennant is extremely popular in Australia, as well as in the other countries of Great Britain. England was her birthplace and she received her early theatrical training in London.

Miss Tennant is resting since completing work in support of Baby Peggy in Principal Pictures Corporation's screen version of "Captain January."

Cissy Fitzgerald says it's all the bunk about "lilies of the field" failing to either toil or spin. Cissy has been playing the role of the "suicide blonde" in Richard Walton Tully's "Flowing Gold," and at the same time has been one of the lilies in "Lilies of the Field," another First National picture. She says she's liable to lose her girlish figure, with the double dose of toil.

Have True Dope on Light Comedy

Cliff Bowes and Sid Smith thought they were "light" comedians in Jack White's company, but listen to this:

They were doing a comedy which called for them to crawl out and lie in a bed supported by two beams fastened to a dump truck and projecting out over the thin air of a canyon. As they settled themselves comfortably and the camera was about to grind, they were horrified to feel themselves going down, down, and to see that their weight, with a leverage of twenty feet, had lifted the front end of the truck, which was about to overturn on them in the ravine below.

Sid, entangled in the covers, fell out, and Cliff jumped, which took their weight off the long lever, and the truck dropped into its place. Fortunately, the distance down was not great, and neither of the boys was hurt.

"But, gosh," says Cliff, "suppose it had been the Palisades!"

Grease Paint for Lloyd Again

Lloyd Hamilton, returning to Hollywood after a Happy New Year's Day spent with his mother in Oakland, has started his new comedy directed by Fred Hibbard. Ruth Hiatt, Wampas "Baby Star" and beauty contest winner, is again his leading woman.

Otto Matiesen is now playing the part of a thief in George Melford's "The Glorious Tomorrow" which is being made at the Lasky studios. In this production he has a worthy successor to his splendid portrayals in "Scaramouche," "The Dangerous Maid" and "Revelation." Others in the cast include Jacqueline Logan, David Torrence, Raymond Griffith, Alma Bennett and Mickey McBan.

A com- y department, a quarter- 's department, an entertain- bureau, a sanitation division, ctrical department, a club- a dance hall, a mess hall, a l with two doctors and four a fire station, 170 tents ooden floors, two large bar- an adjutant's office, five hair a large staff working on costumes and a laundry are but a part of the "location."

A one hour musical concert by a six-piece orchestra, a one hour entertainment provided by boxers, wrestlers, monologists and hired entertainers are a part of the program each evening after mess and even calisthenics, have a part on the daily schedule. The Lloyd Company rises at 5:30 by bugle call and "tucks in" at 10:00 when the power station and bugle calls urge "lights out." In 18 days on location despite rough seas and cold weather, the health and spirits of Camp Lloyd have been 100 per cent and four prominent sequences have been filmed.

Chef Collaborating With Schertzinger

Whenever a loving wife prepares to put the "touch" on hubby, she paves the way with an exceptionally good meal. The old adage has it that the way to a man's heart is via the dinner table. If this be true, then many of our recent popular song hits have been inspired by the same token, thanks to the expertness of the chef at the Jackie Coogan bungalow.

When Jackie's company is working, the director and principals do not leave the lot for luncheon. Arthur Bernstein, whose efficiency as the "watch dog" of the Coogan treasury has inspired many a Coogan attache to bargain with Uncle Sam over the price of a postage stamp, provides the noon meal right in Jackie's bungalow. His motive, of course, is to speed the time taken for lunch, but he failed to reckon with Director Victor Schertzinger. Vic recently sold Jack Coogan, senior, the idea of installing a piano in the bungalow, and immediately after lunch he sits down at the music box for a half hour and creates new song numbers. Geneva, the cook at the Coogan outfit, declares that Schertzinger's recent Spanish melody is the direct result of her Spanish omelet—on this ground Vic says that the public will never receive from his hands a Chinese ditty—because he simply cannot digest chop suey.

Mayo Making Reno Satire

Archie Mayo, who recently joined the Christie Comedy organization as ccenarist and gag man, has taken active charge of one of the comedy companies, and is now directing Bobby Vernon, under the supervision of Al Christie. The new comedy which Mayo is directing has to do with a race to Reno, and some funny angles concerning the divorce courts. Supporting Vernon will be Duane Thompson, Billy Bletcher, Lila Leslie, Victor Rodman, Budd Fine and others.

Morrison Says No on Stage Career

Stealing his stuff from Poe's immortal raven, James Morrison, popular film leading man, say most emphatically "never more" so far as stage work is concerned in the future.

"Films forever" is what Morrison has to say concerning the rest of his career, after several months with the spoken drama in New York City.

He is back in Hollywood with a big broad smile, and it will have to be a rather plethoric contract that will ever lure this player from his Hollywood apartment to the wilds of Manhattan again.

The popular young leading man but recently concluded a tour of eastern cities with a Broadway show. The night jumps and the inconvenience of road life caused Morrison to stop, look and listen and as a result he heard the call of the studios and a few hours later he was headed Westward for Hollywood and studioland.

Morrison, who is now ensconced in his Hollywood apartments, will shortly announce his plans for the future. In the meantime, he is renewing old acquaintances and enjoying friendships which were interrupted when he was called to New York last September to play an important role in a J. Stuart Blackton production.

Victor Potel, clever Hollywood comedian, has been "seeing Broadway" and other famous New York "peculiarities" in his unoccupied moments since his arrival in Gotham last week. Potel states that one has to keep in action to offset the consistent attack of frost and homesickness to which the Californian is exposed during an eastern winter.

Tearle Believer in Fencing

Ever since his characterization opposite Norma Talmadge in "Ashes of Vengeance," Conway Tearle has been an exponent of fencing as a means of keeping physically fit.

Tearle, who before his acting was a contender for the welterweight championship of London, formerly depended solely upon boxing as a means of achieving physically fitness. However, since his sword play in the Schenck production he has passed up the padded gloves in favor of the rapier.

"Fencing requires more finesse than boxing," says Tearle. "One must be more agile at the former than the latter. A boxer can cover up and protect himself without much effort but a fencer is compelled to keep on his toes at all times.

"I believe fencing to be the best form of physical training. Of course, if you want to put on a lot of muscle, fencing will not accomplish that. However, for a physical stimulus to the average person whose work demands a normal physical condition there is nothing like fencing."

Long Engagements Follow Vaudeville

Having completed a tour of fifty-seven weeks in vaudeville Ralph Bushman now has two one performances locally to his credit. Bushman played the juvenile lead with Buster Keaton in "Hospitality" an engagement of fourteen weeks and has just lately completed a society role in "The Man Life Passed By," Victor L. Schertzinger's latest production.

Mong Gives Hints for Housebuilding

Here's one way to beat the high cost of building.

If you want to keep down expenses when it comes to erecting a new home, start in when you're a young man, study architecture as a hobby, and marry a girl with a penchant for interior decorating.

So says William V. Mong, character star, who is now completing plans for his palatial new home in Beverly Hills. When a young actor, Bill took a fancy to architectural drawing, and made quite an intensive study of the art. Mrs. Mong, before she was married, made a hobby of interior decorating and recently when the happy Hollywood couple decided to build they found their hobbies saved them several thousand dollars.

This "velvet" is to be put into beautifying the grounds of the new estate at Beverly Hills and a corps of well known landscape gardners will do the work under the personal direction of Mrs. Mong.

The only member of the Mong household who has not as yet been assigned a task in connection with the construction of the palatial new home is "Bill" Mong, Jr., and his illustrious father hopes to find a suitable job for the youngster ere the last nail is driven.

"Personality in a structure is what makes an otherwise plain residence a real home," says the famous character actor. "It is the individual touches of those most interested in the house that make it more than a place to live."

Screen Actress Has Prophetic Name

The parents of Esther Ralston, whose blonde beauty illuminated Universal pictures over two years during which time she played opposite most of the U male stars, foretold that screen success which she is gradually and surely attaining. The word "Esther" came from the Persian, through the Hebrew; literally it means a star.

The facts of the case seem to point to Miss Ralston's making good the forecast expressed by her parents in naming her. She recently completed an important role in "The Marriage Circle," directed by Ernest Lubitsch. In this picture her work led him to say, "Miss Ralston will go far on the screen, since she possesses not only the beauty which American audiences require, but also an inherited flair for the dramatic and the background of hard work, which is the soil from which her talent will flower."

MELFORD THINKS BRUNETTES HAVE BEST CHANCE; WAMPAS 'BABES' EXAMPLES

The brunette cycle which has been slowly revolving back into popularity in the motion picture industry will reach its climax this year, according to George Melford, prominent director who has carefully watched the trend of public favor for many years.

"The last cycle of brunettes died out with the departure of Theda Bara and others from the photoplay world," declares Melford. "Immediately thereafter, blondes stepped into possession and held sway for some time. Slowly, for the past three years, the brunettes have again been winning back public favor.

"Glancing back over the young actresses who have progressed to stardom or near-stardom within the past twelve months, it will be found that among those whose names stand out prominently are Leatrice Joy, Barbara La Marr, Jacqueline Logan, Rene Adoree, Corinne Griffith and Carmel Myers. All of them are brunettes; in fact, I cannot recall a single blonde whose opportunities for success stand forth as brightly as do the chances of these six actresses.

"The peak of the popularity of the dark haired ladies is certain to be reached this year. Verifying this opinion is the choice of the 'Thirteen Stars of Tomorrrow,' as made this month by the Western Motion Pictures Advertisers. Ten brunettes, and only three blondes, were selected by the Wampas as the most promising young actresses of today. The blondes are Dorothy Macknaill, Lucille Ricksen and Gloria Grey. The brunettes are Alberta Vaughn, Marian Nixon, Clara Bow, Carmelita Geraghty, Hazel Keener, Ruth Hyatt, Blanche Mehaffey, Julanne Johnston, Elinor Fair and Margaret Morris.

"These girls, I understand, were chosen from a list of 117 names, all suggested as possible 'Baby Stars.' A tabulation of the entire group of rising young players brings out the startling information that 101 are brunettes, while only sixteen are blondes.

"These facts definitely establish the present overwhelming majority of brunettes in motion pictures. Incidentally, they may also indicate that there will be a scarcity of blondes within the next year or two. If such a shortage does arise, girls with light hair and eyes will be in demand at the studios."

Mr. Melford is now busy on the production of "The Glorious Tomorrow" for Paramount. Jacqueline Logan, whom he names as one of the most promising young screen actresses of 1923, is featured in this picture.

ACTOR BELIEVES IN SCREEN AS EDUCATIONAL FACTOR; SAYS EMOTIONS ARE CONSTANT

Cullen Landis is sighing because there was no screen when he was a little boy.

"The screen is making history the most fascinating of subjects," says the young actor who is playing the male lead in the James Cruze production "Magnolia," which is a pre-bellum story of the South and being photographed in the actual setting at Natchez, Miss. "There is no excuse now that history is a dull thing of dates with such full page illustrations that make a period live again as 'The Covered Wagon' which Mr. Cruze has so magnificently set forth, "Scaramouche," with its wonderful portrait gallery of French revolutionists so ably done by Rex Ingram, then there is "The Life of Abraham Lincoln," the pictures of Bill Hart, while other names include "The Dangerous Maid," "The Sea Hawk," "Richard the Lion Hearted," "Ben Hur," soon to be done, and many others so that every country and clime is being registered on the silversheet.

"Manners and customs change, but emotions keep constant from one period to another. There are the same loves and hates, joys and sorrows, comedies and tragedies. In great historic events are dominant emotions that lend themselves admirably to dramatization. I think the public likes to lose itself in scenes remote from everyday experience. Many have the idea of having lived before and so feel doubly stirred when some page of long ago stalks before them presented as only the screen can do it.

"There is the educational value in the picturization of the high spots of history that is not only a boon to the child, but to the adult as well, while the beautiful settings and costuming carry a big appeal. I feel that costume pictures have only just begun. Pictures after all, are pictures and beauty must be a part of them."

It has long been the wish of Cullen Landis to appear in a picture with southern setting. Now that his wish is gratified he is more enthusiastic than ever as his words clearly indicate.

Three More For "Sea Hawk"

Wallace MacDonald, recently featured in Fred Niblo's "Thy Name is Woman," Frank Currier, veteran character actor recently seen in "Stephen Steps Out" and Fred DeSilva who has supported Shirley Mason in "With the Tide" have been added to the cast of Frank Lloyd's First National Picture, "The Sea Hawk," now being filmed off Catalina. MacDonald is to be seen as Peter Godolphin, Currier as Asad, the basha of Algiers, and DeSilva as Ali, Asad's lieutenant. "The Sea Hawk" is now entering its third week of production with some extraordinary sea shots in which three of the four ancient ships appear, completed. More than 600 men are "on location" at Camp Lloyd.

The Irish Sure Get the Coin

Eileen O'Malley, Pat O'Malley's eight-year-old daughter, earned $600 in motion pictures in 1921. At the end of the year her father put the entire sum in Hollywood real estate for her—paid it down on a lot valued at $1500, leaving the $900 on a three year mortgage.

In less than a year the lot was sold for $2500 and "Little Lady Eileen" had $1600 cash to her credit. It was reinvested in two adjoining lots for which Pat contracted to eventually pay $5000.

Last week they were sold for $12,500.

And now "Little Lady Eileen" has $9100 cash in the bank waiting for investment—besides the money she earned during the last two years.

"By the time she is grown she will have enough to support her in luxury, if Hollywood real estate is half as good an investment as I think it is," says Pat.

Pictures Not Art, Says Winifred Dunn

Winifred Dunn, Metro scenario editor, who is now adapting "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" for the screen, declares that the photoplay is not an art!

Apparently this is a most heretical statement, especially from the lips of one who has been a staunch defender of the screen and its artistic possibilities for many years. Miss Dunn explains, however, that the photoplay, although not an art, is a great medium of expression.

"Webster defines art as 'the power or quality of perceiving and transcribing the beautiful or aesthetical in nature.' The ideals of the screen go much farther and lift it to the rank of what might be called super-arts, which include the expression of that perception which Webster calls art. It is not only the picture of life, either in its idealized or actual aspect which makes a fine picture—but it is the expression of that picture and its transference to the silver sheet which makes any photoplay stand out.

Is Loyal to Shadow Stage

Theodor von Eltz, who recently appeared behind the footlights in a leading role in "R. U. R.," won in the brief two weeks a vaudeville offer and right on the heels of this male lead in a stock company, both of which he declined as he is in line for some interesting things on the screen.

"An actor must make his choice and mine is the screen, with occasional but brief returns to the stage," says Mr. von Eltz, who is most optimistic about the new year and proposes to have all of its benefits.

Hibbard is N. G. As Mother

Add to the list of things that motion picture directors must know: Just how to make a child feel at home in a bedtime scene.

Little Bonnie Barrett, age three, was working in a Pullman-car scene with Lloyd Hamilton in "Going East." Bonnie was expected to crawl into a berth with Hamilton and go to sleep beside him. She usually "gets" a scene at once, but this time she was shy and "fidgety," and wouldn't compose herself.

Director Fred Hibbard, who has a reputation for handling children, couldn't get her to "play asleep," and she wouldn't do it for her young aunt, who had brought her to the studio while her mother kept an appointment. Several hours were wasted before Mrs. Barrett arrived, but when she did, and little Bonnie was clasped close in her arms, the explanation came in a whisper, close to Mother's ear:

"They didn't tell me to say my prayers," Muvver!"

Horseshoe is Outdone by Script Team

Over the door of the studio office where Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin write their scenarios, hangs a rare object which they treasure most highly. It is an old shoe from a Javanese mule, probably the smallest beast of burden used in the civilized world, and without a doubt the most stubborn. When he is cantankerous, he makes his Missouri cousin look like a well-trained dog as far as obedience is concerned.

Naturally, during the course of their collaboration on scripts, difference of opinion will occasionally arise between Miss Cowan and Mr. Higgin—such a difference as has often proven fatal to the success of other collaborating teams. For them, however, the presence of the little mule shoe, which was picked up by Miss Cowan during the course of one of her trips around the world, acts as a deterrent and a saving grace. A combination of opinion is effected, and the script goes merrily on. At the present time, Cowan-Higgin are finishing the adaptation of "Broken Barriers" which Reginald Barker will film for Louis B. Mayer.

Cinema Song is Published by Actor

Eugene B. Branford, local film actor and author, who recently returned from a tour throughout the east with his foster mother, Mrs. Susie B. Clark, also renowned for her writings, has just published a new song dedicated to the motion picture colony entitled, "Oh, Hollywood!" of which he is the composer.

Branford, who is also the author of "The Cross of Friendship," a poetical wirting with Friendship as the theme, came to Hollywood about one year ago from New York, and while not devoting his time to his literary pursuits he sought employment at local studios.

THE MASQUERADER

[A Word or Two About His "Hymn of Hate"]

By FRED W. FOX

You are all no doubt familiar with the Nobel Prize which is designed to further competition in the invention and production of new advancements in art, science and literature, and during my time of reading articles intended for publication and subsequent public consumption I have come across a good many manuscripts that would fare well in the contest for Nobel honors. It is doubtful, however, if there are anywhere near the same number of these as there are of scripts that would grab first place in the contest for that much-more-famous award, the Booby Prize, which has been the butt of a myriad jokes since time immemorial. I have just finished perusing a distinguished (or rather, extinguished) piece of literary craftsmanship that would put 'em all in the background when Mr. Booby, or whoever it was that founded that award, came to present the rubber medal. To be plain about it, I have just taken my eyes off of the most stupid and assinine editorial brainstorm I have ever read. I am somewhat stunned to think that anyone claiming the title of human being could ever have the audacity to sully a piece of paper with such utter rot. It has left with me the impression that the writer has lost all sense of decency or self-respect.

It is a vicious and biting tirade against the motion picture industry, and is particularly directed against Mr. Fred Niblo, a highly respected member of the profession and head of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, who, as representative of the film folk of Hollywood, attended a recent meeting of the principal figures in the suppression of the directors' annual ball not so long ago. Realizing that this insane attack upon F dom calls for unified effort upon the part of all of have just conferred with Mr. Lykke, editor of our temporary, the Morning Filmograph, who has ass me of the editorial support of that valued film pub tion in meeting the outburst face to face in their ed of like issue. es. Now isn't that the last leg of mutton on the counter!

e movie stars, satellites and moonbeams were assembled in lgrim Fathers' retreat, the Biltmore Hotel, for their Annual sgiving Charity Dance. The law provides that all such close at midnight. But according to Fred Niblo, President Motion Picture Directors' Association, the movie cohorts ot been closing their dances at midnight nor did they intend close this one. 'To the devil with the law,' was the way one nent actor expressed it.

e fact is, if we are to believe the newspapers, the Movie had just begun to arrive at midnight when the police ap- and closed the dance. Mr. Niblo almost weeps. He says nce was a pine-blank failure, whatever that is! He de- that they lost several thousand dollars and charity went g that night. Poor thing! The fact is, midnight is entire- early for any genuine action on the part of the Movie Stars. are still sober at midnight. The ladies have not smoked than a dozen cigarettes each by that time. They still have clothes on. Moviedom hasn't had a bit of fun, Mr. Police- up to midnight. The Police Commission and the Mayor have been ashamed of themselves. Things never begin to ppy with a movie dance before three o'clock in the morn-d be it known to all mankind, according to Mr. Frederick that laws are made to regulate common, ordinary, Ameri- ople and not Movie Stars. The Movie Colony has on more ne occasion given timid notice that it was and expected to thout the law.' Fatty Arbuckle thus notified society sev- onths ago. More recently, Gaston Glass gave a very simi- tice. At least a dozen prominent female stars have from o time pronounced their defiance of law and have given the unity to understand that Moviedom is independent of the d should not be worried or interfered with by the law. Of we all agree that a little cheap dance hall like Solomon's be closed at midnight, for the law says so, and these girls ance there are the penny variety. But not so with the Queens, with their gold embossed cigarette cases and their flasks. Mr. Niblo would have the whole world understand ere is no law to regulate that variety.

d so Los Angeles has been notified by Frederick Niblo, ent of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, that in ure the Movie Fandangos will proceed to Pasadena and San sco to hold their dances, communities, according to this ity, that will permit the violation of the law just so it is y the Movies. Of course Los Angeles will weep itself half th at the thought and yet we know of nothing we can do p the fox trot going until three o'clock in the morning and flasks have been emptied and the gentlemen are carrying various and sundry articles of ladies' attire as keep-sakes minders of the 'fun that we had.' Which reference is to dances and parties reported from Moviedom, you under- and not to the one at the Biltmore, for it closed at midnight —and emphatic! Indeed, we are sorry, but the law is the Chief Vollmer so fitly stated, and the law is to be enforced Angeles, so that same Chief remarks. Ah—men!

d therefore we can but weepingly remark that our loss, as it is, is San Francisco's gain, a city already made im- by a fat star once upon a time!

"Say, you Movie High-ups, when did you grow so big that the laws of the land couldn't reach you? When was his royal nibs, Mr. Niblo, appointed to 'kick' the members off the Police Commission and recall the Mayor because those gentlemen insisted upon the enforcement of the laws of the land—even against the Movie Minions? Who are these Movie Lords that they should drink or dance or do anything else at times when other men are thus prohibited from thus indulging! Why should these Cinema Sisters insist on arriving at their dances just as other mortals are compelled by law to unhug and get ready to go home?

"And as to the Shriners' Ball, they closed at midnight, as the law provides, and haven't kicked about it either!"

It was to the meeting of the conflicting interests that Mr. Niblo went to do his share to amicably settle the dispute. He conducted himself, as always, as a gentleman of refinement and manners. Among the gathered reformists was this masquerading clergyman, and during the session he kept his mouth shut. No sooner was Niblo's back turned, however, than the logheaded inebriate proceeded to belate him, and film folks in general, through his yellow sheet, acting like a two-year-old. The sarcasm and insult in his message is glaring. Being a minister, or at least professing to be one, he should be familiar with the lines of Luke 6:45 from the Bible which says: "A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasures of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil; for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh." And Luke 6:31 which says: "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."

In cases of this sort we are usually content to consider the source but this passes all human conception of right-being and therefore we are determined that due justice be accorded the people of the motion picture industry, and especially Mr. Niblo. We are resolved to show this man in the true light. His insidious influence has been a pall too long over our endowed liberty. He must make way with his antiquated and crazy ideas. WE DEFY HIM TO STAND UP IN HIS PULPIT AND READ HIS WRITTEN TIRADE TO HIS CONGREGATION. BEING THE FAIR-MINDED AMERICAN PEOPLE WE KNOW THEY MUST BE THEY WILL NOT RECEIVE HIS WORDS. SO HELP US GOD!

Mah Jong!

By RAYMOND McKEE

Now we all understand the laws governing the game up to the play. Last week we four were seated around the four walls of China ready to break the wall. So here goes! Remember if the seasons are included in the set, it shall be the duty of each player in turn beginning with E, to lay upon the table, face up, and to his left, any seasons he may have drawn, and to replace them immediately by drawing an equal number of tiles from the open end of the wall. Should the tile drawn be another season, it shall not be replaced until each of the other players has placed any seasons drawn in the original 13 tiles. Seasons are not part of the playing hand, which must always contain at least 13 tiles, besides seasons. Any of you who fail to show and replace a Season before you make a first discard, shall not be allowed to replace it, but must play with your stale hand. Seasons drawn during the play shall be replaced by drawing from the open end of the wall before discarding. East begins by discarding any one of his fourteen tiles, laying it face up, between the walls face up in the center of the table. Some folks name their discards and some folks don't. Suit yourself. Now if any of you have already in your hand two or three of the same suit and denomination you may call Pung, placing the tiles from your hand on the table, to your left, or in a row in front of the rack, and adding the discard to them, discarding from your hand any tile you please, in place of the tile punged. If any of you have in your hand three of the same suit and denomination as the discard, he may pung the discard and lay down either three or four tiles. If you wish to show all four, you must call Kong, instead of Pung, and must take a loose tile before discarding or your hand will be stale. If no one Pungs the discard, the player on the right of the discarder may use the discarded tile to fill a sequence of not more or less than three tiles of the same suit in numerical order by laying down two tiles from his hand and taking the discard from the table then joining it to them. No other player can use a discard to complete a sequence unless it makes him Mah Jong. Every player using a discard must afterward discard a tile in its place, unless he is Mah Jong. In case the same discard can be used for a sequence by the player on the right of the discarder and for a Pung or Kong by some other player, the pung or kong has the preference. But he must announce his claim before the player with the sequence discards. The Chinese name for a sequence is "Chee," meaning to connect. Under no circumstances may you take a discard from the table into your hand. It must be left face upward on the table. If you take a discard in your hand, any other player may demand that it be returned to the table and not used. Next week we will draw from the wall.

By FANCHON ROYER

re is a whole-souled genuineness about s Randolf that is rather at a premium ushed, over-full, twentieth century years e are living; a genuineness in no degree by his unmistakable professionalism is knowledge of many arts. This, undly, is the secret of his ease before the camera, the canvas or on the sidelines "just looking at life," to quote a phrase of his own.

For Anders Randolf is not only one of the screen's most distinguished character actors but he is a brush artist of great talent. More, he is a competent critic of a half dozen other arts. This much we knew before we chatted with him that wintry afternoon beside the portrait of a prominent screen star, half completed upon his easel, but the conversation developed his interest for us immeasurably.

"I thoroughly enjoy balancing my work in this way," he observed naturally in reply to our mention of his versatility. "To do a photoplay and then a portrait," he nodded toward the picture we faced, "is quite ideal. I have just finished a long run in Pickford's new play and am finding this bit of painting a great relaxation." He eyed the work half wistfully as though he longed to be at it but he attended again, giving us the information we asked. It mostly consisted of statistics and titles, but from our own reviewing background and familiarity with his record we pieced together the facts.

Mr. Randolf, whose Sir George Vernon in "Dorothy Vernon of Hadden Hall," will be but his second western-made portrayal, originally embarked upon an artistic career from which he was diverted by motion pictures in 1913. His first association with the cinema was formed when he provided a portrait of an actress to be utilized in an early screen story with an artists' colony locale. Carried along for a time almost without realizing life's new aspect for him, the artist became an actor and almost at once joined Vitagraph with which company he was associated for several years. Striking performances such as the Lion in "The Lion and the Mouse," soon brought him prominently before picturedom, and of late years his free-lancing has continued to develop his position in the studios. Included among these later characterizations have been significant portrayals in Griffith's "The Love Flower," and "The Idol Dancer," Cosmopolitan's "Buried Treasure," while in Barthelmess' "The Bright Shawl" his Captain Santacilla proved one of last year's most effective heavies. Meanwhile Mr. Randolf never misplaced his brush and colors, for he possessed both the inclination and the ability to achieve equally admirable results in two directions.

"Last summer," he told us in parting, "I came to California for new scope all around. First there was a part in 'How Men Love,' a Grand production, then Sir George, and between times a few canvasses. Life hasn't changed much. I just transferred my background and found new scenes, faces and cameras; also some old friends."

He said nothing about the unusual recognition which has been accorded him since Hollywood became his home; he just "liked the spirit of the place and the climate."

To one who is treated now and again to over-doses of the eccentric in his professional association, Mr. Randolf is as wholly refreshing as the well-balanced, solidly grounded artist must be. He has brought much to the American screen and his oils have aroused admiration in artistic circles everywhere. The thought suggests itself that it is of such material as Anders Randolf that great directors are made.

"Always Sure-Fire!"

By EDITH M. RYAN

ways sure-fire!"

A actor might be glad to be so rated in e otion picture world where golden is not won in a moment, but Theodor Eltz to whom the above words are s being predicted by filmdom's leading rs, modestly passes the buck to that us school of experience and training which he is now drawing dividends.

Probably no actor of Mr. von Eltz's ence today ever slipped into Hollywood with less flare of trumpets. He came o letters of introduction, no pull, no e exploitation. He came quite as inscuously as tens of thousands of ex- ut with one important difference. He had an enviable stage experience. where in his luggage was stowed away of press notices of his work in stock roadway successes. Fine notices they but Theodor von Eltz never circulated among casting directors. He doesn't that way re is always some one in this hectic of climbing the ladder who knows a actor when he sees him. Theodor von Eltz had his period of waiting and then out oubled sky came a ray of light. Came a director who had heard that here chap that was a "sure-fire actor" and st thing von Eltz got straight about it hat he was engaged to play opposite Allison in "Extravagance."

Ne that we did not say that out of a ed sky came several rays of light! r von Eltz has as lively a story of ss in the climb to fame as the next It is his credo to let a director know mself the worth of an actor. No actor less about himself than von Eltz. But s admitted that he believes it is generally understood that he knows his business. Probably no young actor has ever remained consistently a leading man, but still negotiated quite such a variety of roles in able characterization.

Back of this variety is diversity in social contacts.

He was born in New Haven where his father had the chair of modern languages at Yale, later removing to New York where he had a similar position at Columbia. His were cultural surroundings, with interesting family connections, belonging on the maternal side to the well known family of Potters, his grandfather and great grandfather being prominent in the medical world while on the paternal side his forbears belonged to the Austrian nobility. He was destined for a medical career, but the call to the stage proved stronger. Every summer with his family he joined the summer colony at Craigsmoor, N. Y. and one eventful season a Belasco player took a cottage in their midst and helped the young people put on several plays. So when he finished at a private school in Pennsylvania he secured a stock engagement and made his first stage appearance in "The Gambler" and as there was a different play each week he found himself well entered in the acting school of versatile roles. When Winthrop Ames put his charming play "Prunella" on Broadway, Theodor von Eltz had a leading character and gave a good account of himself. There were other successes and he was lined up for the leading male role in "Tiger Rose" when this country went into the world war. Mr. von Eltz more than did his "bit" going overseas in charge of a negro regiment.

When he returned from the war, all his friends advised him to give up for the time being a stage career, as the turn of world events had made the actor's lot a difficult one. There was the siren whisper "a business career"! The young actor decided to give business the "once over" and went down to Texas where he entered the oil fields. He learned the "other side of life" and while it was interesting to him, the stage kept up its persistent call. And so one day he found himself back on the stage in Mind at Dea

The cold wave that hit San Francisco last week, with rain, hail, cold winds, and even snow on the nearby mountains, seems to have put a damper on all the picture activity that was promised us just as soon as the New Year was over. However, the Marriott Productions did get a flying start, as they filmed the first scenes of their picture "Young China," in the beautiful Tea Garden of Golden Gate Park, last Friday. Forrest Creighton, director general of the organization is directing, with Ray Duhem at the camera. Beside little Pepita Riviera, who will play the lead Little Lila Gee, the parts already cast include Gail Lloyd, who did a bit in Von Stroheim's production of "Greece," Chauncey Southern, and Romulo Berta. Others will be announced later.

Berthold Berger, general manager of the Gerson Pictures Corporation, left for New York on Sunday. While there Mr. Berger will attend to several business matters, and probably close with a big releasing organization who have offered to handle all the future output of the company. Their recently completed series of five-reel melodramas starring Ora Carew are doing well in the state right market, and the company still have Miss Carew under contract.

William Russell and Harry Wertheimer, known to the screen as Harry Morrison are again enjoying a holiday in San Francisco as guests at the Plaza Hotel. The two race horses bought by "Bill" Russell during the Tanforan racing season are at Tia Juana and acquitting themselves with credit.

Speaking of horses, the general public in San Francisco are getting a bit tired of hearing of the thirteen "baby stars" who are to grace the Wampas Frolic, and welcome with real enthusiasm the announcement that Tom Mix, and Tony are coming. Tony to arrive, padded, steam-heated box car and all, and to grace the Ball in person, where he is sure of a warm welcome from all the fans. The ticket sale for the big event is making good progress, and the crowd promises to come up to everybody's highest expectations.

Max Graf, production head of the Graf Films, left for Los Angeles last Wednesday to arrange for the preparations of the continuity for his next big film, to be made from Charles Sherman's successful novel "The Wise Son." Actual filming will start in San Francisco just as soon as Mr. Graf can get the continuity whipped into shape, and secure his production staff and players.

Another motion picture producer, I. W. Irving, who made "Trapped," and "The Man Higher Up," has come to San Francisco to shoot some exterior scenes for his next production. He thinks the country about the Golden Gate ideal for artistic and varied scenes.

O. G. Perry, manager of a chain of theatrical and moving picture houses in Australia arrived in San Francisco a few days ago from Sydney, Australia. After a short stay here he will visit the film world of Los Angeles, make a trip north and return here for a longer stay. Mr. Perry reports that his audiences in Australia are good natured, and will try anything once, but that many films making big hits in this country are flat failures in his, while others not so successful here will run for months.

Two films scored such big hits in local houses last week that the managements have carried them over for a second week, for "Black Oxen" at the Warfield broke all records of that house for its first week so is carried over, and "White Tiger" the crook play featuring Priscilla Dean has also been retained by popular demand. Of the other leading houses "Under the Red Robe" is in its last week at the Imperial, and "The White Sister" at the Capitol starting its third week with good business. Of the new openings "The Light That Failed" at the California, divides honors with the Granada offering of "Lucretia Lombard" made from Kathleen Norris' best seller, and shown in other cities under the title of "Flaming Passion."

Milton E. Hoffman, former general mar of the Metro studios, and his wife came San Francisco one day last week, on thei turn from a voyage to Honolulu for rest pleasure.

Blanche Mehaffey, advance guard of thirteen "baby stars" who are to grace Wampas Ball, arrived in San Francisco week, and was met and entertained by le city officials. During her stay here she semi-official guest of the city, and many for her entertainment have been made, to low the motor trips, dinners and theatre ties that she has already enjoyed.

Jesse D. Hampton, film producer of Los geles, was among the guests at the St. Fr for a few days last week.

Benny Leonard, champion lightweight l of the world is the headliner at the Orp this week. He is offering a very clever ing act on the regular bill, and follows matinee performance with a talk to the l on "How to Reduce." On his arrival se days before the opening he was met by V Richie, who himself once wore the hono the champion, and many other of the le lights of the local fight circles, who are al ing to make Benny's stay in our midst as as possible.

Laurence Hughes has been a guest a Plaza Hotel the last week, completing arr ments for the making here in San Francis a series of comedies and short films, by a pany of which he is the head.

Pauline Lord, one of San Francisco's fa daughters has come back to her native city opened on Sunday night as the star of E O'Neill's famous prize play "Anna Chri The play is one that has created perhap greatest sensation of any play produced in York and London in the last two seasons, Miss Lord in its title role gives one of the outstanding performances ever seen. The pany as it comes to the Alcazar Theatre contains, besides Miss Lord, two other bers of its original Broadway cast, and with a very warm reception here.

The Fantasy of Bagdad

By MARK LARKIN

Whether we agree that 1924 is promising from a cinema standpoint, we must admit that the producers themselves are promising enough. From nearly every studio comes announcement of big features to be made. It remains a fact, however, that little or nothing has yet been done toward actual work on what might be termed productions of this character.

The Fairbanks picture will be completed first. "The Thief of Bagdad," is an Arabian tale based upon the poetic spirit of "Arabian Knights' Entertainment." It is an oriental fairy story for grown-ups, woven of the fantasy, splendor and romance of the Far East.

If it be true that everyone builds air castles, then Douglas is right in the premise upon which dreams are made.

It is a story of fantastic imagery that shows you the beautifully impossible picture of your half conscious musings.

In explaining his venture into the field of fantasy, Douglas Fairbanks says—"Everyone at some time has dreamed of some brave deed for a beautiful princess in a strange land. 'The Thief of Bagdad' takes you to the impossible world of Fancy."

The plot of this play deals with a nimble thief who captures the love of a princess. Glorified by this love, he sets out to achieve worthiness, to establish his birthright. He learns from the Priest of Wisdom that "Happiness must be earned." His journey carries him to strange realms, with adventure at every turn in the road; he crosses a sea of molten lava, encounters in varied forms, travels on magic carpets, rides winged horses and even wears a Cloak of Invisibility.

In the sets that Fairbanks has built he carried out the idea of fantasy. The Bagdad he has erected and which covers six acres is not the Bagdad of Ali Baba but a Bagdad born of the fleeting visions that come when realities are softened by the haze of fancy. The through which he passes on his journey t citadel in the clouds, suggests the overwh ing effect of Dore's illustration of Dante.

What will be the public reaction to this duction?

The same question was asked when Hood was released. There Douglas we for spectacle in a broad sense but in Thief of Bagdad" he has not only added a tic, fantastic touch but uses all the bea symbolisms of allegory to point a frankly itual theme.

At least, there is no doubt in Holly among the cognoscenti that this is the most bitious production that has yet been broug the screen.

Palmborg's Paragraphs

(Being one of a series of impressions of film folk and [illegible] as written by [illegible] Palmborg, [illegible] and [illegible] of the New York Life Insurance Company.)

Once more it has been my sad duty to obtain proof of death and for a man who for many years has lived in our midst. A man respected and loved by all who knew him—Mr. Alan Holubar.

He gave me his application for insurance in the month of August, just before I left for New York, but as he was busy preparing for his new picture we could not arrange for a medical examination before I left. The fact that he had not been examined worried me, for I realized that he wanted to put the insurance in force as he had given me a check with the application. I had him constantly on my mind, and telegraphed our cashier at the Los Angeles office asking him to see that the examination was completed as soon as possible. The latter part of September he wired me that this had been done.

Soon after this I returned home and before the policy was issued, I was advised that Mr. Holubar was seriously ill at one of the hospitals and that he had requested me to call.

It was a great shock to me to find this man whom I had talked such a short time ago—and at that time a vigorous, robust man—so very ill. I will never forget the hand clasp he gave me or the look of gratitude in his eyes. Those few moments alone repay me for the time I have given to others who seem to think that I am urging them to do something that will benefit me instead of them. It is such incidents as these that force me on in this work for I have many such experiences in my book of memory.

Mr. Holubar knew that the policy had not been issued as there had not been time since the examination and now that this illness had suddenly descended upon him, he was anxious to learn if it would be released.

At the time he applied for this insurance he was in splendid condition—in fact he debated about taking additional insurance as he already carried quite a sum. However he finally decided upon a good sized policy figuring that it was the best kind of savings account he could have, to say nothing of the protection and numerous other benefits it carried.

I found him a wonderfully fine man to deal with. Fair and square in every detail. He spoke tenderly of his wife and daughter and had them foremost in his mind when making his plans. Several times I had occasion to go to their home and it was such a happy home!

They had every reason to be happy. His wife had become a famous actress under his directorship and he had made a big name for himself as her director. They had a beautiful home, a sweet little daughter whom they both adored and he was just starting work on one picture of a series that he was to direct for Metro, pictures that promised to be the biggest of his career.

As I talked to him at the hospital I realized he was a very sick man, but every hope was held out for his recovery. The following week when I was notified of his death, I could not believe it until it was verified by his doctor. And so this fine man, in the prime of life and apparently in the best of health was suddenly stricken with a fatal illness. How uncertain life is!

A short time ago I delivered the policy to Mrs. Holubar, a mute tribute of her husband's devotion and loving care. I now have in my possession, a check of five figures, made out to Mrs. Holubar from the New York Life. This I will deliver to her as soon as she returns from the east.

That day at the hospital, I gave Mr. Holubar my word that I would see that the policy was issued. As a result of that promise he was content, for he knew he could depend upon the New York Life and he had my word that I would look after his interests.

So there is a great satisfaction in my heart for having served this fine gentleman for I know that the fact that he had created this additional estate for his loved ones, gave him great comfort in his last hours.

O'Malley, the Trouper

By C. S. DUNNING

Impressions of Pat O'Malley—and it is that which I am attempting to set down on paper—can best be summed up in two words "Irishman" and "trouper." They tell the whole story. To the reader with imagination who has, perhaps, seen O'Malley on the screen, no more need be said.

But in cold fact O'Malley is neither Irishman nor trouper. He was born in this country—Forest City, Pa.—in a little town in the Lackawanna Valley. He owns his home in Hollywood in which he has lived for quite a number of years, quietly as a family man should, with his wife and two daughters. He is never on the road and hasn't been for years.

Yet he has all the essential characteristics suggested to the imagination by the two words I have used. He looks and feels the part.

Possibly the two years spent in Ireland making pictures with Sidney Olcott—impressionable years of early manhood—did their bit and more towards strengthening the characteristics suggested by his name. Much averse to the activities of the cinema actors the Irish country folk had their fears more easily quieted by hose who spoke their brogue, wore their clothes, told their stories and fought with them, as Irishmen fight, O'Malley and Olcott found. So the two, leading man and director, for two years lived the life of the people with whom they were working. They carefully cultivated a brogue; they bought and sold cattle; they joined in the free-for-alls; they went to the fairs; they spent their earnings in the taverns over a pot of ale.

"It was a grand life," says O'Malley. "I'l like to return to it. I'd take the missus and the kids along this time, of course, but—

"Well, Ireland's like California. You've got to see it, to live there, to get to know it, to appreciate its fascination. And the people are people after my own heart."

For years before he first walked in front of a camera, just a month or two before he went to Ireland, O'Malley lived the life of a "trouper"—that strange creature who is to the theatrical world what the "boomer" is to the newspaper world. Beginning in early h hood he began an experience that led through all the diverse divisions of the s business. Starting at the age of eight wit stock company playing up and down the La wanna Valley—he played juvenile roles ing the show, walked wire between acts, passed out handbills mornings—he jun from circus and carnival to stock company burlesque, vaudeville and "legitimate" pro tions. Though his mother caught him c during the first few years and sent him to school whenever she could, he was a soned trouper long before it came time him to don long pants.

He settled down, of course, on his marr to Lillian Wilkes, a vaudeville performer, a his return from Ireland in 1914. But you rub the spots off a leopard, make an Eng man out of an Irishman nor make a tro anything but a trouper. An Irishman may in London or a trouper marry and settle d but neither changes.

Nor has Pat O'Malley.

"Always Sure-Fire"

ver. It was there that he learned about the career offered the actor in motion pictures.

Since his residence in the film colony—he came just three years ago—Mr. von Eltz has played many leads supporting such stars as Viola Dana, Betty Compson, May Allison, Bebe Daniels and Lenore Ulric, the latter in his biggest picture of the year "Tiger Rose" directed by Sidney Franklin, who is among those directors full of praise for his work.

It would seem as if the young actor had deserted his first love, the speaking stage. Since coming to Hollywood, Mr. von Elez between pictures had several seasons at the Community theater where he played leads as well as character roles. Only recently he stepped back again behind the foot lights in "R. U. R." given at the Fine Arts theater where he played one of the principal characterizations. Among pictures coming up in addition to "Tiger Rose" which is showing in the East and scoring for him everywhere, are "The Turmoil" and "Just Off Broadway," while a comedy drama that has won excellent notices for him is "Lights Out" in which he plays in whimsical manner, the scenario writer.

The present year promises much for this actor who has won for himself through hard work, natural ability and fine opportunities a clean-cut technic and a charming art that carry, no matter what role he plays the confidence of directors who want actors today and who have passed the word along the length and breadth of filmdom to other directors who know through repute that Theodor von Eltz is always—"sure-fire"!

Pegeen Olcott whose recent arrival from the east marks her second debut into picture circles.

Miss Olcott's work of several months ago with the Rellimio Films as Mrs. Fenton in "Heartstrings" under the direction of Louis William Chaudet was so outstanding she was immediately re-engaged by the same company to portray the role of Shanghai Sal in "The Yellow Stigma" which was directed by Colin Campbell.

Under the tutelage of E. H. Sothern, Miss Olcott received her early stage training in Shakespearian repertoire. Proof of her genuine talent and versatality was later shown when she became a member of the Morosco Stock Company.

The individuality and new personality which she lends to her ingenue portrayals signify a brilliant future for this screen artist.

Frolic Foolishness By EARL SIBLEY

re has been right smart of talk here in the papers here in San Francisco about g the movies move and some of the boys hey might come up here on the bay.

Santell, the director, in an interview said: movies could all fold up their tents like rabs and silently steal away over night, l's right, coz that's about the only way of them could get out and a lot of them 't anything to move anyway.

l the producers are arguing about the hen there isn't any use for when it's a fog they can shoot on Market St., and it's a low fog they can get up above it win Peaks and you can't depend on it y for Max Graf did a picture called Fog" and when they needed it, it wasn't and they had to use smoke pots. Most fog is around Daly City whic is a bless- nobody wants to see that town anyway 's right before you get to the cemeteries is very appropriate as it is the last town ould ever want to see while you was on speaking of getting the Movies up here, ent a committee to Los Angeles to call on roducers composed of the town marshal, ple of politicians and some real estate nd forgot to send any one that could tell about pictures. So when the producers the real estate men if they was plenty shine he said, "Sure they are widening ighway down the peninsula and that the producers coz the little strip of dirt ide the road would be gone and the ys wouldn't have no place to walk their . And they asked the politicians if they ny place where they could rent Louise the 15th furniture and they said, "Sure, we got the largest Auditorium this side of the Mississippi river" and when they asked to town marshal if it was a good place to make pictures he said, "Gee we didn't come down to get the studios away from Los Angeles, we only wanted to see if you had your traffic cops mounted on roller skates or if they stood under a wagon umbrella with a real estate sign on it." But if you want good coffee we got a feller named Coffee Dan that makes it swell and his eggs don't bother you none sticking in the tin pans for he gives you a little hammer to knock 'em loose.

And this here Wampas committee got all sore coz the city dads in L. A. wouldn't let 'em dance all night so they are coming up here and take trade away from the Butcher Union's Ball and I can't see why they travel 500 miles to dance two hours longer when they could put on the ball like a serial in episodes and get in the same amount of dancing as they could have episode No. 1 on Monday night and episode No. 2 on Tuesday night and Mix's horse Tony couldn't stay up that late anyhow. And they ain't treating us right anyway as they are sending up a lot of these baby stars that they can send on half tickets.

And we used to could say we had a lot of boats for pictures but they are going to get out an injunction against Frank Lloyd as he bought everything that would float and shipped our whole navy to San Pelro and the harbor commissioners are scared to death that he is going to send it back. And now the town marshal is sore as he has to meet all the trains and can't shine up his badge for they want to take pictures of him and the stars an dthe badge makes reflections in the picture.

But I don't think they will ever more up here because they's a bridge at Salinas that's too low for the trucks to get under.

It's going to make a lot of hard feelings and is a interesting game to watch from the side lines as Emmet Hayden, the supervisor, according to the newspapers at three o'clock this morning was three pictures ahead of Dan O'Brien, the town marshal, but Dan feels encouraged as two of his pictures was in uniform which kinda counter acts it, and the old fellow that sells colored glasses on Market street is good and sore already for every time Louis Mayer or any one else comes up and tells us how swell the weather is, the fog comes in and it rains for three days and he can't sell any spectacles.

Any way it ought to look like old home week for every time an actor comes to San Francisco they tell about how glad they are to get back to their old home town and if they could only hold 'em here it would be some village.

There is plenty of money here and it is called the financial center of the Pacific coast because they don't let no one get a close up of the money.

And it must be a good plice to make pictures for Yon Stroheim shot up here for nearly a year and only lost three or four days on account of bad weather and look what happened to him in Los Angeles he's lost three months already just cutting the picture.

It's going to be a good thing for every body though and there is bound to be a crowd for if the tickets don't go any faster they are going to give green trading stamps which are good anyplace.

The Greatest Tribute By GEORGE LANDY

ney Chaplin's permanent return to the , has brought him one of the most re- ble tributes ever paid to a film player. e Jean Nathan, one of the leading dra- critics in this country, who has often ex- d a most pronounced antipathy to the and all film people, has said the follow- "I am very much interested in the work of Syd. Chaplin. I consider him the foremost comedian on the screen today."

Such comment from Nathan's truculent typewriter is certainly "praise from Caesar," and makes especially notable the return to greasepaint of a truly great comedian. For Syd Chaplin IS a great comedian—we all remember his sparkling characterizations in "A Dog's Life," "Shoulder Arms," and "The Pilgrim," a promise of genius which has been more than fulfilled in "The Rendezvous" and "Her Temporary Husband."

"The Rendezvous" was a typically Russian, morbid melodrama, in which Sydney Chaplin supplied the comedy relief in the person of a cockney "Tommy" who acted as a sort of guardian angel over the youthful heroine. Again and again he extricated her from seemingly unsurmountable dangers—and always in a manner that brought a gasp of relief to the audience and an appeal to its risibilities. Here was a characterization marked principally by its grotesquerie. On the other hand, in "Her Temporary Husband," the comedy nuances of Syd. Chaplin's characterization are of a more delicate, refined nature. In this story, he plays an over-timid, middle-aged butler who is forced into melodramatic situations in an attempt to help his impoverished master. While all the other principal persons in the story are rushing madly about in wild pursuit of one another, and during several actually gory battles, the apparently imperturbable butler, who is really scared sick, manages to save the day principally by pantomimically informing his master of conspiracies directed against him.

In "The Galloping Fish," the Thomas H. Ince production, in which Syd. Chaplin plays the principal role, he gives another finely-wrought portrayal. In fact, his work seems to be as close to technical perfection as the comedian's art can possibly reach, and, incidentally, he furnishes a convincing proof that genius can reside in the souls of two members of the same family—a related genius, it is true, but with a different style of expression. Charlie and Sydney Chaplin are both great comedians, but each works in different ways, "his wonders to perform." Originally, back in the days when they were appearing at the London music halls, Syd was the older and the better known of the two. He had made quite a reputation for himself as a star comedian, in dialogue sketches and as the leading mime in the famous Fred Karno pantomime, "The Humming Bird," known on this side of the Atlantic as "A Night in an English Dance Hall." Charlie had been engaged for the lead in a musical piece scheduled to open at the Oxford Music Hall; two days before the opening, he lost his voice completely—and consternation and despondency ruled the Chaplin household. Karno came to the rescue with an offer to Charlie to play the pantomime role his brother was doing in London, in another, provincial company. Charlie accepted with great joy; later this company came to the United States; Mack Sennett saw the troupe and, on his advice, Charlie was signed for the screen by Kessel and Bauman—the rest is history.

Later, Syd arrived here, acted in a few comedies and directed some more, but soon he found all his time taken up by the management of his brother's important business matters. Syd became the business man of the family; it was an easy step to enter other business ventures and so his screen appearances became spasmodic, few and far between. Many of us, however, remember with glee his multi-reel comedy, entitled "The Submarine Pirate."

Strange quirks of fate had taken the great comedian and made a business man of him, but now Syd Chaplin has shown that he is definitely and permanently returning to his first love, the grease paint. "The actor," he says, "cannot also be a business man. The two temperaments, talents and outlooks are at distinct variance with each other. The actors is the subjective mind; he develops it at the expense of his objective mind, which becomes atrophied, as it were, and that is why the actor is a notoriously bad business man. If he tries to combine the two, his acting must suffer. Business interests inevitably prevent the mental and spiritual relaxation necessary for inspirational, inventive introspection. The true actor cannot stop working when he takes off his make-up, as the business man can do, when he closes the door of his office for the evening. His subconscious, subjective mind must keep at it all the time and in that very fact lies his development as an artist.

"For example, the best actor is not concerned with the mechanics of his art while he is before the camera. He does things subconsciously, without too-detailed instructions from the director—otherwise, he becomes a mere automaton and his performance is stilted and unreal.

"Back in the old days, our theatrical entertainment was highly dramatic; consequently, comedy relief was compulsory, to prevent the emotional fatigue of the audience. I remember the famous Surrey Theatre in London, owned by the Conquest family, where they put on a thriller every week; but the big box-office attraction, the outstanding interest in the shows, was the comedy character supplied by George. Later, came the more polite 'parlor comedy-drama,' if I may so designate it; there was no great emotional stress, therefore comedy relief was unnecessary and passed more or less into the discard. Comedy was limited to straightforward farce or built on situations, gags, or a personality type. A comedian who created one manner of person was confined to creating that person for years and years; all his psychology, all his motivations and actions were determined by the outward appearance and the station in life obviously that person's. My brother, Charlie, is a case in point; he has been doomed to genteel poverty, with all its pathos, in every one of his pictures. Yet Charlie is a great artist—one of the very greatest—but the versatility of true artistry has been forbidden him.

"The screen follows the stage in many ways, especially in the general trend of its offerings. Hence the films found little use for comedy relief; as on the speaking stage, comedy became confined to farce, slapstick and gags.

"Now, however, there is the dawn of a real renaissance. The actor who supplies the comedy relief in the present-day picture, brings laughter that is not forced, not dependent on far-fetched gags, slapstick or the custard pie school of thought. It is based on logical character development, and thus in satisfying the best in the actor, it permits him to give that best to the audience.

"This is the type of part I hope to play henceforth. It permits artistic characterization through logical motivation and sequence in action; it does not strain the credulity of the actor or the audience; it offers the chance for versatility that every real actor wants. Of course, the straight comedy, the out-and-out farce, we shall have with us always. They are staple entertainment and they have their place. But more and more, the straight drama will provide for comedy relief which will supply greater opportunity for the actor and greater pleasure for the audience."

The Return of Clift

By HARRY HAMMOND BEALL

After four and a half years in England, using American methods in making pictures on the British Isles, Denison Clift will arrive in the United States early next month. He will come at once to Hollywood to start work under a two year contract with William Fox.

Clift is one of the megaphone wielders who climbed to that degree of prominence in the cinema art via the typewriter route. He entered the film world about eight years ago after much experience as a newspaper and magazine writer and editor. Then William Fox made him supervising editor at his west coast studios, in which capacity he was called upon to finish up productions that other directors had started.

His fame spread abroad and then came an offer from a British syndicate to produce in London. It meant an opportunity to work unrestricted, to try out experiments on his own initiative and a chance to see the world.

Clift accepted and he is not sorry for ti has been a wonderful four and a half years, but it is going to be mighty good to get back to Hollywood he cables his waiting wife.

"This Freedom" from the novel by A. S. M. Hutchinson, editor of "If Winter Comes," Clift believes is his best picture so far. It is to have a local premier this week. William Fox bought it from the English producers for whom Clift worked, paying $100,000 for the negative, which is said to be the largest sum ever paid for American rights to a British firm.

Clift will arrive in San Francisco on February 6 on the Tenyo Maru, having circled the globe on his way home. He visited Egypt, India, Japan, China and other Oriental ports en route using the $1000 honorarium or bonus, with which his employers presented him on his termination of his contract, as an expression of their goodwill and pleasure over his work. All Hollywood will rejoice, for when he was here Clift was one of the most popular members of the film colony.

WINNING PLAN—No. 1469—Selected by Jury of American Peace Award—Created by Edward W. Bok and Offering $100,000 for the Best Practicable Plan by Which the United States May Cooperate with Other Nations, Looking Toward the Prevention of War.

Statement of Jury of Award

The Jury of Award realizes that there is no one approach to world peace, and that it is necessary to recognize not merely political but also psychological and economic factors. The only possible pathway to international agreement with reference to these complicated and difficult factors is through mutual counsel and cooperation which the plan selected contemplates. It is therefore the unanimous opinion of the Jury that of the 22,165 plans submitted, Plan Number 1469 is "the best practicable plan by which the United States may cooperate with other nations to achieve and preserve the peace of the world."

It is the unanimous hope of the Jury that the first fruit of the mutual counsel and cooperation among the nations which will result from the adoption of the plan selected will be a general prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all materials of war.

The Question to be Voted Upon

The substantial provisions which constitute the plan selected by the Jury of Award, and upon which the vote of the American people is asked, are hereby submitted by the Policy Committee as follows:

I. ENTER THE PERMANENT COURT

That the United States adhere to the Permanent Court of International Justice for the reasons and under the conditions stated by Secretary Hughes and President Harding in February, 1923.

II. COOPERATE WITH THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS, WITHOUT FULL MEMBERSHIP AT PRESENT

That without becoming a member of the League of Nations as at present constituted, the United States Government should extend its present cooperation with the League and propose participation in the work of its Assembly and Council under the following conditions and reservations:

Safeguarding of Monroe Doctrine

1. The United States accepts the League of Nations as an instrument of mutual counsel, but it will assume no obligation to interfere with political questions of policy or internal administration of any foreign state.

   In uniting its efforts with those of other States for the preservation of peace and the promotion of the common welfare, the United States insists upon the safeguarding of the Monroe Doctrine and does not abandon its traditional attitude concerning American independence of the Old World and does not consent to submit its long established policy concerning questions regarded by it as purely American to the recommendation or decision of other Powers.

No Military or Economic Force

2. The only kind of compulsion which nations can freely engage to apply to each other in the name of Peace is that which arises from conference, from moral judgment, from full publicity, and from the power of public opinion.

   The United States will assume no obligations under Article X in its present form, or under Article XVI in its present form in the Covenant, or in its amended form as now proposed, unless in any particular case Congress has authorized such action.

   The United States proposes that Article X and XVI be either dropped altogether or so amended and changed as to eliminate any suggestion of a general agreement to use coercion for obtaining conformity to the pledges of the Covenant.

No Obligations Under Versailles Treaty

3. The United States will accept no responsibilities under the Treaty of Versailles unless in any particular case Congress has authorized such action.

League Open to All Nations

4. The United States Government proposes that Article I of the Covenant be construed and applied, or, if necessary, redrafted, so that admission to the League shall be assured to any self-governing State that wishes to join and that receives the favorable vote of two-thirds of the Assembly.

Development of International Law

5. As a condition of its participation in the work and counsels of the League, the United States asks that the Assembly and Council consent—or obtain authority—to begin collaboration for the revision and development of international law, employing for this purpose the aid of a commission of jurists. This Commission would be directed to formulate anew existing rules of the law of nations, to reconcile divergent opinions, to consider points hitherto inadequately provided for but vital to the maintenance of international justice, and in general to define the social rights and duties of States. The recommendations of the Commission would be presented from time to time, in proper form for consideration, to the Assembly as to a recommending if not a law-making body.

Author's Name Not to Be Revealed Until After Referendum

In order that the vote may be taken solely upon the merits of the plan, the Policy Committee, with the acquiescence of Mr. Bok, has decided not to disclose the authorship of the plan until after the referendum, or early in February. The identity of the author is unknown to the members of the Jury of Award and the Policy Committee, except one delegated member.

POLITICS

By Eric Mayne

The Science of Politics is the intelligent comprehension of our position, and our responsibility as the subjects of a great nation.

The Science of Politics is the Science of regulating a Nation for the preservation of its Safety, Peace and Prosperity.

Theodore Roosevelt tells us—"Practical politics must not be construed to mean dirty politics. The most practical of all politicians is the politician who is clean, and decent, and honest."

Theodore Roosevelt was a practical politician. He practiced what he preached.

The true politician puts the good of the people before party; the purity of principle before policy; the value of honour before office; and the resolute march of progress before power.

If intelligent and responsible people neglect the politics of a country, it is bad for the country and worse for the people.

When men realize their responsibility as men to their nation then law making will be put on a different basis.

Then men will understand that nothing can be politically right, which is not morally right.

Many a politician has buried his patriotism in his political party.

Constant distrust seems to be the only road to political safety.

Nations that should, at the present time, be constructing and developing their countries are spending all their energy and money in fighting over which party shall do the reconstructing and who shall lead the party.

In the flood of political talk, great principles are being washed away.

From incompetent and bungling politicians, Good Lord, deliver all nations.

INFURIATED FILMDOM ARISES TO COMBAT BITTER SHULER ATTACK!

LONDON HAILS NEW COLOR CINEMATOGRAPHY

SON OF FRIESE-GREENE, NOTED BRITISH CINEMA INVENTOR, HAS NEW COLOR PROCESS

An announcement of importance the British film industry, as well in the world of film art and ence, was made the other day, d was hailed as a distinct adncement in cinematography.

That Mr. Claude Friese-Greene d developed an entirely new or film process of remarkable tistic and scientific possibilities s the news which created great erest in London film circles.

Additional interest attaches to s invention by reason of the ct that its creator is the son of e inventor of cinematography, e late Mr. W. Friese-Greene, idely known as the "Father of e Film," whose death, two years o, revived much comment on the hievements of this pioneer in nematographic invention. Mr. iese-Greene's funeral on May th, 1921, was an impressive pube ceremony conducted by leading embers of the British film indus-y.

The son of the originator of nematography has now come forard with an invention which is pected to advance the art and ience of cinematography along any lines. Mr. Claude Friese-reene is only 25 years of age, but as already had much experience the field of film science, and has en experimenting with color cinatography since he was in his ens.

There have been a number of olor film processes invented, but e development of color films that ould be both artistic and comercially practicable has been raught with many difficulties. his new invention is declared by echnical authorities to be entirely uccessful from artistic standpoints nd to have the great advantage f being based on a process by which positive prints can be made s easily and quickly as black-and-white films, tinted, and at a price hat makes the commercial success f the films a certainty. The econmy of the manufacture of the ilms places them within the reach f every exhibitor, and the films re projected by the ordinary quipment.

Although the process is still young, it is said to mark an advance on any color films yet developed. The colors are soft and natural in tone, and there are stereoscopic values which, the inventor declares, will be still more emphasized as his experimentations proceed. Friese-Greene has made wide research in working out his process, and has studied exhaustively the scientific and artistic aspects of light rays and color luminosity.

The story of this invention reads like a romance. Millions have been made through science of cinematography conceived by the late Mr. Friese-Greene, but the inventor himself, after more than a quarter of a century of devoted effort, in the face of every discouragement, died without having received financial reward for his great gift to the millions of the world who find pleasure, recreation and education in the cinema theatres in many countries today. At the time of the inventor's death this statement was printed:

"On June 21st, 1889, Mr. Friese-Greene made provisional application for a world's patent for the first cinematographic machine, and on May 10th, 1890 was granted patent No. 10,301. That patent stands pre-eminent. Mr. Friese-Greene's first motion picture was a street scene taken at Hyde Park Corner. He also was the first to invent the perforated edges in the film. Before he brought out celluloid, he first used paper dipped in oil to make it transparent. He kept on inventing improvements, and spent £20,000 on the work."

Yet, in spite of his great invention, the elder Mr. Friese-Greene was never rewarded for his genius, and never, in fact, recovered the fortune he spent in developing his cinematographic process.

As the younger Mr. Friese-Greene grew from youth to manhood, he observed the trials of his father and realized the tragedy of his failure to profit financially from his invention, but the young man was not deterred by this gloomy prospect from his ambition to contribute something of value to the science originated by his father.

For some time, he has been conducting experiments based upon his original views of light values and color combinations, which have now resulted in the process he has developed. It was only a short time after his father's death that the young inventor discovered the method by which his theories could be embodied in a practical means of projecting color in motion pictures on the screen.

A company has been organized to handle this invention, and an ambitious program has been mapped out for making the most of Friese-Greene's color film process. Offices have been opened by the Company at 17, Shaftesbury Ave., London.

An alert and dynamic factor in the application of tried and true business principles to studio management, and therefore an outstanding figure in the progression of the cinema art as a whole, is M. C. Levee, head of the United Studios, which is just bringing to conclusion the first phase of an elaborate expansion plan designed to meet the needs of the industry for many years to come. It is on men of this kind that Filmdom centers its hopes for the establishment of the motion picture industry prominently in the foreground of the commercial, industrial and artistic activities of our country. He represents the caliber of man we have needed a mighty long time.

Film Folk Pledge Aid in Fight for Truth

Close upon the heels of the stinging denunciation of the motion picture people published a fortnight ago by Bob Shuler, Los Angeles reformist, and the subsequent defi hurled by "Camera!" and Filmograph, the two leading Hollywood film papers, come scores of messages from people in various branches of the industry endorsing the defensive measures adopted by the two publications, and pledging support to the campaign to be waged to secure justice and a public apology from Shuler. The unanimous opinion is that Filmdom has been subjected to abuse too long and most of the folk refer to the Shuler incident as the "last straw."

Tentative arrangements are now under way for a conference between Fred Niblo, nominal target of the tirade, Chris Lykke, editor of Filmograph and Fred W. Fox, editor of "Camera!" to propound ways and means to insure the full success of the program. This meeting will probably be held the first of the week and full details of the conference will be given in next week's issues of the papers.

Sunshine Sammy, one of Hal Roach's much boleved 'lil rascals of "Our Gang" fame sprung a good one when he met big Billy Moon, Hollywood's new 320 pound laugh producer.

Said Sunshine, sheltering his sixty-odd pounds 'neath the rotund Billy Moon's "balcony"—"You sure am lucky, man, that they all called you Billy Moon and me Sunshine, 'cause if they had called you Sunshine Moon and some fool press agent sprung a story 'bout 'interviewing' that 320 pounds of Moon Shine—Oh! Lawdy man, what a riot they would be."

Pat O'Malley, leading man for Laurette Taylor in "Happiness," will spend a month in Ireland next summer.

Pat, accompanied by Mrs. O'Malley and his two daughters "Sheila" and "Little Lady Eileen," will visit the home of his parents and take his first rest in years, among his countrymen.

Mary Pickford has finished "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" and is now aiding in the editing. The premiere of this film will take place in New York about March 1st and, of course, she will be there with Doug, following which they will leave on an extended tour of Europe, including in their itinerary those points of interest in England, France, Belgium, Denmark, Sweden, Norway and other countries that they were forced to pass up during their last trip owing to scarcity of time.

DIRECTOR SAYS TALKING FILMS WILL REFINE SCRIPTS; NEW SCHOOL OF WRITERS

Talking motion pictures can not be practical until the art of scenario writing is reduced to a science even more exact than the technic of legitimate stageplay writing, is the opinion of George Melford.

Scenarios, as they are now written, are rudely constructed affairs, declares Melford. Seldom, if ever, is a completed picture similar to the original working script. Writers, technical supervisors, directors, cutters, titlers and editors habitually make changes while the photoplays are in course of production. In addition, individual changes are quite often made by theater managers or censors in various locales.

"Talking motion pictures must be continuous in action to be successful, just as the stage play is. The scenario must be letter-perfect, for there can be no changes after action and conversation have been recorded together. The present inferiority of photoplay continuities must undergo a tremendous change before the talking movies can be practical."

Melford asserts his belief that the coming of the "conversational movies" will result in an entirely new and far more efficient school of scenario writers within the film industry. These new writers, he thinks, will be the students with years of training in both the technique of the stage and of the screen.

Theodore von Eltz has entered 1924 with a bang, for this capable actor is now negotiating a role in Cecile De Mille's "Triumph" and is also signed for Herbert Brenon's production "The Breaking Point," both for Paramount. He will commence the second picture at the end of the week and will of necessity be doubling up in the two productions.

Mr. von Eltz has been in the film colony three years and has done consistently fine work.

Statesmen Witness Griffith Filming

Two former ambassadors and a former secretary of the treasury were among a party of distinguished guests who recently watched the filming of several scenes for "America," the screen epic of the Revolution which D. W. Griffith is making for the D. A. R. at his Mamaroneck studios.

Dr. Charles R. Crane, former minister to China, Richard Crane, former minister to Jugo-Slavia, Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Houston, the former one-time secretary of the treasury, Sir Percy Sykes of London, Eng., Mrs. Leatherbee of Westover, Va., and D. M. Brodie were among a notable group which watched Lionel Barrymore and Carol Dempster, Griffith's leading woman, enact some of the more stirring scenes for the new film.

The Crane family owns the famous Westover estate on the James River, in Virginia, where Griffith "shot" a number of Revolutionary scenes for "America," using prominent Southern society women and Revolutionary descendants as extra people.

on't Harp on Heroes, Admonition of Lewis

Ralph Lewis says no actor uld play a hero too long without changing his pace. Lewis says is never going to play a hero re than two times in succession the future, and would preferenact a role where the characerization is rather unsympatic than otherwise. He states t his role of the dogmatic Stoneman in Griffith's "Birth of a Nan" and the grasping miser in "he Conquering Power" have ed much longer in the memory theatre-goers than any of the timental hero roles he ever enged.

NO LOCATION TRIPS ON CURRENT COOGAN FILM; L. A. UNSUITABLE

The topography of Los Angeles and vicinity, for the first time in film history, fails to offer suitable locations for a film production. Scouts sent out by Jack Coogan, senior, to "spot" locations for Jackie's new picture, "A Boy of Flanders," returned after weeks of exhaustive exploration which included practically every foot of California soil, but nowhere could they find country similar to that of Flanders. The cities and countryside of the low flat Flemish variety provide the locale of Jackie's adaptation of Ouida's child classic, "A Dog of Flanders." The entire action of the play takes place in and about St. Agnetin, a small Flemish village, and Antwerp, which at one time was larger than London, and famed as a clearing house of precious gems and as the center for art and artists.

So Jackie Coogan and his company will not be obliged to go outside the confines of the big Metro studios in Hollywood for any scenes in the picture. Antwerp has been transplanted to Hollywood—dykes, canals, windmills and all of the other picturesque objects that adorn the Flemish countryside have been faithfully constructed to meet the requirements of the story. More than three hundred scenes have been written into the script, all of which will be filmed on the studio grounds.

"A Boy of Flanders," with its tender theme of love, service and ambition, is one of the immortal little classics of child fiction, and promises to be Jackie Coogan's most quaint and delightful picture to date.

Looks Rather Bad for the Boys, Tho

Katherine Grant, popular winner of a recent Los Angeles beauty contest, now playing a prominent role in George Archainbaud's new production, "The Plunderer," has started something now on the Fox lot. Miss Grant, as talented as she is beautiful, disliked waiting between scenes, so decided to capitalize on the spare time. Accordingly, she organized a reading class comprised of the girls working in "The Plunderer." They are now reading Barrie's "Quality Street." Each role is assigned to a person and the play is carried on. Miss Grant's reading class has proved a big hit.

Learn to Let 'Em Kid You, Says Hersholt

Jean Hersholt who is now playing one of the principal supporting roles with Constance Talmadge in "The Goldfish," had his first stage experience in Denmark where for several seasons he was one of the best-known leading men on the Danish stage.

Hersholt says that he European films can never compete with American screen dramas if for no other reason than the failure of the European artists to properly understand and appreciate the American sense of humor.

Almost every European actor devotes hour after hour attempting to so comprehend the American sense of humor that he can put it into his acting. But the more he attempts to learn it in Europe the worse off he seems to be.

Hersholt says it took him at least two years after he came to America to get onto the American habit of kidding. Until the time comes when a foreign actor can have two or three years in American-made pictures or spend the same amount of time on the American stage, there will never be any fear of foreign countries rivaling America as the big film production center.

Blanche Sweet's "California Top" hairdress is becoming popular among movie fanettes throughout the country.

The frizz-top effect which has been pictured in the newspapers has come into vogue among many of Miss Sweet's followers, according to letters received by the actress.

Gowland Home in Path of Beach Fire

Gibson Gowland, who plays McTeague in Erich von Stroheim's Goldwyn production of "Greed," nearly lost his life and valuable personal property in the recent fire that burned a large part of Ocean Park. Gowland lives on the edge of the district that was destroyed in the conflagration. When the fire broke out he first took his son to a safety zone.

He then returned to his dwelling and began moving the most valuable pieces in his collection of art and curios, which he had gathered during years of travel all over the world. Automobiles could not approach the raging flames as near as his house is, so the actor attempted to carry by hand as many pieces as he could.

While he was thus engaged a call for volunteers went out, to assist in rescuing some invalids. He ceased attempting to save his own stuff and turned to the other work. Working frantically in the smoke-filled street, he narrowly escaped being hit by the automobile of a speeding fire chief.

Owing to the direction of the wind Gowland's place of living was not destroyed by the flames. The outside was scorched, however.

"MAGNOLIA" TEACHES LANDIS MANY NEW THINGS; LEARNS ABOUT GENTLEMEN

Cullen Landis confesses that there is always something more to learn in pictures. Never has the young actor, who is male lead in the James Cruze production "Magnolia" now being filmed at the Lasky Studios for Paramount learned more than in this production. With charming naivette he has handed himself over to wholesale instruction and with aptitude he has learned to fight, to do a little killing and shuffle the cards and win the stakes! His teacher is Ernest Torrence and his instruction has been most complete.

As "Tom Rumford" in "Magnolia" Cullen has been cast out by his family because he doesn't measure up to the standards of a southern gentleman. So he enters the gambling den of General Jackson (Ernest Torrence) and learns pronto that all there is about being a gentleman is to move first and move right. Putting into the dialogue that is falling from the lips of these two who have many scenes together the curious minded, always intent on learning something more can add this to his knowledge.

Cullen—Men fight for their honor, they say.

Ernest—They can afford to when they figger they can win.

Cullen—I've heard they fight sometimes because they are game.

Ernest—What is a game man? He's a man that keeps on fightin' because he hasn't found out he can't win. Look hyup. What is honuh?

Cullen—It's something they say I didn't have.

Ernest—If a man insults yo' 'honuh' it's because he thinks he can kill you if you resent it. Well, then, what is it he insults?

Cullen—It's my character, I guess.

Ernest—Nothing of the kind. It's yo' ability to kill him.

Cullen graduated this week from the Jackson school of the southern code and was seen returning to the old home after a seven years absence driving ahead of him another southern gentleman attired in feminine toggery. The usual wardrobe had been left on the gaming table, it was said!

Anna Q. Not Cut Out for Milkmaid

Anna Q. Nilsson attempted milking the family cow yesterday morning, down on the old farm—oh, yes, Anna is now on the farm, with an R. F. D. address 'n'everything. Says it rather hurries her to get through at the studio in time to do the evening chores, but Anna Q. is strenuous, any way, so she doesn't mind. The milking attempt covered her with glory—and with milk, and now she's looking for one of these automatic milkers, or whatever they call them. She doesn't have so far to go to work, now, as she is through with Richard Walton Tully's "Flowing Gold" and engaged upon "Broadway After Dark," at Warner Bros. She says it's more a case of Ventura Boulevard after dark, however.

Fast Work on "Sea Hawk" Rushes

Frank Lloyd, who has established numerous motion picture records by the size of his four Seventeenth Century ships, the size and efficiency of his camp for 600 men on the Isthmus on Catalina during the filming of early scenes for "The Sea Hawk" has added another to his list of attainments.

That he might see the scenes taken of a spirited sea battle between two of his ships before he changed locations, Mr. Lloyd sent two reels of the day's scenes with Edward M. Roskam, his film editor, to the studio and return by special aeroplane, saving eight hours, which with the rainy season threatening and a camp of 60 0to with after, is a noteworthy saving.

During the past few days Mr. Lloyd has taken full advantage of the good weather and sun and has completed nearly four prominent sequences for "The Sea Hawk" without dropping behind on his schedule. Meanwhile Camp Lloyd, said to be the most sanitary and comfortable location site ever established by a producer, continues without an accident or sick case to mar its record.

Milton Sills, Wallace Beery, Enid Bennett, Lloyd Hughes, William Collier, Jr., Frank Currier, Fred De Silva, Albert Prisco, George Romain and Christine Mott are the principals who have been busy at Camp Lloyd thus far. Wallace MacDonald will be added to the cast within a few days, it is said.

Will H. Hays, czar of filmdom, is expected to pay a visit to Camp Lloyd within the next week as is also Richard A. Rowland, general manager for Associated First National, who is expected in Hollywood tomorrow.

Melodrama With Us Always, Says Kenyon

According to Charles Kenyon, prominent playwright and scenarist, melodrama occupies the same place in the field of entertainment as does serge among men's suits, and bread, butter and eggs among groceries! It is a staple article. On the speaking stage, where popular preference expresses itself in cycles, there is a flood of melodramatic successes every three or four years. In the film world, a somewhat similar condition exists, although the cycles are not so simply defined.

Certainly, insofar as melodrama is concerned, the public demand exists always, with never-lessened fervor. In fact, melodrama is often even forcibly inserted into stories where it does not actually belong, because of its great appeal. But the hundred per cent melodrama is always a consistent winner among the photoplays.

At the present time, Charles Kenyon is writing an original melodramatic story for John Gilbert, a Fox star, with a New York locale.

Finds Her Dramatic Niche

Several months ago Charlotte Merriam graduated from comedy leads and entered the dramatic field. After being loaned by the Christie organization for roles in several feature productions including "The 'Nth Commandment," and "The Brass Bottle," she came to the conclusion she had served a sufficient apprenticeship as a comedienne and severed her ties with Christie.

Immediately thereafter she assumed one of the principal roles in "The Swamp Angel," and at the Vitagraph studios under the direction of W. S. Smith.

Will Write Odes to Water Nymphs

The 1924 production schedule at the Mack Sennett Studio involves many changes in personnel, most recent of which is the addition the the publicity department of Agnes K. O'Malley.

Miss O'Malley has been associated with Principal Pictures Corporation in similar work for the past year, before which she was connected with the publicity department of Richard Walton Tully.

The 1924 crop of Sennett Bathing Beauties will claim the most of Miss O'Malley's attention.

Will Teach Cast to Order Ravioli

An instructor in Italian is conducting a class for a half-hour every day at the Goldwyn Studios. He is teaching the language to the members of the cast and the technical crew that will go to Rome to film "Ben Hur." Among the members of the class are June Mathis, editorial director, who wrote the "Ben Hur" scenario, George Walsh, who plays the title role, Carmel Myers, the Iras, Francis X. Bushman, the Messala, Kathleen Key, the Tirzah, Gertrude Olmsted, the Esther, and Aubrey Scotto, chief cutter.

Henry King has been gone from our midst for some time for New York and foreign countries have been the locale of his directorial activities. Dick Barthelmess got away to a flying start with his new company a year or so ago when he signed King to wield the megaphone simply because he had a man who knew his stuff. "Tol'able David" and "Sonny" alone would prove that. Not content with this, however, King went to Italy and made "The White Sister," and the national verdict from exhibitor and public alike has classified it as one of the screen's finest works. We don't like to refer to Henry King as a "genius;" he's too much the down-to-earth regular man for that and his innate modesty would probably cause him to refuse such bouquets. But we can say this; he has made pictures that have brought tears to our eyes, sunshine to our hearts and thrills to skip across a palpitating pulse. And after all is said and done what we need in motion pictures today, is directors that can get the reaction from the audience . . . men with understanding.

COHN WILL GIVE ADDED IMPETUS TO INDEPENDENT GROWTH; NEW SYSTEM

According to local officials of the Waldorf Studios new plans and methods of national distribution for independent film productions are to be announced by Harry Cohn president and general manager of the Waldorf Studios upon his arrival here from the east next week.

Heretofore there has been much dissatisfaction among the independent film men because of the inefficient and costly methods employed in getting their product to the exhibitor throughout the country.

At a recent conference in New York attended by the officials of the C. B. C. corporation including Cohn his brother Jack and Joe Brandt, a plan was devised to permit the company to advance cash to independent producers upon delivery of their negatives to the distributing company, thus assisting the small independents in the matter of financing their future productions. Also, the company will purchase outright the most desirable product of the independents and Cohn has instructed his local manager to secure pictures for consideration by his company pending his arrival here.

Waldorf Productions, one of the larger independent producing companies controlled by Cohn, plans to produce a series of twelve super productions for release during the ensuing year by C. B. C. The first of this number will be "Pal o' Mine," an original story which will be filmed under the direction of Edward Le Sain immediately following Cohn's arrival here.

Lewis and Bill Hart Plans Same

Rob Lewis may enact the role of Patrick Henry in a big story of the American Revolution as his next characterization.

He has just received a wire from a syndicate of Eastern capitalists asking him if he would come to New York to make the one picture here.

The roster of cinema prodigies must hereafter contain the name of Jackie Morgan if it is to be complete. For his delightful and mischievous portrayals of Chester Gump in "The Gumps," the series of comedies adapted from Sid Smith's comic strip, have figured greatly in his advancement. He is a conscientious kid. More power to him!

Legit Characterist With Rawlinson

Norman MacGregor, for fifteen years a character actor on the legitimate stage, who came to California recently from New York City to appear in his first California film play has been cast for one of the main roles in "Clay of Ca'lina," Herbert Rawlinson's new starring feature.

Production has just started on the Rawlinson film at Universal City under the direction of Irving Cummings. Rawlinson plays the title role, that of a "Southern Gentleman," late of South Caroline, proprietor of a Tijunga "hall of chance."

In the cast are Alice Lake, who played in two Irving Cummings productions, "Chicago Sal," and "Broken Hearts of Broadway" and many other notable film plays of the past few years, Edwin J. Brady, famous character actor and "heavy," Jim Blackwell and Robert Walker.

Little Dorothy Seay has just finished playing the part of a little French artist's model in "The Apache" with John Gilbert at the Fox studios, under the direction of Edward Mortimer.

Hergesheimer Says Film Is Okeh

Hark ye—baiters of motion pictures. Silence—cynics of the silver sheet. Listen—you who think every novel made into film is distorted, and causes its author intense pain.

Joseph Hergesheimer, one of America's great novelists, sends the following telegram concerning the Goldwyn film version of "Wild Oranges":

"Give everybody in the production of 'Wild Oranges' my endless thanks. I am quite speechless with delight. From the author's viewpoint it is perfection. It has passion, atmosphere, truth and perfect development. Its timing is faster and more uninterrupted than any other picture ever made. There is not an inch of bunk in it. Everything is fine, dignified, revelant and stirring. The camera and setting were superb. Each part was played with the utmost delicacy, correctness and beauty. Again thank you.

Joseph Hergesheimer."

There is no fanfare or blowing of trumpets where Lloyd Hamilton is concerned. But the proof of his popularity with the masses, from Judy O'Grady to the Governor's Lady, is evidenced in the excellent manner in which his comedies have been received through the years. His outstanding assets are naturalness and a corkscrew walk that utterly defies imitation coupled with an angelic expression beyond simple description. Here's a hand to "Ham"!

Lee Finds Bananas Popular Abroad

That Europeans are adopting American jazz is the interesting observation made in a letter from Rowland V. Lee, Hollywood film director now travelling on the Continent. In the letter, received by his brother, Robert N. Lee, prominent scenario writer, the director states that in Paris, Vienna, and other cities he finds that in the music halls the most popular song is "Yes, We Have No Bananas."

William Clifford has decided to abandon his stage work and enter pictures once more.

His last screen role was with Norma Talmadge in "Ashes of Vengeance."

Jackson Play for Fritzi Brunette

Fritzi Brunette is the latest motion picture star to go into vaudeville. She is now rehearsing "Puppets of the Public," a one-act play of studio life by Joseph Jackson, president of the Wampas. The star will be supported by her husband, Robert Daley, well-known actor-director, and by Jack Mower, leading man of many films.

The act will play at Sacramento and Fresno and then have its metropolitan opening at the Hillstreet Theatre, Los Angeles.

Miss Brunette is practically new to the stage, her only other experience having been in a sketch also by Mr. Jackson at a local benefit.

SINCERITY WILL MAKE OR BREAK PICTURE, SAYS FOX; TEMPO MUST BE KEPT

Finis Fox, who is now producing "A Woman Who Sinned" at the Hollywood Studios, with an all-star cast, says that the greatest trait in players that can either make or break a big picture production is sincerity in their acting. According to Finis, the great job a director has is to keep his players instilled with the proper tempo and yet at the same time restrain them from displaying too much emotion.

"Actors and actresses are like sensitively tuned instruments," added Finis. "They usually put forth all their efforts to register just the shade of emotion wanted by the director. If the director does not have the judgment and intuition to know just what should be obvious and just what should be suppressed from an emotional standpoint on the part of his players, then he has no business in directing pictures. There is many a splendid artist who has been almost ruined by improper direction. Great screen artists have been accused of exaggeration and overacting when really it was simply a case of poor direction. A player knows intuitively when he or she is over-acting and when the realization comes, they cannot help but lose their sincerity because they know they are not being sincere with themselves."

"When the players lose this sincerity, it is almost certain to result in a poor or mediocre picture because when persons in a theatre audience realize that the players are working in a forced and restrained manner, they lose interest in the picture. When the audience fails to take an interest, it means nothing else but that the picture is a flivver," concluded Finis.

"A Woman Who Sinned" is enacted by an unusually strong all-star cast including Mae Busch, Irene Rich, Morgan Wallace, Rex Lease and others.

Unique Stunt for "Wild Oranges" Premiere

An order for one hundred crates of oranges was mailed to a California orange dealer this week by a big theatre in a middle Western city. The California fruit is to be given away at the opening of "Wild Oranges," a Goldwyn picture featuring Virginia Valli.

At the same time, a message received at Miss Valli's home here stated that efforts would be made to persuade the star to stop over on her way back to Hollywood from New York. If she does agree to stop, she will be given the task of personally presenting the oranges to patrons of the theater.

GIVES TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR NEW SCREEN WRITERS; HAS ENCOURAGEMENT

Winifred Dunn, Metro scenario editor, now adapting "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," offers the following ten rules for budding scenario writers:

1. Fewer and better scenarios.

2. Be original when you see a good picture, don't go home and rewrite it.

3. Read the daily papers—reporters know human drama; study their work.

4. Write what you know — a bookkeeper can seldom speak convincingly of adventure in the South Seas or at the North Pole.

5. Be human—don't assume a superiority to potential audiences.

6. Be honest—honesty means convincingness and that spells popular approval.

7. Persevere—don't lose courage if your first fifty scenarios are rejected; the first fifty are the hardest.

8. Don't fear studio plagiarism; deal with legitimate organizations, which do not steal ideas any more than a legitimate bank steals money.

9. Learn another profession or trade; three regular meals a day keeps your attitude to life normal and pleasant, as it must be for success.

10. Fewer and better scenarios—first, last and all the time. One good scenario has a better chance of acceptance than a hundred poor ones.

Dick Sutherland, hailed by many as "the ugliest man on the screen" has completed one of the principal parts in "Defiance" which was filmed at the Hollywood studios by the Brush productions.

Hurry! Watson! The Smelling Salts!

Jean Hersholt, who is supporting Constance Talmadge in "The Gold Fish" has just received a fan letter from a young college student in Kansas who says that inasmuch as Jean must be well acquainted in Hollywood would he please tell the writer what was the college yell of one of the scenario schools that taught by mail.

Fort Completes F. B. O. Continuity

Garrett Elsden Fort, special writer for Truart, has completed the continuity of an original story for Richard Talmadge, entitled "In Fast Company." Production is scheduled to start almost immediately, at the F. B. O. studios, under the direction of Jimmie Horne, whose latest Douglas MacLean success, "The Yankee Consul," will have an early release. Mr. Fort's second story under his new Truart contract will be an adaptation of a novelette by John Brownell, for Elaine Hammerstein, who is expected back from her vacation in New York very soon.

A new sign was discovered on the Fox lot the other day on the comedy side. It read: "Owing to inclement weather, there will be no bananas today." Being a classical interpretation of the w. k. song, we offer it for your edification.

Hunter Is Crook in Film Guild Picture

Glenn Hunter, the youthful star who has been swept into popularity through his wistful tender portrayals of awkward country boys and whose own ambitions took him away from the small town of Highland Mills, New York, where he was "raised and bred," will be seen in an entirely new role in "Grit," an original crook story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, which has been adapted for the screen by James Ashmore Creelman.

In this picture, which completes the series of Film Guild productions in which Glenn Hunter is starred, Glenn leaves his usual background of "the wide open spaces" to play the role of Kid Hart, a boy crook of the East Side, who is generally known as "the best lock-pick of the gang!"

The Kid is a pathetic half starved youngster who has inherited a fear of guns which makes him the laughing stock of his companions but his love for Orchid McGonigle who is not afraid to leave the gang and go straight, finally makes a man of him.

Clara Bow plays the part of Orchid and there is a fine supporting cast including Roland Young, Dore Davidson, Osgood Perkins, Townsend Martin, Helenka Adamowaska, Joseph Depew and Martin Broder.

Grauman Keeps Role in Taylor Family

Sid Grauman evidently determined to keep the portrayal of "Miriam" in "The Ten Commandments" in the Taylor family.

On the screen of Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in DeMille's production, Estelle Taylor portrays the character of "Miriam" and wins many new admirers daily through her presentation of this part.

On the stage, in the elaborate prologue to the film, Helen Taylor, sister ot Estelle, portrays the character in the flesh.

When casting his prologue Mr. Grauman sought a player who resembled Estelle Taylor and asked her if she could recommend one. That same day she received a letter from her sister, who was living at the family home in Wilmington, Del., begging her for an opportunity to come to Hollywood. She told Mr. Grauman. He wired an offer to Wilmington. Sister Helen came and through her close resemblance to Estelle Taylor, more marked when she is in the costume worn by "Miriam," was immediately engaged by Mr. Grauman.

Ralph Lewis is going to Sacramento as the guest of the Sacramento Chamber of Commerce, to make a personal appearance there during the showing of "The Mail Man" in which he plays the starring role.

The screen today has no ... exponent of realism than Ru... Simpson. He is an actor who ... pletely submerges his own per... ality into the characteriza... And he has fought his way t... top through the hard schoo... Time and Experience. Al... which is double reason why ... should see more of him!

SYD CHAPLIN COMPLETES "GALLOPING FISH" ROLE; IS LAUDED BY NATHA...

His recently seen characterization of the cockney soldier in Marshall Neilan's "The Rendezvous" was Sydney Chaplin's first screen appearance in many moons. It was notable, not only for the signal manner in which he "stole the picture," in the minds of the public and the critics, but also because this time Syd Chaplin is going to stay on the screen permanently. "Her Temporary Husband," which has already had its New York premier and which will be shown locally soon, features him as its principal comedian and advices from the East credit him with another remarkable performance in this production.

Chaplin's most ambitious screen characterization will be revealed in Thos. H. Ince's production, "The Galloping Fish," just completed. In this picture, he has created a type which is somewhat along the lines of the over-bashful, self-conscious figure he contributed to "The Pilgrim." As the husband of a devoted, yet excessively jealous young wife, played by Lucille Ricksen—with whom, incidentally, he appeared in "The Rendezvous"—he pictures the trials and tribulations of his type.

The most flattering tribute ever paid to a screen player was recently received by Sydney Chaplin, when George Jean Nathan, avowed film-hater, declared—in his recently published book, "The Drama and the Girls"—"I am very ... interested in the work of Sy... Chaplin. I consider him the ... most comedian on the scree... day."

other K. O. Blow ealt Mong Vacation

illiam V. Mong has again been denied the vacation he has looked forward with regularity to at the conclusion of each of the pictures he has appeared in for the past three years. But recently he finished an important characterization in Fred Niblo's production of "Thy Name is Woman" and he at once prepared for a pleasure trip through the Pacific Northwest.

No sooner did he get his trunk packed, however, than he was ordered by the Grand-Asher company to play the leading character role in "Rose of the Ghetto" to go into production next week under the direction of Roy Neil. But this time Mong has been granted a three-day furlough in order to permit him to attend the big Wampas Frolic and Ball at San Francisco. Immediately upon his return from the Bay City he will begin work at the Grand-Asher studios.

nway Tearle's performance in Ashes of Vengeance" opposite Norma Talmadge is rated the best work of his screen career by the membership of the Movie Club of Harlem, New York.

The club comprises a membership of 500 ardent movie fans who pass upon productions and the work of players at weekly meetings. A vote of the membership showed that fifty-eight per cent of the members proclaimed Tearle's work in this picture the best characterization of the month. Ninety-eight per cent of the members voted his portrayal to be the best of his career, according to communication received by the actor yesterday.

HAS PRODUCED FILM WITH ROYAL CAST; MAKES DRAMA OF WEDDING PRESENTS

Denison Clift, noted director, who arrives here next month to begin a two-year contract with the Fox Studios, after four years spent in production work in England, will doubtless have many interesting tales to unfold to his brother directors and friends but perhaps none will be as romantic as his version of the filming of some scenes within the sacred portals of St. Jame's Palace, London.

For it was Clift, a young American, who was selected to "shoot" Princess Mary's wedding presents at the time of her marriage a little over a year ago. The filming ot the affair was rather a remarkable undertaking as it was the first occasion on which motion picture cameras had been allowed inside the palace grounds. Permission to film the great array of costly gifts was granted by the king and the cinematographers were given every facility in their work.

During the process of "shooting," Princess Mary and Lord Lascelles visited the palace and showed great interest in the work.

The royal couple commended Clift for the manner in which he handled the situation and after viewing the finished film sent him a note of thanks.

During his stay in England Clift has on various occasions come in contact with the royalty and aristocracy of that country and numbered among his staunchest friends are Lord and Lady Asquith.

Immediately following his arrival here next month, Clift will begin work at the Fox Studios on a series of special productions the first of which will be an adaptation of a widely-read Robert W. Chambers novel.

Mrs. Clift, who has visited her husband three times during his stay in England, will greet him in San Francisco when he steps oti the boat on February sixth. The couple will start for this city at once.

Jean Hersholt wears an extensive wardrobe, ranging from overalls to dinner clothes, in his role of the German, supporting Constance Talmadge in "The Gold Fish."

Thomas Mills, formerly a well known director, has been engaged for a prominent role in support of John Gilbert in "The Apache," now being made at the Fox Studios... Mr. Mills plays the role of the priest.

Schoolgirls Feted At Sills Manse

The Milton Sills home in Hollywood was the scene of a delightful informal party on Saturday afternoon when Miss Dorothy Sills entertained a number of her class mates of the Hollywood School for Girls. The guests included Virginia White, Paggy Johnston, Harlene Carpenter, Helen Armstrong, Katherine Toberman, Dorothy Irving, Ruth Spendrup and Marjorie Kandall.

Hugh Saxon, whose versatility as an actor has gained him prominent parts in several of the biggest pictures, among them being "The Covered Wagon," "The Ten Commandments" and the "Hunchback of Notre Dame," is now on the Hal Roach lot with the "Spat Family," portraying the same part that brought him such favorable comment in the last named feature—that of the drunken rowdy. It must be admitted that that is one of the hardest things to do these days.

GRIFFITH PRODUCTION IS HAMPERED BY LACK OF FROZENSTREAMS

The backward winter has hit the movies hard. Companies planning to take snow and ice scenes during the cold weather have had their entire schedules upset by the warm weather and its lack of ice and snow. D. W. Griffith's photodrama of the War of Independence, "America," perhaps the biggest of all the many pictures waiting on the weatherman, is reported to be one of the hardest hit of all. There is no sign of heavy ice on the historic Delaware River, and in consequence Griffith has been forced to eliminate the scene of Washington crossing that ice bound stream. He sent scouts to Canada in the hope of finding a moving stream there all frozen up ready for the camera. They found a plentitude of frozen lakes, but the rivers had but a thin coating of ice, and in many cases flocks of wild ducks were still making their home there. Which caused Griffith to redouble his prayers for immediate snow at Valley Forge.

THE FIRST COMMANDMENT

[Shuler at the Shrine of Publicity]

By FRED W. FOX

"Thou shalt have no other gods before me." This, Exodus 20:4 informs us, is the first of the Ten Commandments. It has a wealth of meaning and is easily applicable to many modern situations, one in particular, of which more anon.

One evening last week, after a rather hectic day, I journeyed to Grauman's Hollywood playhouse to see Cecil B. De Mille's latest cinema offering, "The Ten Commandments." It was more at the instigation of friends who had seen it, and were long and loud in their praises of it, that I went; in short curiosity impelled me to go and see for myself just what there was to this picture that should cause so many of those to whom I had spoken to classify it as a masterpiece. I have never been very fond of De Mille's works and I didn't relish sitting through the same hackneyed plot of risque trend that characterized so many of his productions. I had assumed that he had injected the usual amount of delicate atmosphere into "The Ten Commandments," too, and I was somewhat bewildered as to what might be the attraction that was drawing such unusual comment. And I am certainly glad I went, for it sure "packs an awful wallop." It is age-old truth given to us in a modern, understandable way and it puts thoughts into our heads that should have been there long ere this. Further than that, however, it proved to be a Biblical treatise that afforded me with some rare insight into the present chaotic conditions in Christendom. It proved to me that there are some emissaries of Almighty God who are not abiding by those Ten Commandments that are the foundation of the Church. "The Ten Commandments" has a message of great worth for every one of you that you cannot afford to miss. Do away with all your previous conc tions of De Mille as a producer of risque pictures. T production changes his place in the ranks of the Cinem creative artists. It is superb . . . magnificent . powerful. There are times when one's breath alm stops; the impressiveness of some of the scenes are s focating. And to me the greatest touches were wh Theodore Roberts, as Moses, was receiving the Co mandments on Mount Sinai, and Ralph Cloninger, as Israelite slave, was crushed to death beneath the wh of a huge stone-wagon.

* * * *

Yes, it is to you, Bob Shuler, that I say: see "The Commandments." It will definitely prove to you t Motion Pictures are the greatest educational and in ential medium in existence today. I would suggest t you pay particularly close attention to the scene on Mount. You will note with what thunderbolt swiftn and directness the Commandments are presented on screen. Dwell for an instant on that First Comma ment . . . "Thou Shalt Have No Other Gods Bef Me." Have you ever heard that before? This was word of God to his wayward people, who had ab doned their worship of him to gather at the shrine of golden calf. Later, when Moses came down from Mount and saw the revelry and licentiousness that rampant in the camp of the Israelites he roared to th to cease lest the wrath of God be visited upon them. even while they stood and listened to him a terrific th derbolt struck the idol they had built and utterly troyed it. It restored them to their senses.

The First Commandment

Watch carefully that scene where the Pharaoh orders the exhausted slave to be ground to death beneath the wheels of the wagon. Note the cruelty pictured on the face of the ruler, and the horrible look of anguish and fright come upon the face of the doomed man. For you there is a great simile to be drawn therefrom. Even as Israel turned away from God to worship an idol so have you turned away from your duties as the head of a great Los Angeles church, where you have been instituted with the respect and confidence of your congregation because they believe in you as a constructive factor in the civic and religious life of Los Angeles and our country. Yes, you have turned your face to worship at the shrine of another god . . . Publicity. You have decided to become a destructive obstacle in the path to universal salvation. As the dying mother in De Mille's picture said to her wayward and repentant son, "I have taught you to fear God and not love him, and I have been wrong, for Love is the salvation of the world," even so have you said to us, "I am better than you; to you I can use abusive language, insult, and smutty words, for I am the representative of God and am far above you. I will teach you to fear me, and force you to recognize me as the dictator. Fear, not Love, is what counts."

Even as you have elected to direct a vicious attack upon our character and efforts, so have we elected to defend ourselves. For as sure as you worship at the false shrine of Publicity and abandon your duties as the ambassador of the Almighty, so will justice overtake you. Like Pharaoh and the slave, you are trying to crush us beneath the wheels of falsehood and misrepresentation, and the light of lust and hate shines in your eyes as you rub your palms and say to yourself, "well done, well done. Now I will be great!" But you have not reckoned with an aroused Filmdom! WE ARE GOING TO FIGHT—TO THE FINISH! EITHER YOU ARE GOING TO MAKE PUBLIC RETRACTION OF YOUR EDITORIAL TIRADE AGAINST FILMDOM OR THE MOTION PICTURE PEOPLE WILL BE KNOWN AS FOLK WITH NO SELF-RESPECT. ONE OR THE OTHER IS INEVITABLE. "CAMERA!" AND FILMOGRAPH, THE TWO LEADING HOLLYWOOD FILM PUBLICATIONS, HAVE PLEDGED THEIR ENTIRE RESOURCES AND EFFORTS TO MAKE YOU APOLOGIZE. WE WILL FIGHT YOU AS YOU HAVE FOUGHT US; GO TO THE PEOPLE WITH THE ISSUE. WE CAN GET THE POWER AND WE WILL DO IT. The fighting spirit of the film world has been dormant for a long, long time but an infuriated people are now preparing for combat. We have been subjected to every conceivable kind of besmirching from all corners of the earth and we've decided that the thing has got to stop. IT WILL! WE DEFY YOU TO PROVE ANY OF YOUR FALSEHOODS! WHERE CAN YOU PROVE THAT MINISTERS HAVE BEEN OF HIGHER MORAL CALIBER THAN THE PEOPLE OF THE STAGE AND SCREEN? WHO IS IT THAT RAISES THE HUGE BENEFIT FUNDS IN ALL QUARTERS OF THE GLOBE. THE PEOPLE OF THE THEATER AND SCREEN! AND WHAT HAVE YOU DONE—WHAT? Your mad chase after sensational publicity has caused more sorrow and heartaches than anything all the so-called heretics in motion pictures have ever done. One thing is certain, they have obeyed God's admonition to care for their fellow-men. They have obeyed His order to "go out unto all creation and preach the Gospel." The Gospel of Filmdom is Tolerance and Faith; knowing that our brethren have the failings all other human beings have. Those that are wayward we try to lead to the light; if they prove themselves of unworthy timber Filmdom deals with them. De Mille and his "Ten Commandments" have done more for Christendom than a thousand of your ilk, for it embodies the highest ideals of life, as taught us in the Commandments, and by the Man of Nazareth.

"Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

"Thou shalt not make unto thee a graven image, nor any likeness OF ANYTHING that is in heaven above or that is in the earth beneath."

"Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

Wampas Wails

By PETE SMITH

Two members were seen laughing at this column last time.

They were the writer and one of his hired men.

The office cat was also amused.

When torn out of the page and rolled into a ball any kitten will have fun with this column.

Rumor has it that Charlie Condon will attend a meeting one of these days.

Ray Leek continues to play host to the boys. At a party given last week in the discarding room, the writer acted as first assistant host.

Harry Brand is considering ways and means of collecting a two hundred dollar debt. Mayhap one of your trick post cards will do it, Harry.

If you haven't made your reservations for the Wampas Frolic and Ball you belong to the small minority. Do it now.

Hold this column to the light, close your eyes, hold your breath, stand on your head and you'll qualify for the chairmanship of a regular Wampas meeting.

Screenland Magazine has not as yet sent its wires of best wishes on the Wampas Ball to President Jackson.

Don Eddy and Joe Reddy went duck hunting last week end. The net results of the trip were two stiff necks, three blow-outs, 24 hours minus sleep, no duck but lots of goose flesh—particularly at 4:30 A. M., whilst patiently waiting for the elusive bird in mud to the waist.

And they claim they had a great time.

Sam Goldwyn says there are only thirty-three good actors in Hollywood.

Arch Reeve says there are only three good press agents in Hollywood.

Bill Henry agrees with Arch and wants to know, who are the other two.

If they used a lot of different type on this column it might at least look funny.

For the information of Sam Cohn, spelled without an e, this column was reprinted in the Record last week.

Dick Spier is suggested for the post of treasurer to the Wampas Ball.

Art Hegerman denies that he has become an honorary member of the Ancient Order of Firebugs.

He claims he had nothing more to do with the big Universal fire story which appeared on the front pages than to light a match to a lot of gasoline.

Arch Reeve please note.

When it comes to building fires, Arch has much to learn from Art.

Mike Boylan says "mention First National," but we won't.

Vision and Service

By LUCILE ERSKINE

he Mathis' rise to success is worthy of a st in the New Arabian Nights of Holly-w. The teller of the tale would begin so thing like this:

t so long ago in this very Bagdad, where all ho enter its gates poor hope to grab fame an fortune over night, an obscure group was on making a picture. But the rest of the pro-fes on called them Ingram's idiots because the bo then being ¬icturized had been refused by ev y producer but one.

ight as well drop the money you're put-tin into this into the ocean," was a sample of the ncouragement they received from the wise-ac watching them on the set.

t the eyes of the woman scenarist showed no ear. They are great big eyes by the way, an reveal that rare mental quality in a wo-ma vision. Needless to say the picture was "T Four Horsemen" that has made $6,000,000 up o date.

When I was meditating on the book," June M is said to me, "and waiting for it to form int pictures in my mind, the first one to come wa the scene in the grave-yard—you remem-be -where the Evangelist pointing to the rows of ead, food for hate, implores the one pre-ve ative of war—love. Then I knew I had ca ht the spiritual appeal that made the book so reat, and that no power of man could stop thi message getting to the masses through the scr n.

ll on the dramatic night of the pre-view in ew York, here were three who must have fel the play on the sheet before them was de-cid g their own fate.

he head of the "idiots," the Irish director, ha some memories. One of being dismissed by producer.

Because, Mr. Ingram, your types have too mu individuality." And believing in his star too he had flung back the answer;

Yet you'll send for me some day, just be-cau e I can picture that very quality."

nd Valentino, if he were there, and felt th rapture his love-making stirred in every ma and woman in the audience might have co muned thus with himself:

wonder, will my photographs be handed ba now and will I hear the casting director sa behind my back; 'That fellow can't act. H nothing but a lounge lizard.'" hose deep-seeing eyes of June Mathis had de ted a latent lyrical power in the young un cognized Italian and given him his big cha ce. The Irish dreamer was also her selec-tio for director. I suspect that she too has so ht the stars now and then. It pays some-tim s to dream. There is real money in it.

nd she is equally sure about the outcome of "B Hur," certain that its message of love will ge to the millions yearning for it.

revious to writing for the silent theatre, she ha ten years of schooling for her work as a arist-acting. Because she learned in this w the likes and dislikes of the capricious pu ic.

But there was such terrible competition on th stage. Prettier girls were coming along," sh said very honestly, "so I cast about for a po tion where there was not such competition. I und it in what was then considered just a st above a janitor—continuity writing for thir y-five dollars a week."

But that same quality of vision made her see its future and she stuck to the despised craft that one day was to be transformed in to a splendid galleon, laden with gold.

She worked steadily too in a profession where so many loaf, knowing that work will land you within hailing distance of your goal. There was a mother beside her to inspire. Both waited together.

Sometimes when the girl scenarist was asked for a suggestion about production, she gave one. When used, it always hit. She studied interior decorating just to find out what colors photographed the best.

And now she is to put practically before the world Lew Wallace's tale of the Christ, written to prove to himself that he believed in the divinity of the Nazarene. "Ben Hur" has been published in raised letters for the blind and among other languages translated into the Hindustani of India. The principal character, Esther, was name dafter the author's own mother, whom he lost when a boy, ten years old. "Dead in her fair youth," as he writes of her in his autobiography.

June's guiding star has left her too—the mother whose passionate wish it was that her daughter should be a force in bringing the drops of balm that "Ben Hur" has always been to other aching hearts.

"But I have the consolation of theosophy," she said, "and know that death is nothing. Age is nothing. The lives we lived before live again in us."

Did she stand once with that awed throng in Judea and see lepers healed?

The world-wide popularity of Papini's Life of Christ is an index of how pitifully eager is a chaotic world for the Figure who steadied it so long.

And when the screen puts before the man in the street the drama of the "little curly-haired son of a carpenter" who gave the son of Hur a cup of water, when he was thirsty, it will cleanse itself of all taint of commercialism and pass into service. For "Ben Hur" will be America's Passion Play—our Oberammergau.

In the preparation of this mammoth spectacle, she has sat beside much learning, has had Oriental manuscripts read to her, yet without embarrassment, though she is self-educated. "I had to snatch my education," she said. Yet she must always have had a book in her hand on the train, or when waiting for her cue, for she has read widely and knows thoroughly what she has read. And her ancestors helped. For nine generations, her people were professors, musicians, lecturers, a long line of intellectuals who probably made her predestined to write.

This was the verdict on her first continuity by the experienced head who read it:

"Miss Mathis, this is the very first piece of writing for the screen in which I have detected the ear marks of an individual style."

With all people who do big things, she has that inner surety of success—poise. No Indian swami could have more, as he gazes with dark eyes under his turban at materialists busy with things, as we smile at children playing with toys.

And this peace pervades even the atmosphere of the ante-room, when you wait for her. It seems more like making an afternoon call on a friend as the secretaries begin to pour the tea. The good cheer induced the group, strangers before to talk—a most unheard-of-thing, while waiting in the ante-room of the great.

A slight, short woman came in with reddish hair carefully coiffured. Distinctly feminine, I thought. The face showed both strength and intellect.

And her office is more like the corner of a luxurious library. Flowers and cushions, bright but harmonious give a "homy" atmosphere. In the bookcase were heavy tomes. I caught the letters Jewish Encyclopedia on one. We sipped tea and talked. More evidence of her feminity! A powder puff came out. A box of candy lay open at her elbow. There was a flash of rings as she spoke of most abstruse things.

I know I ought to mention her immense salary, bigger than the President's of the United States, but the method with which she moved towards it is more interesting.

To so many in Hollywood, success means sitting tight on a bag of gold and keeping everyone else away. But June Mathis proceeded differently, the way that Lincoln, Henry Ford and now Coolidge seems to be going.

Serve—and the way will be cleared for you.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

San Francisco streets will be the scenes of frenzied movie-making this week, when a comedy company of twenty actors headed by "Slim" Summerville and Bobby Dunn, will stage "Hello Frisco." The company arrived on Monday from Universal City in charge of Zion Myers, supervisor of comedies, and will work on Market street and other thoroughfares for exteriors, winding up Saturday night at the Wampas Frolic, where the closing scenes of the picture will be made. Several clever actors will take roles in the picture, and a number of big stars will appear in the closing Wampas Frolic scenes.

Roland Edwards of the Tiffany Productions spent several days in town last week looking up some Chinatown and "under-world" locations to be used in the company's next picture.

Max Graf, supervising director of the Graf Films, returned from Los Angeles a few days ago, after getting work under way on the general outline and continuity for their forthcoming production of "The Wise Son." Mr. Graf will return to the south within a few days to arrange for his production staff and cast. Work on the picture will begin at Pacific Studios the latter part of the month.

Tom Gibson, well known director is starting a movement to oblige all horses to wear headlights if out after four o'clock. As driving peacefully home from Pebble Beach on Sunday night with all his family in the car Tom suddenly found himself covered with a shower of broken glass, and a horse astride of his radiator with its head sticking in through the windshield. After, in the surprise of the moment, carrying his uninvited passenger for several yards, he stopped the car, and while he made sure that his small son, who was sitting beside him and was slightly cut, wasn't badly hurt, the horse climbed down and vanished in the darkness. What Tom wants to know is, what chance a poor motorist has if a horse can sneak up and jump on him any time in the dark?

Larry Semon was a guest at the St. Francis over the week-end, in San Francisco on a brief holiday.

Frank Lloyd and his company, making "The Sea Hawk," will come to San Francisco within the next few weeks to shoot some English country exteriors on one of the beautiful estates near Burlingame.

Reginald Barker, who has been doing location work for "Cape Cod Folks" at Eureka spent a day or two in San Francisco last week on his way south.

Estelle Taylor who has just finished playing the part of Mary, Queen of Scots, in Mary Pickford's production of "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," is a guest in San Francisco for a short vacation before resuming her film work.

The El Dorado Productions, who have offices in the Golden Gate Theatre Building, will begin actual shooting on the first of their series of comedies in a week. The first and perhaps the second film will be made in Santa Rosa. Earl Olin will wield the megaphone with Troy Brown at the camera, and the smiling Danny Rogers as chief electrician. Besides Frank Alexander, who will be featured, the cast will include two of the Matzetti boys and Billie Fay, with others not yet announced.

Clara Horton, beautiful film star and her husband, Heinie Brant, were guests at the Palace Hotel for several days last week.

Under the name of the Winterburn Productions, the Creco Light company have opened branches in the bay district. Their present service equipment includes warehouses both in San Francisco and Oakland for the storing of lights for rental purposes, and a fully equipped production laboratory in Oakland, prepared to handle anything from ten to ten-million feet of film.

The vanguard of the frolickers who are to stage the Wampas Frolic will arrive in San Francisco on Tuesday. The early comers will be Bryant Washburn and Wanda Hawley, and on their arrival they will assist in the preparations for the big ball. Tickets still are selling like hot cakes, and the crowd promises to be record-breaking one.

In honor of the Wampas the Granada Th ater this week are staging a novelty act call "Twenty Minutes in a Movie Studio." Th act has been especially written for the occasi and dedicated to the publicity men of the mo ing picture industry. To insure reality in t studio settings Production Manager J. H. Palmborg's Paragraphs

(Being one of a series of impressions of film folk and cinemaland anecdotes as written by a motion picture insurance man. By C. F. Palmborg, special analyst and Hollywood representative of the New York Life Insurance Company).

Before meeting Noah Beery I had the impression that he was a big, gruff fellow, with a loud, harsh voice. I had seen him in many roles on the screen, usually portraying a hard, domineering man who walked rough shod over anything and anyone who happened to get in his way. His characterization of the lawyer in the last release of The Spoilers will be one that I shall never forget. His big fight scene will go down in film history. A person is apt to associate the actor with his part and so unconsciously I had done this with Mr. Beery.

As I drove up the winding driveway that led to his home, I admired his choice of location, for his home is situated way back in the Hollywood hills where the wind comes fresh and clear from the near by high places. The approach to his house is very impressive, with a big expanse of green lawn on one side and luxuriant hedges and flowering shrubs on the other. The large white house stands out clearly against the high brown hills at the back.

Later he told me that he had bought the land when it was considered "country" and too far out to be desirable. Now it is rated as part of Hollywood's most exclusive district.

The servant who answered the bell informed me that Mr. Beery was out and just as I was turning away, quite disgusted, thinking that that was probably the way he would keep his appointments, a lovely little lady appeared at the door saying that Mr. Beery was expected any minute and asking me to please come in and wait.

She introduced herself as Mrs. Beery and soon had me comfortably seated in her charming big living room—one of the homiest rooms I have ever been in. She must have the reputation of being a charming hostess, for she has the knack of making a person feel right at home. During our conversation she told me she had been on the stage for many years, but had given that up so as to devote all of her time to her family.

Just as I was asking about their son, in he came—a handsome lad of about eleven years. He had a flower in his hand for his mother. He informed us that it was "new to him," he had discovered it growing on one of the near hills and he knew his mother would like Then he was gone to join his friend who w waiting outside. I knew that this mother h a deep place in her boy's affection. I won how many eleven-year-old boys would stop their play to bring a flower to mother.

At present he is attending one of the fin military academies in the city and his well up body, broad shoulders and erect bear show the result of his training.

We heard a car outside and Mrs. Beery nounced that her husband had arrived. I m confess I was anxious to meet "the head of house." Here I had one of the big surpri of my life, for instead of a heavy voiced, rou looking individual, a big, fine dignified n approached me and with extended hand gree me in a most gracious manner, his voice ple ant and his manners charming. There w nothing loud or uncouth about this man.

We walked about his grounds and he t me about his early experiences in locat

"Sunshine Pal"

By BETTY MORRIS

A the sunshine in the world is in her child- hile. Her blue eyes have imprisoned its ay. In the sweet winsomeness of the whole —a very tiny "whol" inded, for shee's ly six—is reflected a natural, spontaneous ilhood.

"Sunshine Pal" they call her, small Muriel ra es Dana, whose name is one of this sea- on additions to the ranks of stellar lights. And he title is rightfully hers, say those who ave watched the progress of this tiny miss no Thomas H. Ince first bestowed the name of "Sunshine Pal" upon her three years ago.

Muriel commenced dancing professionally at he old age of half-past two in Seattle and it was but a few months later that, while bing on wee toes in a prologue at a Los ngeles theater, her childish charm won the tention of Mr. Ince. Casting Muriel for a le in his production, "Hail the Woman"—a part, and, if you please, against the com- etition of fourteen boy-actors—Mr. Ince ad- itted himself quite captivated by her sunny ersonality and most immediately gave her he le that has followed her to other studios.

The small one with the big blue eyes is a ere miss, with a quaint dignity—sometimes. he dwells in that tiny body the flame of ar, the instantaneous response to the spic gestion, an innate feeling for acting that has on Muriel the commendation of many direc- rs. She loves to "play act" and gets lots of in t of the make-believe of camera-work.

Off-screen Muriel has quite a busy life, what ith caring for her family of fourteen dolls, ead by Judy, who isn't much for looks, ein one of those "raggedy" affairs, but who, small "mother" claims, has the nicest ers ality of any. Each of her children has to be its face and ears washed every night nd lullaby sung to waft it to slumber.

On Sunday afternoons, Muriel's little friends me over and then the screen-starlet turns lin y queen and cooks the most odorous— ghly unpalatable—concoctions on her tiny ov serving the delicacies out on the lawn Wilshire home on the wee tea-table. t n times she bustles about, patently proud b position as hostess, copying the manner- ms of the ladies to whose tea-parties she me nes accompanies mother.

But sad to relate, there are occasions when c all one's blue eyes are not quite so placid, he instead they sparkle with mischief, and to cries proclaim Muriel's participance in e f of the neighborhood. Her most recent ca de, for which she is still regarded with ve her juvenile playmates, occurred when, ri a game of hide-and-seek, she stowed r all self away neatly in the circle of a ar e on the back of an automobile parked ar er home.

But the machine didn't stay parked! In the sk Muriel did not see the folks get into the car—but suddenly realized her predicament when the machine sped off down the street, with a frightened small piece of childhood clinging to the spare-tire. Fortunately she returned from her hectic ride unhurt and in somewhat chastened mood promised Mother-Dear that hereafter she would park herself on solid ground; but it must be recorded, in the interests of truth, that upon that occasion "Sunshine Pal's" smile was decidedly A. W. O. L.

Since her film-debut in Ince's "Hail the Woman," Muriel has appeared in many pictures, her latest being the leading child's role in "Daddies," for Warner Brothers, her work in the spirited characterization—that of a tom-boy little girl who wins the heart of irascible Claude Gillingwater—winning much commendation at the recent preview.

Just now Muriel is playing a rich little girl in "Love and Lies" with Lila Lee and James Kirkwood and, upon completion of this picture, will be featured by the Theater Owners Producing Corporation in a story, "Baby Fingers," written about her winsome personality. All the deft shading of her comedy-sense and her keen response to scenes of pathos will be brought out in the film, which promises to be one of the best of the season featuring a child-player.

Besides acting, Muriel's talents include singing and dancing, playing both piano and organ exceptionally well for such a wee one of six summers. Her song-programs "over the air" have proven favorites with the radio fans.

The future of this little "Sunshine Pal" girl seems particularly bright just now. And Tommy Ince, who discovered her, is wearing one of those I-told-you-so smiles and saying, "Didn't I know it all along?"

An Historical Simile By GEORGE LANDY

Fashion and history have at least one thing in common: they both run in cycles.

* * *

Together with many others who earn their livlihood in one phase or another of the motion picture industry, we had come down to a public hearing of the Police Commission at the Los Angeles City Hall, where the subject of bluelaws was to be informally discussed during the process of the Commission's granting, or refusing to grant, various licenses permitting dancing after twelve o'clock midnight. We arrived at the City Hall fully an hour before the time scheduled for the meeting, but found ourselves late-comers, since the various bluelaw advocates had apparently disregarded their own tenets and had stayed up all night in order to crowd the hall with their own sympathizers. Finally, the august Police Commission strolled into the chamber, and seated its composite self. The meeting was formally opened, and one of the petitions—it happened to be the refreshingly audacious request of the Wampas to dance until three o'clock A. M.—was formally presented. Of course, it never had a chance, but nevertheless it was hailed with glee by the bluelaw advocates, who stood up, one after the other, to denounce the modern-sky youth and its iniquitous habits.

We listened and tried to keep awake, as they droned along lugubriously—almost interminably— — — — — —

(Fade Out on Los Angeles—Fade in on:)

Mistress Cowan and Maaster Higgin are attending the Virginia Convention at Richmond on March 23rd, 1775.

Hundreds of Colonists have travelled for many miles, from the furthermost corners of the Virginia Colony, to be present at this meeting, ostensibly merely a protest against the arrival of the British military on American shores. Actually, we colonists sensed the historic aspect of this Convention. It was in the air, and the feeling pervaded every one of the Thirteen Colonies.

The presiding officers are seated on a dais at the front of the Convention Hall. The stolidity of dignity, the slow thought of office, and the aversion to progress of the "responsible," are all marked on their features. Several men of important position in the Colonies have addressed the President and the other members of the Convention, upholding the present status of everything, and decrying the attempts of those who wished to change "the things that are."

The day seems sure for the Tories, when a young man in buff-colored breeches and the long coat of the day, rises and starts to speak stammeringly, evidently a bit awed by the prevalence of the opinion against his views. Some of the people in the Hall, however, know this young man, and hope that his brilliant oratory will flower forth as it has on several other occasions with which they are familiar. For this is Patrick Henry.

He speaks.

"Mr. President: No man thinks more highly than I do of the patriotism, as well as abilities, of the very worthy gentlemen who have just addressed the House. But different men often see the same subject in different lights: and, therefore, I hope it will not be thought disrespectful to those gentlemen if, entertaining as I do opinions of a character very opposite to theirs, I shall speak forth my sentiments freely and without reserve. This is no time for ceremony. The question before the house is one of awful moment to this country. For my own part, I consider it as nothing less than a question of freedom or slavery; and in proportion to the magnitude of the subject ought to be the freedom of the debate. It is only in this way that we can hope to arrive at truth, and fulfill the great responsibility which we hold to God and our country.

"Mr. President, it is natural to man to indulge in the illusoins of hope. We are apt to shut our eyes against a painful truth, and listen to the song of that siren till she transforms us into beasts. Is this the part of wise men engaged in a great and arduous struggle for liberty? Are we disposed to be of the number of those who, having eyes see not, and having ears hear not, the things which so nearly concern their temporal salvation? For my part, whatever anguish of spirit it may cost, I am willing to know the whole truth; to know the worst and to provide for it. Shall we try argument? we have been trying that for years. H we anything new to offer upon the subj Nothing. We have held the subject u every light of which it is capable: but it been all in vain. Shall we resort to entr and humble supplication? What terms s we find which have not been already hausted?

"Let us not, I beseech you, sir, dec ourselves longer. Sir, we have done ev thing that could be done to avert the st which is now coming on. We h petitioned: we have remonstrated: we supplicated: we have prostrated ourse Our petitions have been slighted: our ren strances have produced additional viol and insult; our supplications have been regarded; and we have been spurned contempt. In vain, after these things, we indulge in the fond hope. If we wis be free—if we mean to preserve invi these inestimable privileges for which have been so long contending—if we n not basely to abandon the noble strugg whichh we have been so long engaged, which we have pledged ourselves neve abandon until the glorious object of our test shall be obtained—we must fight! peat, sir, we must fight!

"I know now what course others may t but as for me, give me liberty, or giv death!"

People rising from benches, the soun scuffling feet, awaken us. We are bac Los Angeles, California. Again it is De ber, 1923. The Police Commission ha fused all applications for dancing twelve o"clock. The advocates of the laws have won the day, at least this again.

We realize we have been dreamin dream, based on our hope, and because six months' intimate association with rick Henry, during the preparation of scenario for "A Lighter of Flames," which novel he is the central figure, which will be picturized by Willim S. H

Commuting to Fame

By EDITH M. RYAN

Some are born commuters, others acquire ming and still others have commuting ush pon them.

Orville Caldwell, the male lead in Morris st's "The Miracle," Broadway's greatest odu on for many a season, is not intention- y a commuter, for to date commuting has en rust upon him. It has been his experi- ce be so hustled from Coast to Coast it could hardly call it a voluntary move- n. He only knows that there are nails in llywood and New York for his hat and both k ke to him.

"Do an actor really know where he be- ga hen his mail always has a forwarding dre on it?" Mr. Caldwell was called upon an er before he left the last time for New rk a twenty-four hours' notice.

"He belongs where his work is," said the or romptly. "Trains are just connecting ks om stage to stage. Of course there are as ally actors who are happiest with tng of scenery. Some have the New York pit Some scheme and contrive no matter at offered in the eastern metropolis to get k the California sunshine.

"There are others to whom commuting is a d high priestess in their art. She must se ed both in Hollywood and New York th luster may dim on the 'actorial' name. is ass savagely acquires commuting as a ce y part of the game. For the right id a set of notices from the New York tic for the left, another set of notices from L Angeles critics as proof positive that is made in one place!

"As matter of fact, a stage and a set are sa e the world over. The greatest thing th item of commuting is a collection of e oles. There may be certain advantages ju as many disadvantages loom up. One ew friendships, freshens one's viewpoint ich re advantages, but a personality has a ve way of becoming indistinct in the city blind. That is the almost fatal side of mm ng, although the commuter, who has nm ng thrust upon him cannot be said to in e rolling stone class."

Now Morris Gest, who has been character- d the "imperial Morris Gest" loomed up ge than New York to Orville Caldwell when he sent him two insistent wires, signing him in the second, to play the male lead in "The Miracle." There is a splendor about a Gest production that would make a commuter out of the actor most reluctant to leave his home. Mr. Caldwell had his place in the Hollywood foothills, but the call was a dominant one and he went. He had had two seasons before he came to the film coolny in Mr. Gest's "Mecca," set forth on gorgeous scale and he knows well the lavish touch of Gest. Greater by far is "The Miracle."

Mr. Caldwell admits that certain conditions add a thrill to commuting. Mr. Gest has given him two of his greatest spectacular opportunities, opportunities that were highly educational so that commuting has had a royal side. Supervising this second production in which he has appeared, "The Miracle," is Prof. Reinhardt, who has poured forth in rehearsals a wealth of artistry that has been gathered up eagerly by the actor. Right here is the only value of commuting says Mr. Caldwell—opportunities that broaden one's art. The place will not do it—the busy actor has a limited relation to a place—but contacts of note cancel distance and make it pay.

Orville Caldwell is a California boy who was born in Oakland where he spent his boyhood, later attending the University of Californio where he graduated. His dramatic experience began at college where a greater variety of roles fell to his lot than was ever negotiated by any student. He began his stock experience in Oakland where he won the attention of James K. Hackett, who was the first to make him a commuter for this actor engaged him for a leading part in his Broadway run of "The Rise of Silas Lapham" and later "The Old 'Ole." Then back to the Coast for another stock engagement, then New York again in Morris Gest's "Mecca" followed by several months in Hollywood when he supported Katherine McDonald in "The Lonely Road" and "The Scarlet Lily," Mae Murray in "The French Doll" anl his last appearance with an all star cast in Universal's "Six Fifty."

Orville Caldwell does not claim to be the prize commuter. And here is a secret. He might not have commuted at all if he had known in the first place that "The Miracle" was to be done entirely in pantomime. In addition to the intriguing Morris Gest was the joyful thought of walking the boards and using his voice. And when he learned that he had commuted for silent drama, it was at first a blow. But later in the swing of the compelling production he writes that spoken drama would have marred the majesty of "The Miracle" and so he has no regrets that he took the long journey.

Mr. Caldwell, looking into the future of production, sees a large body of actors who will refuse to be borrowed—these among the older ones—but among the young chaps who are not bothered by too many Lares and Penates the insiduous growth of the commuting custom. For some way there is an appeal to the imagination and it lends a sparkle to life. Still there is one thing, he says, that will check commuting even among the rovers—an endowed theater in Hollywood where the actor can get the thrill that is now taking him to Broadway—the thrill of using his voice in spoken drama!

PUBLIC OPINION

January 14, 1924.

Editor of "Camera!",
Hollywood, California.
Dear Mr. Fox:—

Please accept my appreciation for "The Masquerader" last week's editorial. "Movie Gall!" reveals its sponsor an individual harboring an evil and unclean imagination. His article reads like the wild scribble of a low-bred, ill-mannered young boy, used to the lowest associations of a city's streets and unworthy of intelligent consideration.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) EMIL HOYER,
Box 13 Station "C,"
Los Angeles, California.

More power to "CAMERA!" and Filmograph.

Hollywood and its motion picture people—and every other fair-minded, right-thinking person, fo rthat matter—are behind you and those who are seeking to protect the motion picture profession from the unjust, unfair slander and persecution of those self-styled "saviours of the world" who are doing all in their power to hold our profession and our people up to the scorn and ridicule of the world.

The reasons for the attacks of such radical, ungodly men—they aren't preachers or ministers, and it would really take a much smarter man than I am, with a much more profane vocabulary, to tell just what they are—their reasons, I repeat, are so plain as to be evident to the most casual observer.

Seeking sensational publicity for themselves, reveling in the smell of printer's ink, as dear to their nostrils as the scent of dead fish to the senses of an alley cat; counting that day lost which does not see their likeness in print, in connection with some lurid, unwholesome scandal—radicals of their ilk seize upon any scandal, any controversy, which gives promise of furnishing them with the stinking, putrid things which are as meat and drink to their perverted souls.

The Los Angeles motion picture profession and the people who have made it what it is today are as good citizens, on the whole, as the average run of ordinary, everyday working folks in any walk of life.

I have treated hundreds of them, both men and women, since I began my practice in Hollywood. They have the same aches and pains, which hurt them just as much, as other folks.

And I have found them cleaner and higher-minded, for that matter, than the general run of sensation-seekers who throng the so-called "churches" of the muck-raking, mud-throwing demagogues and pulpit-pounders—too timid and afraid of public opinion to indulge in the drugs or liquor which naturally attracts such people, yet drenching and intoxicating their minds with the salacious slop dealt to them under the sleazy veil of "religion."

There are individuals in Filmland, certainly, who commit wrongs. Some have done heinous things.

But in every such instance, without exception, the motion picture people, themselves, have been the first to cry "thumbs-down" against the evil doers!

In the name of He who told his disciples: "Judge not, lest ye be also judged" and "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone," let's have a fair deal.

If motion picture people break laws, punish them to the limit.

And if so-called "preachers" transgress the laws, libeling and painting in wretched, lurid colors the people of the profession which has done more than anything else to make our Los

A Square Deal

It is doubtful if America, or even the world itself, has ever produced a more fearless or spectacular man than Theodore Roosevelt, whose creed, doctrines and politics were summed up in that favorite phrase of his . . . . "a square deal." The time has now come when Filmdom must demand that which Roosevelt preached . . . . that same "square deal."

Ever since God-knows-when one of the favorite pastimes of the reformers and newspapers at large has been to heap smut on the motion picture industry for no reason whatsoever. Whenever there has been a murder or scandal they have linked with it somewhere the name of "film actor," "film director" or "film actress," just so it was film, film, film this and film that and the other thing. Maybe the person involved worked a day with some comedy outfit. Immediately he or she is dubbed a star and the headlines would lead one to believe that Mary Pickford or Douglas Fairbanks or some one else of real importance was involved. Filmdom has been the bait for the readers; it has been the goat . . . . TOO LONG! Certainly there have been individuals in the industry who have done rash things. Many others have been the victims of circumstance. But why should the industry as a whole be condemned for their misdeeds?

When a New Jersey preacher was found in a "love nest": when an Illinois clergyman was found guilty of seducing a choir girl; when Herbert Wilson, ex-minister and one of the most notorious criminals Los Angeles has ever produced, killed a fellow-convict in cold blood, was the Church as a whole condemned? NO!

When a New York publisher was involved in a scandal with a prominent actress; when a well-known Chicago newspaperman was found guilty of maliciously spreading the untruth about an important political campaign, a time when most newspapers, however false they were at other times, came out with the truth; when another publisher nearer home was found guilty of blackmail and using his sheet as a wedge to secure a huge sum of graft from the people's money, was Journalism condemned? NO!

Filmdom has not had a square deal. But it's going to get it . . . . NOW! Whatever the public at large may think of Roscoe Arbuckle or Gaston Glass or Mabel Normand this one thing is sure: THEY HAVE NOT BEEN GIVEN A SQUARE DEAL. Furthermore there is more of big-heartedness, under-the-surface quality to them than any of the reformers and yellow-hearted newspapermen possess. They at least admit that they have human failings, as we all have, and do not parade around with that holier-than-thou woe-begone expression on their faces that only hides innate crudeness and sensuality.

"Camera!" and Filmograph, as Crusaders for The Unbiased Truth, propose to apply Rooseveltian principles to the present case. WE ARE GOING TO GET A SQUARE DEAL FOR THE MOTION PICTURE PEOPLE. WE MEAN BUSINESS! WE NEED YOUR HELP TO SECURE FOR FILMDOM "A SQUARE DEAL!"

Eugene B. Branford, the author of this remarkable poetic treatise on Friendship, is rapidly gaining a name for himself as one of our most versatile writers, and has written poetic, impressionistic and lyrical compositions that have been widely acclaimed. There is a simpleness and pathos to his work that is undefinable, yet the charm and sincerity is readily apparent. His work is of added interest to the people of the motion picture profession because of his inclusion in our group, having started upon his career as film actor with the same zeal and conscientiousness that distinguish his writings, yet withal retaining his inherent humanness that wins him friends in all walks of life. He has just published a new song, "Oh Hollywood!" which is dedicated to Filmdom and its people. He is making his home here at Castle Sans Souci on Argyle Street with his foster-mother, Susie C. Clark, who is also a writer of established merit, having written several books on travel and kindred subjects.

The Cross of Friendship

IN days to come with gusty swells, will come to us
sweet memory bells;
our paths will cross,
our lives entwine,
and golden hours
in memory shine.

The light of Friendship softly beams, like a radiant glow from lands o' dreams, stilling the waves of life's turbulent sea. Why should life's paths come together, and so quickly turn aside?

Why should Friendship be enduring, when our ways must sever wide?

'Tis a mystery to mortals, dark, unfathomable and deep! so we wonder in our blindness, while we sit alone and weep.

The sun will shine,
the rain will fall,
a mystic silence
broods o'er all.
The days will come,
the days will go,
and human hearts
must ebb and flow!
but down all years
will come to me, full many a thought that blends with Thee.
A heart's true worth blooms but in love, thught lost to earth
it shines above.

It's the oft' repeated story,
every rose must have its thorn,
cloud and sunshine go together,
oaks grow stronger from the storm.
Were it not for weary heart-aches, and the severed ties of friends,
less we'd love our home immortal,
where pure Friendship never ends.
Oh, thou pitying love of heaven stoop and fold us to thy breast, still and satisfy these longings with thy blissful, peaceful rest.

DR. W. I. SCHUSTER,

"Camera!"

Dear Sirs:—With all due respect to the intelligence of Mr. Fox and Mr. Lykke (intelligence and judgment sufficient to issue interesting and useful publications each week), I personally can not understand why they have seen fit to devote space in your excellent publications ("Camera!" and Filmograph) for the unadulterated bosh written by the Rev. (?) Bob Shuler. It is not a question of "considering the source." Any attack may be dangerous and annoying if it is ably launched and sustained on a strong basis. From the days of David a small enemy has been able to strike home by employing a wise method. But in this case the method is even worse than the source. No one with any mentality or sense of values could seriously absorb the article copied in the Camera for January 12th.

The public of this country are still considered free and a civilized, educated body of human beings. They have indorsed and upheld the moving picture industry by their presence and their pocket books for many years. Wide advertising can place a commodity on the market but no power can keep it there unless it is of real benefit. The present day conditions have rendered rlaxation a vital necessity. From the girls and boys who have crowded and uncomfortable homes, to the tired married couples forced to live in two by four apartments, they have turned to the motion picture theater instead of injurious dissipation. The best schools and many of the churches of the country have recognized that pictures have brought a great mental and moral improvement to the world, and whoever tries to undermine those who have given their lives to this great work is attacking a valued and required organization "of the people, by the people, and for the people."

When such an article is couched in inane terms, and based on an appeal for leniency regarding a city regulation and not a violation of criminal law, and issued in a publication of such a questionable character it does not seem worthwhile to give it so much publicity or notice.

The general impression the retaliation gives is that Mr. Fox and Mr. Lykke felt a deep indignation against the absurd and malicious iirade regarding Mr. Niblo. Even so, ridicule would appear to be the only retaliation such a hodge podge of nonsense would merit.

For the sake of sensational news gathering it has been widely shown that the Picture colony has a few members whose weakness equals their talent and ability to sooth and help the world. But even if the proportion were larger than in any other group of people (instead of being smaller) no rambling or meaningless pen will ever be able to cripple or seriously besmirch those who participate in productions like those of Mr. Niblo. So, as one of our respected and beloved comedians would say, "Why Worry"?

Very sincerely yours,
Signed: DOROTHEA KNOX.

PATRIOTISM
By Eric Mayne

Patriotism is a man's love for his Co the love which inspires him to keep its respect its institutions, and defend it agair enemies.

The true Patriot identifies himself wit fortunes of his nation; he profits by its he serves it in the present, and he has fa its future.

If a man wishes to keep a Country an sires that Country to keep him the demar Patriotism are greater than ever.

The Patriot cannot afford to be indif to the efficiency or inefficiency of the G ment of his Country, it should be his gr concern.

A German Professor of the name of H has just perfected the world's largest anc powerful submarine.

The submarine is one of the most dia methods of destruction ever invented.

It does not give its victims even the c to fight.

By foul and vicious means it attacks in and unoffending people and sends them terrible death.

This same 'Flamm' has invented a hug layer to carry 1000 mines of one ton eac other Satanic way of destroying men una

Many noble and Patriotic German working hard to reconstruct their Count develop its wonderful possibilities. I will not help them in their work.

The greatest effort of the Patriot is serve and ennoble human life that it n of service to the nation and the world.

History teaches us that when a Cou too prosperous, its Citizens are too lu to be patriotic; and when a Country is ir ruptcy its people think patriotism is not while.

When the people of a Country becon nest and sincere in their Patriotism th ernment of that Country will have one in view—Their duty to the State.

Producers and Directors

The foremost question in the minds of those engaged in the making of Motion Pictures is: "What can we do to make pictures better?"

Perfection demands the elimination of all faults, and the faults in this case concern those who work before the camera; those who are really most important in the success of the picture. To produce better pictures we must have better actors and better actresses.

Men of importance in this great industry, do you realize that since the birth of Motion Pictures there has never been a real "honest to goodness" legitimate place where talented people, without experience can be shown the right road to enter pictures? Do you realize there is wonderful talent and material lying dormant only for the want of proper coaching and a place where you directors and producers may come and see their possibilities? Why not allow those endowed with talent and ability to come forward? Why cease to separate the grain from the chaff?

Penrhyn Stanlaws famous artist and director recently said: "Stars today are paid their exact market value due to one company bidding against the other. The truth is, not only are there not enough stars but there are not enough leading men and women to supply the demand. Producing companies howl at outrageous salaries but they do not go to the root of the matter. They are so blinded by the demand that they neglect the supply. The supply is without limit. Everywhere is splendid material. All it needs is development. There are schools where any profession may be studied. There are schools where the fundamentals of any business may be studied, but there is no school for the motion picture actor and actress. Schools are needed! The infant industry should go to school!"

Now directors and producers, you have just read the words of a famous man, words which coincide exactly with our own thought. We have the institution, the studio space, the lights and sets, the instructors, in fact we have everything except your endorsement.

WILL YOU GIVE IT?

To encourage or even permit irresponsible schools to exist is simply to invite scandal and that is the reason we ask your earnest co-operation. We want to be tutored by reputable companies; we ask your advice, your candid opinion, anything for the betterment of this large industry.

We have given a name to the idea and have called it "The Screen Players Club." At all times will our club be properly conducted and open for inspection, and in a very short time we will be able to supply all reasonable demands of the studios.

We are going to give every one a fair chance and a square deal. We don't wish to conflict with anyone. We are organizing a clean legitimate club and invite every one in pictures to join it. We charge no commission and the dues are reasonable.

Once again, Producers and Directors, what do you think of it? Write and let us know.

"Fight!" Says Niblo

SACRAMENTO PICTURES FILMING "LISTEN LESTER"; IS NETTING HUGE NATIONAL SUCCESS

Shooting Screen Adaptation at F. B. O. Stronghold; Favorites Signed for Film

Production activities in Hollywood were stimulated this week by the starting of "Listen Lester," the great American farce of the speaking stage, which is being transferred to the screen by Sacramento Pictures Corporation. The story went into actual production at the Robertson-Cole studios. Upon its completion it will be distributed by Principal Pictures Corporation.

According to Jack Hunter, general manager of the company and secretary-treasurer of the T. & D. Circuit of San Francisco, the popular farce is to be given an even more elaborate treatment than it was on the stage and it is predicted that the screen version of "Listen Lester" will be one of the outstanding comedies of the year.

William A. Seiter has been selected to direct the production while the cast, which is an all-star personnel ,boasts of such well-known names as Louise Fazenda, Lee B. Francis, Harry Myers, George O'Hara, Eva Novak, Lee Moran, Eugenia Gilbert, Dot Farley and others of like prominence. Associated with Hunter in the conduct of Sacramento Pictures Corporation is Forrest White, former banker of Idaho, who is treasurer of the company. Owing to the fact that the concern's business is now international, a change of company name is seriously being considered.

The initial release of Sacramento Pictures Corporation, title "Temporary Marriage," is now playing to big business throughout the United States. "Listen Lester" will be the second feature to be produced by this company.

Foy Will Film Phoney History

Bryan Foy made the announcement this week of the plans for his new independent company which will produce during 1924 a series of fifty-two one reel films to be known as "Hysterical History Comedies."

Two comedies have already been produced and work is now started on the third.

Monte Brice, noted comic director and author, is assisting Mr. Foy in preparing the stories, while William McGann, veteran cameraman, is photographing the series. John Wallace, formerly associated with Vitagraph, is assisting in production.

No announcement has been made regarding the release dates.

WOMAN OF PARIS" BREAKS PRECEDENT IN LONDON SHOWING; NO PUBLIC PREVIEW

Chaplin Film Creates Comment by Leaving Beaten Path; Gets Top Price for Foreign Run

An established precedent in the showing of American photoplays in England has been broken by the booking of Charles Chaplin's production "A Woman of Paris," without the usual formality of a public pre-view.

The directors of the New Tivoli Theatre booked the famous Chaplin drama for a four weeks engagement, starting February 25, after only viewing the picture at a private screening, paying the highest price yet paid for an American photoplay in England.

The New Tivoli Theatre is located on London's famous thoroughfare, The Strand, and is the newest and most fashionable of the London picture houses; built on the site of the old historic Tivoli Music Hall—the theatre in which Charlie Chaplin made his last appearance in England as a variety artist.

A. D. of N. Y. Holds Semi-Annual Election

The Assistant Directosr Assn. of New York held their semi-annual election Wednesday evening at their headquarters, 234 W. 55th street. Walter Lang, the president during the last term, was reelected for the same office. Bert E. Siebel was elected vice-president, Charles Berner was retained as treasurer, and Walter R. Sheridan the Association's first secretary, was elected to fill another term.

Seven members were elected to serve on the Board of Governors, including George Cline, chairman, John Coleman, John V. DeLacy, Michael Miggins, Leon D'Usseau, Bert Tuey and Ben Behrens.

McDowell Roles Go Merrily On

Nelson McDowell, immediately upon finishing his part in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" for Metro, signed to play an eccentric character role in Harry Pollard's current production at Universal. Exterior scenes were to be filmed at San Luis Obispo.

McDowell has gained an enviable reputation as a character actor and has enacted many diversified parts within the past four years.

Tully Preparing Next Picture

Richard Walton Tully, probably America's greatest playwright-producer, is already engaged upon the scenario for his film version of his sensational international stage success, "The Bird of Paradise." This is to be his next contribution to the screen, following "Flowing Gold," the Rex Beach story now in production.

Mr. Tully also wrote the script for "Flowing Gold."

He expects to take his company to Hawaii to get the proper atmosphere for "The Bird of Paradise," leaving Los Angeles early in the Spring.

The fact that Estelle Taylor, portraying "Miriam" in "The Ten Commandments," has a hobby of accumulating slippers has evidently become known in Pekin, China, from whence the actress has received a pair of beautiful Chinese slippers from an admirer.

Lauds "Camera!" for Action Taken

At a conference held late Thursday afternoon between Fred Niblo, president of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, and Fred W. Fox, editor of "Camera!", the editorial attack upon the motion picture people which was recently published in the magazine operated by Bob Shuler, rabid Los Angeles reformist, and which has occupied such a prominent place in Filmdom within the past three weeks, was thoroughly discussed from all angles and a definite

The tenor of Niblo's talk was for an unabated fight against antagonistic interests and correction of the falsehoods that have been spread by the clergical mountebank. He stated that he thought the attack was entirely uncalled for and while he did not resent so much the personal references to himself he desired that the ladies of the cinema colony, especially, should be afforded an opology.

"I know that public sentiment is with us, and if we can place the issue before the people I am satisfied that they will condemn, in no uncertain terms, this tirade of Shuler's. So much false propaganda has been spread around of late designed to besmirch the character of the motion picture people that I am of the opinion the time has come for us to protect ourselves.

He showed no bitterness whatsoever against Shuler; simply keen regret that the clergyman should have published such utterly absurd and unfounded statements. He was assured by Mr. Fox that "Camera!" was heartily in accord with any movement for a righteous adjustment of the matter and he most graciously accepted the cooperation of the publication, following which ways and means were propounded to insure speedy rectification. Plans are well under way now and in the immediate future they will be revealed to the profession, at which time united action will be called for.

"I have always had the greatest respect for the women of our profession and it is regrettable that they should have been subjected to such an insult," he said, and commended "Camera!" for the part it was playing in their defense and that of the industry as a whole.

Morelli Issues Spaghetti Defi

Naldo Morelli has issued a challenge to the eastern champion who recently consumed something over two miles of spaghetti. Morelli reserves the right to prepare the food, and insists there is no man living who can eat more of it than himself.

Priscilla Pays With Cold Cash

Priscilla Moran, the child film star, having listened to the stories of the super-wonderful fur coats worn by older luminaries of the screen, has been driven, in self-defense, to the purchase of a fur-lined, but abbreviated, coat of which she is vastly proud. Priscilla, who is only five, spent the unheard-of sum of $18.50 for her new garment—but she paid for it in real money.

Mong's "V" is Now Revealed

They've just found out what William V. Mong's middle initial stands for. It's "Versatility." First of all he is a finished actor. As a side line he has during the past few years conducted a model hog ranch, a real estate business and between times has written numerous interesting short stories. Also, he can direct a motion picture production as well as act in it.

Mong's accomplishments are legion. He is one of the few "jacks of all trades" who is master of all that he attempts. But he lets no other business interfere with his real occupation of acting. For his chief profession is likewise his pleasure and his hobby and Mong takes keener enjoyment in interpreting a difficult role for the screen than he does in any other single thing.

Caldwell Adds Years to Son's Age

Fred Caldwell will have to answer to the charge of having added a quarter of a century to the life of his son, for he has just established the "fact" that his youngster was in existence twenty-five years ago by making him a conspicuous figure in his latest comedy-drama "Hollywood in 1900," just finished.

If young Cecil Fred ever sees this story when he grows up he is likely to think he was born twenty-five years prior to the time the family book states.

This new film of Caldwell's is the fifth of a series of satires on Hollywood in days gone by, and includes in the cast Victor Potel, Muriel Reynolds, Violet Schram, Charles Mack, Jack Gray and others. George Hollister was cameraman.

Ollie Kirby has been cast to play the heavy in "Yankee Madness," an F. B. O. production starring George Larkin. It will be filmed under the direction of Charles R. Seeling.

Olive Ann Alcorn, premier danseuse of New York's "Passing Show," and now a member of the celluloid clan, who has been named as the most beautifully formed woman in America, will soon begin an extended engagement at the Green Mill, the Washington Boulevard cafe.

Horner Signs Jean Riley

Jean Riley, winner of several nation-wide beauty contests and known in many independent productions, has been engaged to play the leading feminine role in the first of a series of pictures to be made by Bob Horner for his new releasing contract.

Anders Randolf, the clever artist-actor, who has recently created quite a sensation in Hollywood with both his portraits and screen interpretations, has been responsible for eighty-seven cinema characterizations in the past ten years. During the same period he has consistently continued in his original art, as well. Mr. Randolf, who is now playing a feature role in "Rose of the Ghetto" also has a prominent part in "Dorothy Vernon of Hadden Hall."

WAMPAS FROLIC IS BRILLIANT; LAUD HOSPITALITY OF 'FRISC

Press Agents Have Gala Time; Mutual Admiration Key of Event; Speak of Retu

"Dear folks of San Francisco, the only way we can tell you how enormously we have enjoyed this occasion and your wonderful hospitality is to say that—well, we just can't wait for next year to come," said Fred Niblo, acting as master of ceremonies and announcer extraordinary at "the biggest and best ball the Wampas has ever put on." And that was the keynote of the whole affair, not only the frolic and ball itself, but the whole stay of the stars and film folk in the city by the Golden Gate.

Although Garret Graham, and many other members of the Wampas and local committees had been hard at work for weeks, the real affair began for the public with the arrival of the special trains bearing the stars, newspaper men, members of the Wampas and others of the film colony, at Third and Townsend on Saturday morning. Long before the hour set for the arrival of the "Wampas Special" the depot and its neighborhood was crowded with such a mass of admiring film fans, that when Mayor Rolph, Chief of Police Daniel O'Brien, Supervisor Emmett Haydon, Andrew J. McCarthy, General Thornwell Mullady and other notables on the reception committee, and when it arrived they required the services of a cordon of police to open a way for them through the crowd.

At the moment the train pulled in every siren in the city sounded a paen of hospitality, and the air rang with cheers as star after star was whisked through the crowd to the cars waiting for them. Led by some of San Francisco's finest of the mounted police force and a band the long line of cars carrying the much-admired heroes and heroines of the silversheet, and the members of the reception committee, drove over the route where people lined the curbs and hung out of windows as though to greet the President himself or the hero of a great war. The parade had been well planned, and each of the cars carried large placards bearing the names of the stars it contained, so that the waiting crowd could be sure to get a glimpse of their favorites.

Arriving at the Palace Hotel, Halsey Manwaring, its genial proprietor, welcomed his many guests in person, and they were promptly escorted to their various rooms. Then followed the Chamber of Commerce luncheon at the Palace, at which San Francisco's leading business organizations made the Hollywood visitors welcome with the whole-hearted hospitality of the city.

The afternoon was given up to a rehearsal at the Civic Auditorium, and visits with personal friends, with motors at the service of all who wanted to see the beauties of the city, and many l parties gathered in the va suites of the big hotel.

Nine o'clock was the hour for the ball and frolic to be but long before that time the wi neighborhood around the C Auditorium was a sea of peo the great masses of the city were not going to the ball it struggled and fought and stood many patient hours in the hope seeing some of their favorite s in the flesh. Dozens of the s wart members of the police f were kept busy keeping the clear for the solid line of cars drive up to the doors, and to their occupants get to the trances. By nine-thirty the event was in full blast, huge the Auditorium was it was pac to its fullest capacity with a cro that numbered at least twe thousand. The deep balcon were full to their very back r with the many who had come to look on, while the five rows private boxes built on the m floor held hundreds of the foren celebrities of the screen world, the social leaders of San Fr cisco, while the floor was full beautifully gowned women a smartly-attired men, perhaps most representative gathering the socially elect ever gathered the West.

Of course the passing thro the crowd of each well kno favorite of the screen was gree with whispers of "Oh, there Eugene O'Brien; isn't he han some?" or "Did you ever see an thing like Pola Negri's eyes?" "Do you suppose Bull Montana really a tough guy?", but the st were good-natured and bowed a smiled and stopped to chat w their friends in the crowd, and general air of good fellowsh reigned.

From Mayor Rolph's introd tion of Fred Niblo as master ceremonies at the beginning of program to its close many ho later the entertainment went o big, and all the acts were receiv with much applause. The th teen baby stars won all by th youthful charms, and when it ca to the introduction of the long li of famous stars "Over the Ty writer" each and every one w given a warm welcome, even do to "Strongheart," and "Rin-T Tin," world-famous dogs.

At twelve o'clock five poli men in uniform invaded the sta to inform Mr. Niblo that it "w time for the Ball to be over" b after being reminded that this w San Francisco and not Los Ange stayed to amuse the crowd with few tuneful songs.

Paul Ash with his ready bat and his fine orchestra were that the heart of the dancers cou desire, and a bountiful supper w served about midnight, with light refreshments all evening.

TOURNEUR SIGNS LA MARR AND TEARLE FOR "WHITE MOTH"; WILL BEGIN SHORTLY

Two Favorites Are Signed to Co-Star in Forthcoming Spectacle; Are Established

A new combination of celebrities for the screen was effected yesterday when M. C. Levee placed Barbara La Marr and Conway Tearle under contract to be featured under Maurice Tourneur's direction in "The White Moth."

"The White Moth" originally appeared in Ainslee's Magazine and presents a modern drama by Lisa Forrester, author of "The City Path," "The Feast of Lights," and other popular magazine stories. For the adaptation of the piece, Mr. Levee has signed Albert Shelby LeVino, who for years has been responsible for many successful Paramount adaptations.

The combination of Barbara La Marr and Conway Tearle under the direction of Maurice Tourneur is expected to disclose exceptional results for the screen. Miss La Marr, who played the leading feminine role in "The Eternal City," Samuel Goldwyn's big production staged in Italy and who is now appearing in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," was signed for "The White Moth" by Mr. Levee through the courtesy of Arthur Sawyer, under whose direction she is appearing on the screen. "The White Moth" will be released by First National and is planned as Mr. Tourneur's most ambitious film for this distributing organization.

Conway Tearle has also met with unusual success under the First National banner. He has just finished "Lilies of the Field," in which he co-starred with Corrine Griffith and will take a short vacation before starting on the Tourneur film. Among his other recent performances at the United Studios were those in "Ashes of Vengeance" opposite Norma Talmadge, and in "Black Oxen" in which he also co-starred with Corinne Griffith.

The supporting cast to Miss La Marr and Mr. Tearle will include other celebrities of the screen according to Mr. Levee who plans to make the film a genuine all-star production. Actual shooting on the picture will be commenced at the United Studios in the near future.

Billy Sullivan, Universal "sports" star, and Edward Laemmle, his director, are "playing the ponies" at Tijuana.

The Sullivan unit has gone to Mexico's sporting center to film "The Empty Stall," the first of a series of race track features adapted from Gerald Beaumont's famous Red Book magazine stories of "The Information Kid."

Most of the locale for the original story is laid in Tijuana and Laemmle plans to incorporate all of the atmosphere of the famous race track and stables in the screen transcription of Beaumont's stories.

Beaumont has made "The Information Kid" one of the most famous and lovable characters in the short story realm. The magazine stories, later assembled and published in book form with the title, "Riders Up," compose one of the most popular and widely read group of stories of the world of sport, and particularly of the race track, ever written.

The stories are being transcribed to continuity by Scott Darling, who wrote the continuity for all of the "Leather Pushers" starring Sullivan under Laemmle's direction. They will be filmed as two-reel dramatic features and released in series. As in the case of the written stories each film will depict a complete situation, the theme of which will be built around the adventures of "The Information Kid," a "tout" known on every race track in the country, whose judgment is uncanny in its ability to pick winners and whose tips are always sincerely based on that judgment.

Latest Hersholt Role Draws Many Letters

Ever since the announcement that he was going to play a high-class German comedy role, supporting Constance Talmadge in "The Gold Fish," Jean Hersholt has been receiving hundreds of fan letters either criticising him or congratulating him for portraying the role. A majority of the letters are along the lines that it was high time to quit portraying a German with the effect of arousing the old war hatred and to show him as a regular human being. A few of the letters were along the lines that it was impossible for any German to appear funny. As a result of his playing the German comedy role, Hersholt has been elected as one of the active workers to serve on the committee in the big drive to secure food and funds for the starving German children.

Hersholt came from Denmark, where for many seasons he was a well-known leading man on the legitimate stage ,before going into the silent drama. He was an aviator with the A. E. F. during the World War and admits he has to draw very heavily on his imagination to inject the comedy elements into his role of the peaceful German.

Hail! The Return of the Prodigal Son

A long, lean comedian who has given the screen several of its funniest characterizations, swung off the train from New York, this week. Victor Potel is home from Gotham to remain. He will at once continue his work in the local studios.

Consistency in all things cinematic is but one of the many virtues of Wallace Worsley, producer of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" which has been acclaimed as one of the season's greatest pictures. Worsley will shortly announce his plans for the year to come

Goes Back to the Primitive

From the most sophisticated type of motion picture to the primitive is the experience now being undergone by Esther Ralston, one of the most promising ingenues among the younger screen beauties. She recently completed her work with Lubitsch in "The Marriage Circle," now having its local premiere and which is undoubtedly one of the most "grown-up" pictures ever made.

Now Miss Ralston is creating the title role of the Universal serial, "The Free Trader," in which she supports William Duncan, under his direction. Her engagement for this cast is indicative of the development in the type of serials now being made and it is also interesting because it marks her return to the Univrsal lot, where she was under contract for two years, playing leads for every male star in that organization.

Ellis A. Gimbel, Jr., merchant prince of New York and Philadelphia, and his bride, were the studio guests of Jackie Coogan on their recent honeymoon tour in California. While in New York last season, Jackie made a personal appearance at the big Gimbel store where he greeted thousands of Gotham youngsters.

Marie Prevost Cast in Grand-Asher Film

Warner Brothers have entered into an arrangement with Roy Neill whereby Marie Prevost is to play the title role in Mr. Neill's production of the famous play, "Rose of the Ghetto."

The supporting cast includes many prominent players, among them, Carl Miller, Anders Randolf, Wm. V. Mong, Claire McDowell, George K. Arthur, Sidney Bracey, Raymond McKee and Dana Collin.

Miss Prevost's last picture was the Ernst Lubitsch production, "The Marriage Circle," now being shown locally.

Seigmann Has Last Laugh on Joe Martin

George Seigmann, well remembered for his many intensely dramatic performances, is a firm believer in the adage that "Murder will out." Seigmann's career of villainy as the brutal concessionaire in "Merry Go Round" ended at the hands of Joe Martin, Universal's temperamental monk. And now Joe has been sentenced to serve his remaining days behind the steel bars of a circus cage-wagon, while Seigmann goes merrily on his way pursuing pretty leading ladies.

Able direction is one of the outstanding features of the comedies rry Langdon has made, and is making, for Mack Sennett. We have h us here the man to whom credit is due—Erle Kenton. He has put pep into modern-situation farces. May he live long and make many e of them!

RTHUR DEWEY SELECTED FOR WASHINGTON ROLE IN "AMERICA"

escendant of Revolutionary Family is Chosen by Griffith to Portray Coveted Role ocated after a country-wide rch, during which thousands of otographs were examined, and e than one hundred actors, inding a number of Broadway s, were interviewed in person, hur Dewey has been selected D. W. Griffith to portray the of George Washington in merica," the photodrama of the r of Independence, which he is ing for the Daughters of the erican Revolution.

Dewey was selected because he adjudged to have the most fect physical resemblance to shington. Before the final sel ion was made Dewey and sev l other applicants were taken Washington, D. C., by Griffith, order that he might compare ir visages with pictures and ues of the first President.

Although some historical au rities claim that the Father of country was more than six feet height, Griffith's research de rtment unearthed an order writ by Washington to his tailors London, in which he described hself as "just six feet, and of dium build." It was found that wey was exactly six feet tall.

Dewey is a descendant of an old volutionary family, which in the t century migrated from Lex ton, Mass., to the Middle West, tling in Illinois. One of his an tors, Ashabel Smith, answered ul Revere's summons, and ught valiantly on Lexington een.

Dewey, in addition to being an actor of long stage experience, was found to be deeply learned in American history. Since childhood his favorite diversion has been to read and re-read Washington Irving's five volume biography of George Washington. He brought to his role not only a fine, sympathetic understanding of Washington's character, but as well a remarkable knowledge of the most intimate details of his ideals, moods, habits, and costumes. Those close to him declare that he is not merely acting Washington—he is living the role.

When the good steamship Tenyo Maru pulls into San Francisco harbor on February 6, her passengers will be greeted by college yells and music. The reception is now being arranged in honor of Denison Clift, young American director who has spent the past four years in England producing motion pictures for a British syndicate, and who is to join the directorial forces of the Fox studios here immediately following his arrival on the Tenyo Maru.

The Stanford University college yells of yesteryear will be rendered by a group of the director's former classmates while a brass band, made up of members of the San Francisco press club, of which organization Clift was a charter member, will give the reception a jazzy air. Members of the local picture colony will comprise the balance of the reception committee.

Vitagraph Ingenue Forges Ahead

Patricia McGill, film ingenue, is now playing a part in "Borrowed Husbands," the all-star Vitagraph feature now being filmed under the direction of David Smith.

Early last autumn, because of excellent work done in "The Midnight Alarm," she attracted the attention of the Vitagraph chiefs and ever since then she has been given roles in their productions, and in the current film she is paving the way for future portrayals of greater proportions.

Throw Money to Winds with Denny

It's a reckless bunch of young characters who scatter money to the winds in Reginald Denny's new starring vehicle, "Love Insurance," which has just entered production at Universal City. The story, published as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post, tells of young people with strong romantic tendencies and reckless disregard for many rules of life. It was written by Earl Derr Biggers and is the most promising story in which Denny as yet appeared. Harry A. Pollard, maker of "Sporting Youth," is directing.

Vacation Pipe-Dream for Cowan-Higgin

About a year ago, when they first started on their active collaboration as motion picture authors, Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin looked forward to at least a week's vacation between the pictures they would adapt. In the thirteen months of their partnership, however, this expectation has consistently failed to materialize. The longest time they have had off between jobs has been exactly one calendar day!—and that was about six months ago. Since that time they have adapted "A Lighter of Flames" for Bill Hart, and "Broken Barriers," by Meredith Nicholson, for Reginald Barker, and their original story which they sold to Metro sometime ago under the title of "Woman's Intuition," but which will be filmed under another name.

In between these scripts came the titling of "The Wanters," "Pleasure Mad," and "The Man Life Passed By." Nothing daunted, however, Cowan-Higgin are still hopefully looking forward to their long anticipated week's vacation, even if they have to wait another year before they get it!

Will Rogers and his director, Rob Wagner, who are preparing a series of political pictures for Hal Roach, was told that he would have to abandon his gum chewing and take to cigars as all politicians are supposed to smoke "ropes." But Rogers says all the rope that he is going to use will be the kind that can be thrown, and if no "ballot hound" has ever gone in for jaw calesthenics, a precedent is going to be set right now.

Mae Tinee's Best Films

John D. Cahill of 2101 West Monroe Street, Chicago, ranks [illegible] list of the best pictures of 1923 as selected by Mae Tinee, dramatic critic of the CHICAGO TRIBUNE. We are always glad to hear what this critic has to say because she doesn't do much blowing and when she does say something it certainly is worth listening do. If there were more critics of the caliber of Mae Tinee motion pictures would be afforded more intelligent analysis and comment than is the usual trend throughout the country. Less hot air and more common sense. Look at these and see how they measure up with YOUR best:

The Flirt
The Girl I Loved
Circus Days
Ruggles of Red Gap
Merry-Go-Round
Rosita
Anna Christie
Boy of Mine
The Christian
Hunting Big Game in Africa
If Winter Comes
Trilby
Ponjola
The Hunchback of Notre Dame
The Extra Girl
The Call of the Canyon

Breaks Through Type Barrier

The great fear of the motion picture player is that he (or she) will be branded as an actor of a certain type, and once the brand has marked the victim, it seems impossible for him to escape it. He is doomed throughout his entire professional career to play the type of role in which he has made his first outstanding success.

In her latest completed picture, Rosemary Cooper feels that she has defied the brand of type in this production, entitled "Swords and Ploughshares," directed by Emory Johnson for F. B. O., from his mother's original story. Miss Cooper's role was a quintuple characterization, ranging from the sublimely innocent ingenue, to the diabolical villainess, and through the intermediate stages. Like every earnest actress, Rosemary Cooper hopes to be able to build up versatility in her art, and for this reason she is especially happy over her latest role, because it does not definitely fix her as a certain distinct type of player.

"And still they come." Ouida Wildman, who hails from Texas, is the latest contest winner to get into pictures having been given a part with Stan Laurel on the Hal Roach lot in a Scotch travesty yet to be named.

The welcoming hand of the motion picture industry is extended to Bertram Bracken, who is again "calling the shots," having just completed "Defiance," a five-reel feature drama for Wm. B. Brush Productions, Inc., with Naldo Morelli, Lew Cody, Evelyn Adamson, Renee Adoree, Dick Sutherland, Josef Swickard and Buddy Post.

Mr. Bracken has many notable successes to his credit, and has directed numerous stars of the first magnitude. After completing an Anna Stewart production for Mayer, he guided the destinies of four Theda Bara features for Fox in New York, followed by a series of Hoyt Walthall specials, among them "Confession." The return of Mr. Bracken is in no sense a "come-back"; he is merely picking up the broken threads of his career where he left them when he lost his eyesight. While returning from Mexico with a party bringing a number of polo ponies to this country, Mr. Bracken's eyes were painfully injured by the heel of an obstreperous animal. The injury, aggravated by too much exposure to the rays of the Kleigs, brought total blindness for nearly a year and a half. Several months ago a delicate operation restored his eyesight.

EVELYN SELBIE WINS PRAISE OF LOCAL CRITICS; HAS LONG AND ILLUSTRIOUS RECORD

Portrayal of Lame Mother in Seastrom's "Name the Man" Brings Sweeping Praise

Evelyn Selbie is indeed deserving of the high praise bestowed upon her by local critics for her exceptional characterization of Mrs. Collister, the lame mother, in Victor Seastrom's "Name the Man," now at the California Theatre. She considers this role the best of her career, in spite of the hardships she suffered during the filming of the production, being compelled to wear a specially-made shoe seven inches in height, and hobble about with the use of a cane. The long waits between scenes were painful, to say the least.

Of her work in "Name the Man," Florence Lawrence of the Examiner says: "In the scene between mother and daughter . . . the acting of these two women is alone worth an hour at the theatre," while Guy Price of the Herald adds:

"Evelyn Selbie in the character of the mother does a wonderful bit of acting . . . She is splendid."

Pearl Rall, of The Express, in her review of the pictre, says:

"But of all the players Evelyn Selbie and DeWitt Jennings gave the most interesting and significant characterizations. In fact, Miss Selbie's work had a power and dignity that should send her well up the ladder of advancement."

Miss Selbie is remembered as the original "Broncho Billy" girl in the days of his fame. Four years with Essanay, and four with Universal, estaolished her as a character star, and in the past she has characterized prominent roles in many "big" productions of the day, among them "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," "God's Law" and the title role in "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," for Lois Weber, "Pay Me" with Lon Chaney," "Without Benefit of Clergy," for James Young, and "Omar the Tentmaker," for Richard Walton Tully. She is at present under the direction of Robert Leonard at the Goldwyn Studios.

SCHENCK SIGNS C. GARDNER SULLIVAN TO HEAD CONSTANCE TALMADGE UNIT

Well-Known Writer Will Handle All Business Affairs for Connie; Begins Immediately

The screen destinies of Constance Talmadge hereafter are to be guided by C. Gardner Sullivan, dean of scenario writers, who recently left an association of eight years as supervising editor of the Thomas H. Ince Productions, to accept what is said to be an unrivalled contract for an editorial director, with Joseph M. Schenck.

In addition to his editorial supervision of the productions of Norma Talmadge, Mr. Sullivan has been delegated by Mr. Schenck with complete charge of the Constance Talmadge pictures, from the selection of the scripts, directors, and casts, to the final editing of the productions.

The appointment comes not only in recognition of Mr. Sullivan's long conceded place as an authority on production values, but as the direct outcome of his contributions to the filming of "Connie's" last picture, "Dulcy," the deft and refreshing qualities of which ,and particularly the titles, written by Mr. Sullivan, have received widespread comment.

Mr. Sullivan will continue the preparation of the scripts for Norma's pictures and editorial supervision of same, the first production for which he is responsible being "Secrets," regarded by many as the most human and finished offering in which this actress has yet appeared.

He will, however, devote his principal activities to the selection and development of screen material best adapted to gain added favor for Constance, whose flaire for the piquant and true-to-life characterizations which have gained her such popularity, Mr. Sullivan, in common with many film observers, believes has yet to be fully revealed.

The first of the productions to be made under the new arrangement is "The Goldfish," now being directed by Jerome Storm. It is to be followed by "Penelope," a stage play by Somerset Maughn, which will provide the comedienne with the opportunity for subtle shadings of wistfulness and resiliency.

Mr. Sullivan will write several original stories especially for Miss Talmadge, but following "Penelope," will re-adapt "Peggy" for modern translation to the screen. This is one of the first successes, and also served as the first screen vehicle for Billie Burke. It was produced by Ince, under the old Triangle banner, and possesses a charm which has made it live for years as one of the most entertaining comedies ever screened, and which should lend itself exceptionally to Miss Talmadge's personality and talents.

Lewis Wardrobe Equals Museum

Ralph Lewis has one portion of a wardrobe that would cause the soul of the average second-hand clothing dealer to literally writhe in agony were he aware of his amateur rival.

He has the same coat and vest he wore as the political boss in Griffith's "Escape." He also possesses the pair of shoes that he wore when Griffith first selected him to play a lawyer in one of the first split-reelers that the master director made for the old Biograph Company. Griffith told Ralph at the time that he selected him for the lawyer owing to his ability to register such a pleasant sincere smile. Lewis still possesses the cane he used as Governor Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation" and has among his treasures, the overcoat and wide cravat that he used as the miser in "The Conquering Power." One of Ralph's greatest treasures is the old trunk that he has been using ever since he played his first bit on the legitimate stage. He says that so many of the property men try to get to his wardrobe to double for antiques in other picture productions, that he has to keep them under lock and key at all times, to preserve them to memory.

Anna Q. Nilsson probably possesses more hair than any girl in Hollywood in spite of the fact that she recently sacrificed her golden tresses in the name of art. During the making of Richard Walton Tully's First National picture, "Flowing Gold," Anna Q. used a total of nine wigs and now has an order in for more.

Buddy Mason, popular young stunt man, has just completed an engagement with Tom Buckingham's "The Arizona Express" at the Fox studios. He was on this job about three weeks, and was on location with the unit in Mexico. picture here shows one of his most famous stunts, hanging from a bridge by his toes and grabbing a passenger from a passing canoe

AMBITIOUS PROGRAM OUTLINED FOR GRAND-ASHER; BIG PICTURES

Independent Producers Gird for 1924 Fray; Sign Many Noted Stars and Directors

Samuel V. Grand has gone back East for a brief stay in order to still further perfect certain details of his big distribution plan for independent producers, as recently outlined, but before leaving he signed up a number of important productions to be made at the Grand Studio for release by Grand-Asher.

"Rose of the Ghetto," R. William Neill's production, is now under way, but in addition, announces General Manager Samuel Bischoff, Mr. Neill will make four more big all-star features as follows:

"Back of the Beyond," "The First Violin," "The Way of All Flesh" and "The Furnace of Life." Of these, two are famous novels, "The First Violin" being Jessie Fothergill's classic and "The Way of All Flesh," Samuel Butler's greatest work. The other two are originals. All will be produced on an elaborate scale with the finest casts obtainable. Josef von Sternberg will collaborate with Mr. Neill in preparing the scripts, as in the case of "Rose of the Ghetto."

Mr. Grand has also signed four I. W. Irving productions, features with all-star casts, title and directors of which will be announced later. There will be modern stories of dramatic character and of first rate quality. A highly interesting announcement is that Charles Swickard, one of the pioneer directors of the industry, has signed with Grand-Asher for four all-star Swickard productions, which he will direct and in each of which his brother, Josef Swickard, will play an important role. The first of these is Harvey Gates' original story entitled "San Francisco," described as one of the most remarkable and dramatic tales of the Golden Gate City ever written or translated to the screen. The indomitable spirit of the city 'loved around the world,' the tradition of its pioneer ancestry; the characteristic bohemianism of the community, all are embodied in a tensely powerful drama. Sets are to be constructed at once for interiors, but probably some of the exteriors will be made in the northern city. Harvey Gates is one of America's foremost writers for the screen, and among others wrote or adapted "Hell Morgan's Girl," "The Wildcat of Paris," and many others.

"We have a picture in this first one," says Charles Swickard, "which I believe to be one of the strongest I have ever had anything to do with. We intend to give it a cast that will be in keeping with the strength of he drama and an invesiture which will be realistic in the extreme. I regard Harvey Gates as one of the most talented screen authors and scenarists of the day and consider this his best work to dote."

Twelve two-reel comedies starring John Richardson, the eccentric English comedian, are also slated to begin very shortly. These are highly diverting in character, out of the beaten track, and the star is an unctuous and talented man who goes in for unusual costuming and whimsical effects in his comedy. Further details of these comedies will be shortly announced.

Other features are in course of preparation and will bring up the season's quota to at least eighteen, besides which there are to be several specials and more short subjects.

"Thanks to the perfection of our distribution plan by which we will be able to guarantee fulfillment of contracts to our producers," says Samuel Bischoff, "Grand-Asher is now in a position to positively assure exhibitors some of the most interesting output of the year. The studio will be active continuously from now on and facilities are being continually added to and perfected so that those making pictures here can do so with every possible convenience at their disposal. The best talent, stories and directors will enter into every production for release by Grand-Asher."

George Barr McCutcheon's popular novel success, "Husbands of Edith," has been purchased by the Universal Pictures corporation, according to announcement from Julius Bernheim, general manager at the Universay City production center.

"Husbands of Edith" is one of the most popular products of the McCutcheon pen. Universal executives believe it has exceptional possibilities as an all star feature or as a starring vehicle for Reginald Denny. It may be used for the latter purpose.

Another literary purchase of importance by the Laemmle company is Kathleen Norris' novel, "The Butterfly," which probably will be used for a Virginia Valli-Norman Kerry appearance in an elaborate production.

Old-Timers Galore With King Bagg

Despite his youthful appeara and "pep" galore, King Baggo one of the old timers of the pic industry, having been the first inee idol in the old days when "patents company" and the dependents" were having t battles royal, and in his filmin "The Inheritors" for Universal has had a chance to assemb cast of "old timers" to sup Mary Philbin in the Jewel spe

They are Joseph Dowling, Witt Jennings, Otto Hoffman James O. Barrows. Dowling gan his dramatic career fifty y ago when he was just a boy, p ing every type of role conceiv from comedy in vaudeville and the legitimate stage to singing grand opera companies. Exp ences of the other "old timers" just as varied.

"There have been a few yo men who have done fairly wel playing old men's parts," Bag the director, said, "but when t parts entail the characterizat of life extending over a score so years stern experiences must be played by men who h lived the time. Youth cannot true in such a characterizatio age.

"Life is rather fast these d but it will never be fast enou beat the time clocks."

Baggot is enthusiastic about group of veterans which he supporting Mary in the new duction and the veterans are cere in their praise of the star whose work has lifted her the realm of "big timers." got himself played in more three hundred pictures.

Patrice Van has demonstrated that mere men are not the only ones who know the intricacies of the right cross, uppercut, left hook, rabbit punch, and the intrigues that are rife behind the scenes of the prize rings. In her screen stories of the "Fighting Blood" series for F. B. O. she has displayed an amazing knowledge of things pugilistic, and the little dramas of the roped arena have scored tremendous success throughout the country.

Alberta's Mayor New Arrival

Alberta Vaughn may now join other actresses who have "a most embarrassing moment" of which they may write. For while in San Francisco recently, she was embarrassed to the point of deep red blushes.

It seems that Miss Vaughn was introduced to Mayor Rolph of San Francisco. But she was also introduced to several other notables of the city, and all so rapidly that she could not possibly remember one from another.

Later on, she met a man whom she took to be Mayor. Whereupon she began to compliment him upon the beauty of his city, its warm-hearted people, its very wonderful buildings and parks and its competent officials. Finally she asked her new friend, who had been silent throughout her complimentary remarks, how long he had been Mayor.

"Mayor?" queried the man. "I'm not the Mayor. I just arrived in San Francisco this morning."

Miss Vaughn's error proved excusable later, for it developed that the new arrival was an almost exact double of Mayor Rolph and was on many later occasions mistaken for the chief San Franciscan official.

Willis Goldbeck, former newspaper man, publicity man and fan magazine writer, was given his first chance to do a scenario by Rex Ingram. The noted director was attracted by an interview which the writer did with Gareth Hughes in one of the national fan magazines. He employed Goldbeck as his publicity man. Later he gave him the chance to make the screen adaptation of "Scaramouche."

Goldbeck is a graduate of Worcester Academy, Worcester, Massachusetts. He was a member of the British Royal Air Force in defense of London during the war.

UNIVERSAL MONKEY HAILED FROM SINGAPORE; WAS VENICE ATTRACTION AT ONE TIME

Joe Martin Hailed from Far East; Evolved From Good Actor Into Temperamental Star

Joe Martin, once the most famous animal on the screen and recently sold by Universal Pictures Corporation to the Al. G. Barnes circus, was brought to San Francisco from Singapore in 1911, with a consignment of animals shipped by Frank Buck, noted trapper and dealer. The big orang-outang was sold to the Robinson company, San Francisco animal dealers. They wired Universal City. The big ape was then six months old. The studio had not started its zoo at the time, so declined to buy. Sam Behrendt, of the Los Angeles insurance firm of Behrendt and Levy, then conceived the idea of purchasing Joe. This he did for the sum of $250, and placed him on exhibit at Venice Pier as "The Missing Link." "Pop" Saunders, veteran animal trainer, handled his appearances.

When the pier closed he was taken, in 1912, to the "Old Ranch" at Universal City. Universal at the time had leased a number of animals from the Sells Floto circus for a picture directed by Otis Turner, since dead. "Pop" Saunders, handling the animals, thought of the idea of making pictures of Joe, his singularly human countenance being largely the reason. So Universal obtained the services of Charles B. Murphy, noted trainer (who, by the way, is now Universal's zoo superintendent) to train him. Murphy had made the "Adventures of Kathlyn" for Selig Polyscope, and trained Joe for a one-reel comedy directed by Allen Turner. In the meantime Universal had bought the big monkey from Behrendt. The price has always been a secret.

Joe was next used in "The Black Box," a chapterplay with Herbert Rawlinson and Ann Little. From then on, until "Merry Go Round,' he was constantly before the camera and made a long series of starring pictures.

It was during the making of Rex Ingram's "Trifling Women" that the big ape suddenly turned vicious and changed almost overnight, from a docile actor to a "temperamental" beast. He attacked an actor and then his trainer, "Curly" Stecker ,who had been with him constantly since 1915. What caused the transition no one knows.

Al. G. Barnes saw possibilities in him for exhibition purposes, even though he is impossible for work. He offered $25,000 for him, for circus purposes. On the circus man's assurance that the big ape would always have a good home and proper treatment, Carl Laemmle reluctantly consented to the sale. Charles Murphy, the first man to put him into pictures, ushered him out of pictures, loading him into a cage on a circus truck, while actors at the big studio gathered to watch his departure and bid him farewell.

PHIL ROSEN TO DIRECT NEXT GRAF FILM; MARKS GREAT ADVANCE FOR YOUNG DIRECTOR

Will Film "A Wise Son" in San Francisco; Directed Many Celebrities; Was Cameraman

Of unusual significance comes the announcement that Philip E. Rosen has been engaged to direct the filming of the next Graf Production which is now being adapted into continuity form from Charles Sherman's novel "A Wise Son."

Although Rosen is one of the younger directors, his knowledge of dramatic values, pictorial composition and filmcraft in general has been developed in a manner that has placed him in a unique and enviable position among contemporary directors.

Prior to becoming a director he was well known as a camera man, and in that capacity, worked on many of the most notable screen offerings of a few years ago.

When George Loane Tucker came to California to film "The Miracle Man," he sent for Rosen and placed him under contract as head cinematographer of that notable production. This was the start of a warm friendship between the two and he remained with Tucker as conferee until that great director was claimed by death.

Since that time Philip Rosen has been directing his own pictures. Rudolph Valentino, Betty Compson, Wallace Reid, May Allison, and Mary McLarren are but a few of the stars he had directed since directing pictures for Lasky, Metro and Universal.

When the Rockett Brothers contemplated filming the life of Abraham Lincoln they naturally looked about for the finest director they could find for the exacting work to be done. The selection of Phil Rosen for the post as director of this important picture was a high tribute to his genius. This legacy of history, bequeathed to drama lovers, he guarded with a full realization of his obligation, as trustee or executor of a rich estate and after months of earnest work, he presented what has been pro claimed as the most noteworthy offering that has yet come to the great crucible of the screen.

Syd is Proffered Foreign Contract

The latest California star who has refused a flattering offer to make pictures abroad, is Sydney Chaplin. Last week he appeared at a private costume party, attired in the full panoply of a Mexican bandit. Other guests included several men prominent in the film world of our sister republic—one of them being a large distributor of films and the other controlling the principal theatre in Mexico City. They were so impressed with Chaplin's appearance and with the performances they had seen him give on the motion picture screen, that they made him an immediate offer to star in a series of productions to be made in their own country.

This offer was later renewed formally, but Sydney Chaplin had to decline it, because of other local engagements now pending.

In addition to "The Rendezvous," Marshall Neilan's Russian story in which Chaplin was recently featured here, this famous comedian has signalized his permanent return to the screen by working in "Her Temporary Husband," made by First National, and "The Galloping Fish," produced by Thomas H. Ince, both of which will soon receive national distribution.

George Larkin's vigorous personality, contagious smile and hearty laugh have ranked him high among the industry's romantic stars, and at the same time endeared him to countless theatregoers and fellow workers. A talented actor, he brings to the screen also extraordinary athletic and dancing skill.

Mr. Larkin has been signed by F. B. O. for a series of five-reel dramas, the first of which, "Yankee Madness," is now in production.

Philip Rosen is now in New York City to attend the premier presentation of the Lincoln picture. He will leave for Washington within a few days to meet President Coolidge and then come direct to San Francisco to take up his work on "A Wise Son" which he will direct under the personal supervision of Max Graf.

Jack Lloyd, protean artist of the Jack White forces, is portraying in the current Mermaid comedy the white-headed but red blooded "colonel" of ante-bellum Kentucky.

THE WHITE ESCUTCHEON

[Keeping Faith With Yesterday]

By Fred W. Fox

"We are the Dead. Short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved, and were loved . . ."

". . . to you, from failing hands, we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep . . ."

—McCrae.

"If ye break faith with us who die, we shall not sleep." The Beauty must be untarnished; the Traditions must be held inviolate; the Greatness of the Motion Picture must not be belittled. It is not alone for Today that we fight. It is for Yesterday . . . and To-morrow. We have come, from all corners of the earth; from every walk of life; from the low places and the high places; from the canyons and the hilltops, from the meadows and the glaciers; and we have been made into one great fraternity thru the melting pot of the Cinema. Brothers and sisters, not by blood ties, perhaps, but greater ties, ties that reach out and above mortal bounds. We have come together to give the world better entertainment; a better method of education and universal understanding through the allpowerful medium of the silent stage.

In the midst of our labors, our hopes and plans for To-morrow we are rudely awakened by a terrific pounding on the door. This same pounding has been heard at the same door many a time ere this but we have been satisfied to ignore it heretofore. Child's play, perhaps. But lo, what is that ungoldly racket at the gate now? It sounds like the hammerings of a street ruffian. Ah, 'tis the incarnation of Narrow-Minded "Reform" at the ga of Filmdom! It is Sir Shuler who pounds and wouldst j us at the board. He thinks we drink and make mer We plan and labor. We have no time for such rou necks. Avast with him guards! Chase him hen "Camera!" and Filmograph! To the streets with h where he belongs! And the struggle is on; he tries drag the folk of Filmdom to the gutter from whence has sprung but he was waned in power and the gua wax strong. The hosts of the city gather and watch combat. These are strange doings, indeed. Never fore has the intruder at the gates been thrown out. strange; 'tis strange. Yet here this ungainly boisterous mountebank is hurled bodily from the ga of Filmdom. 'Twas thought that the inmates were dr with wine and gaiety, yet here they appear and fig In the midst of their plannings for To-morrow; th labors of To-day and their fond reminiscences of Yes day they stride forth to keep the escutcheon unblack Verily, things have changed!

* * * *

In the midst of the gigantic labors of the motion p ture industry Bob Shuler has knocked. He would e and reform. And what, may we ask, can this man kn about "reform." Reform what?

The Motion Picture is not on the road to Greatn It is Great! It has been proclaimed as such by the m lions of people who seek diversion and entertainmen th world's cinema palaces. When they seek to escape fr n the humdrum things of everyday life they turn to th Motion Picture as the alleviating power. For it br gs to them all the fine things of mortal being . . . Y th . . . Beauty . . . Love . . . Art . Craftsmanship. And on the roster of those w have contributed so mightily to the present greatness of the flickering celluloid we find the names of many w se seats at the table are vacant. They have answered th call of the Great Director on the Greater Set. They h e bequeathed to us, you and I, who now try to carry on their work, a wealth of tradition and example . . . a easury of achievement. Yet here comes a man, from w nce no one knows, who stands upon his own little so p-box and bellows to the world that they are false. H heaps smut upon their cherished names, belittles their cr ftsmanship, and they are not here to defend themsv es. They are beyond the realm of earthly combat. It behooves those who have been left to finish their labors to arise and see that their fair names are not defiled.

Bobby Harron . . . what a fine boy . . . What a beautiful disposition and character. Whether or n he was a great actor we will leave in the scales, but w do know that he lived life as perfectly as it can be li d on this earth. Who is there in all the world that c rise and say that he did not cleave to the teachings o charity and brotherly love as told by the Carpenter. Olive Thomas . . . whose charming screen portrayals entranced great audiences the world over. Possessed of a healthy love of life and a bigheartedness that b gs description. And others . . . and others . . . and others, vested with the first great trials and t bulations of the infant industry and emerging gloriously triumphant with Filmdom's shrine secure, honored and sung by men and women, boys and girls throughout the universe as the makers of Ideals.

To you, people of the motion picture profession, the challenge has been hurled. Shuler questions your honor, he laughs at your work. And what say you? Let it pass, it is but the ranting of an imbecile. Another says, be on with your work and forget it. Yet have YOU stopped to consider the full meaning of his words? Do YOU realize that he condemns you entirely? Are YOU going to permit him to insult the Traditions and Beauty and Greatness of the Motion Picture, for which you have labored so long and earnestly. Are YOU going to carry on that for which Bobby Harron and Olive Thomas and others have given their very lives? How long are YOU going to permit the world to receive these false impressions of you? "Fighting Bob" Shuler is what this vainglorious and cheap imitation of Billy Sunday wants to be called. "Flighty Blah" Shuler would be more adequate. He delights in throwing dirt at you. He thinks he can do it now and for all time to come and you will not protest. He deems you a school of jelly-fishes; without backbone to defend yourselves. How long is he going to hurl invectives at our honored dead, at our work, at us? This "Flighty Blah" Shuler!

"For thee their pilgrim swords were tried,
Thy flaming word was in their scrips,
They battled, they endured, they died,
To make a new Apocalypse.
Master and Maker, God of Right,
The soldier dead are at thy gate,
Who kept the spears of honor bright
And freedom's house inviolate."

—John Drinkwater.

Emoting in Rough Roles

By FANCHON ROYER

She was seated there before us, a lady, exquisitely turned out, harmoniously backgrounded, coolly alert. We were aware of a heart-warming cordiality gently tempered with reserve, a sensitive, fundamental refinement. The conversation, then, was a bit incongruous.

"Oh, yes," stated Lillian Leighton, character actress and philosopher, "I have always looked upon such opportunities as the hag in Thomas' 'Phantom Justice' and my previous role, the uncouth but lovable Ma Pettengill in 'Ruggles of Red Gap' as ideal ones for characterization, and I have always undertaken that type of screen interpretation with an inexpressible thrill. There is a challenge to the imagination and versatility of a performer in the vivid, almost exaggerated position that is undeniably stimulating. Personally, the rougher they are, the better I like them."

Incredulously we stared at the cultivation before us as our mind flew to the underworld character which we had just witnessed at the running of Mr. Richard Thomas' interesting crook story, 'Phantom Justice,' a derelict almost unreconcilable with this woman with whom we were conversing, and thence to Harry Leon Wilson's best-loved creation, Ma Pettengill, a betrousered, aggressive spirit genially rolling brown paper cigarettes giving vent, the while, to quaint but unquestionable oaths. Prize roles, undoubtedly, but as seemingly alien to this well poised student as could easily be imagined.

Nevertheless, there amid her tasteful surroundings, softly lighted, faintly flower scented and perfectly hung, with Dreiser, Cabell, and Sandburg at her elbow, Lillian Leighton was unmistakably rejoicing for them; seeing in these crude shadow folk characterizations over which to gloat! Inconceivable, the contrast, but oh, delicious.

Then we remembered. It was Lillian Leighton whom we hated so admiringly as the stogy, vicious, Boer widow who created the sensation in "Under the Lash," Lasky's adaptation of "The Shulamite." It was Lillian Leighton's sprightly comedy that so set out her role in "Is Matrimony a Failure?", an early Cruze picture. Further, it was Lillian Leighton whose splendid line of squaws, mammies and hags long ago won her distinction and the right to a foremost place in the halls of film fame.

"And they speak of actresses," we murmured.

She summarized her career briefly, casually covering mileage and incident. "I was born in the Indian country of Wisconsin and early progressed from a newspaper editorship in the lumber district to vaudeville, my own stage company, stock. Then pictures. There were long engagements with Selig and Lasky. Lately my best interests have been served in the free-lance field.

"Two of my recent efforts are included in 'Crinoline and Romance' and 'The Call of the Canyon.' I enjoyer doing Lincoln's stepmother in 'The Life of Abraham Lincoln.' That is about all—."

It was borne in on us that here was a woman who had experienced much and observed much, in silence. The unusual scope which has resulted for her she expresses and will express, never in words, but in characterizations.

Defining Drama

By ORVILLE DORR

We were ushered into a small living room elegant, brilliant, tasteful in its furnishings, yet utterly guileless. Each decoration bespoke by its placement the same careful discretion that had fostered its selection. The staid furnishings glistened immaculately, and yet we sensed the feeling that if a child from play carelessly left the print of its fingers on them, no rebuke would have been forthcoming; they would be erased by the same loving hand that first brought the gloss. In brief, "home" was the mood which Martha Mattox had carried out to the most minute detail.

We wanted to know what Miss Mattox thought of current dramatic productions, and she lost no time in telling us.

"Drama, according to our dictionaries, is a composition telling a story of human life by means of the speech or action of the characters. Unfortunately, few of our so-called modern dramas live up to this recipe, especially in motion pictures. It has been my experience that those stories and incidents in real life which could be blended into drama, are not acceptable as such because of the fact that they usually lead to an unhappy or tragical end. I think that most scenarists nowadays, when they begin the preparation of a script, have but one aim in view, to reach the happy climax with the leading characters in a final embrace, throwing, of course, every conceivable obstacle in their path to prevent it. In pictures these obstacles are more of less easily overcome, while in real life many of them become insurmountable. I realize that the public and the exhibitors demand, almost, the happy ending, but I am convinced it is the rare picture that follows the elements of every day life, even to the unhappy ending, that lingers longest in the memories of those who view it. The ordinary humdrum romantic story, unless it is tinged with an element of tragedy as a parallel course of action, is soon forgotten, while the real drama stimulates thought and a desire to penetrate the deeper emotions of life. Tragedy and drama should not be confused; yet in a large majority of our lives the drama is tragedy. Our old dramas and classics which have lived through generations, are in reality our only stories of real life, and they are filled with tragedy. I would love to see real human stories of every day life brought to the screen, but if made realistic, I am afraid the public, and perhaps the censors, would not accept them. It is because we are in daily contact with these elements that we become hardened to them and fail to receive an impression from them, while a beautiful flower, a happy child at play, a kind deed or a tender word, will stir our emotions."

"There have been no more tender, wholesouled characters brought to the screen than the "mother" roles portrayed by Martha Mattox; yet if offered her choice of roles, she would unhesitatingly choose the characterization of a scheming, cunning, stone-hearted villainess.

"You see," she explained, "when I am cast in the part of a mother, I am enacting my natural role in life. All women, even those who are unmarried, if they are fortunate enough to be good observers, know there is no love in life like mother-love. It is the only real love. God could not be everywhere, so he made mothers, and put into their hearts a love that never changes. Beside mother-love, all other heart affairs are insignificant. Thus it is that when the script calls for a mother's tenderness, it is not difficult for me to do those things which under similar circumstances I would do for my own children. It is just a case of "being myself." But I feel I can do my best work in characters that are opposite to my natural feelings; for in those roles it is possible for me to build; to create something in the life of such a character, something that perhaps such a character in real life could not see in herself; in other words, to see and live the character from the viewpoint of the audience."

Like many other actresses of family, she retains the title "Miss," and there are many "Misses" in and out of filmdom who may well envy the willowy suppleness that is still hers, in spite of the cares of motherhood, or, perhaps, because of them, for through the years of pleasant acquaintance we have learned that it is the privilege of devoting herself unstintingly to others that brings the greatest happiness to the real-life Mrs. Mattox.

Palmborg's Paragraphs

(Being one of a series of impressions of film folk and cinemaland anecdotes as written by a motion picture insurance man. By C. E. Palmborg, special analyst and Hollywood representative of the New York Life Insurance Company).

Lon Chaney—a name to conjure with. A name that brings visions of distorted, twisted staples, cowering, crouching Chinamen, cunning, sneaking thieves, big, blustering sailors—all unforgettable types that stand out clearly long after the plot of the story has become dim. As I sit here I can see before me the thief Fagan in Oliver Twist. Fagan the sneaking, lurking, yet ever alert pickpocket who teaches small boys to slip up silently and draw handkerchieves from the pockets of unsuspecting others. The cruel, smirking Fagan.

And the Chinaman in "Shadows." Who could forget him? That poor, little hard working, cowering chink with the sweet smile. He had your sympathy right from the start—he was so real, so human, so pitiful.

Then the cripple in the "Miracle Man." That distorted, twisted wreck of humanity, who dragged himself through the streets and gutters, with pleading hand outstretched, only to scurry back to his dirty underground den and jerk himself back to the evil, powerful beast that he was.

And last, his Quasimodo in the "Hunchback of Notre Dame." That big, hairy, misshapen creature, with the wolfish grin, leering eye and shambling walk. At times so repelling that one turns his face away, only to eagerly turn back for fear of missing a bit of him. A character so horrible, yet so strong and convincing that you can't lose sight of him.

So on and on Mr. Chaney proves that he is a truly great artist. He never picks a role to set off his personal charms (and I assure you that he has many). Rather he prefers a repulsive piece of humanity from whose ugly carcass unusual qualities shine through. And how deftly, how surely he does it all—never over acting.

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

The Eldorado Film Company begin actual shooting on their firts comedy on Wednesday of this week at Santa Rosa. The laugh-makers will open with a garage story called "Bumpers." Earl Olin will handle the megaphone with Troy Brown to crank the camera. Beside four-hundred pound Frank Alexander, who will be featured, the cast will include Pete Gordon, Bill Harver, Al Thompson, Martha Bayes and others.

H. J. Binny, best known to the movie world as "Josh" Binny, was arrested at Sonoma last Thursday and lodged in the jail at Santa Rosa, the county seat. "Josh" has lately been acting as head of a new picture making organization calling themselves the Sonoma Photoplay Corp., and was made up and at work, at the head of the company shooting in an old dance pavilion, when the sheriff arrived to arrest him on telegraphed orders from Sheriff Larry Duggan of Butte, Mont., on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses in that city several months ago. Later in the day "Josh" was released from jail on a thousand dollar bond, furnished by a local member of the organization.

The Marriott Productions have moved from their offices at the Van Dorn Hotel to 255 Golden Gate Avenue, where they will have a whole building. Work on their first picture "Young China,' 'is making good progress. Several new names have been added to their cast among them Ferdernand Galvez, and Irish, the clever dog star who made himself famous in "Half-a-Dollar Bill."

The Cinema Arts and Crafts are making long strides in their production plans. They have decided to put their commercial unit at work first, in fact it is already in production on the first of a series of commercial films to be made for large business organizations. Glen Ellis, well known to the film world, and lately returned from an extended Eastern trip, has joined the force, and will be in charge of the laboratory.

Owing to a disagreement in the company there has been a reorganization in the Intrepid Company, who are preparing to make a sixteen months' picture-making trip 'round the world. Ivor McFadden has severed his connection with the organization, and his place as active head has been taken by Seymore Zelliff, the director of the company. The staunch three-masted schooner purchased by the company, and renamed "The Intrepid," is at present tied up near the Ft. Mason Docks, where its refitting s being rapidly accomplished. However it has now been decided to increase the personnel of the expedition from sixty to a hundred, and that work, as well as the improvements on the boat, will make it impossible to get away as soon as had been intended, so perhaps two months will pass before they can wave farewell to San Francisco.

The Stereoscopic Productions of Oakland are planning an extensive production program of ten dramatic films and twelve comedies to be released through Selznick. George Shelden is at the head of their dramatic unit which will get under way on a Western story called --Crepe-De-Chine Gordon" to feature "Rang Bill Miller.

The comedy company from Universal hea by "Slim" Summerville and Bobby Dunn wor on the streets of San Francisco all last we finishing up on Saturday afternoon with filming of many of the stars who came to to for the Wampas Ball. The film will be ca "Hello Frisco," or something like that. T company returned to Hollywood on Sun evening.

The last two weeks Andre Ferrier's cle company at La Gaite Francaise, the tiny Fre Theatre on Washington Street, have been lighting crowded houses with their product of "Le Gendre de M. Poirier." Too m can not be said in praise of their finished charming performance of the delightful c edy, and not a little credit is due to Cha Fallon, well known to the screen world, alone for his capable work as stage mana but for his delightful rendition of the part the elderly godfather.

Wayne Mack, well known to the stu world, and who deserves much credit for long struggle to really land a real product organization in San Francisco, has at reached the goal of his desires. He is now production head of a new organization incorporated called The San Francisco Ph players Corp., which is being backed by a n ber of men of wealth and prominence in city. The organization will produce a se of five reel pictures, full details of the pers nel of the company and their plans will be re for announcement at an early date.

charming Devonshire girl, who doesn't k that those stupid boresome Yankees do gs all wrong, ye know.

uch a phenomenon has come into the midst Hollywood, quietly, unobtrusively and with fan flare of trumpets.

er name, you ask?

is Joan Cockram, who at 17 received the hest salary ever accorded an English cinema ess, we are told.

he has eased into Hollywood as it were, en a little home in a nearby canyon, and the past few weeks has been simply enjoy- life with her thoroughbred horse and police as her pals. She has just been recuperat- for the while, and now offers for leading s have already started to deluge her.

oan ran away from school at an early age go on the stage. Her parents had immured in a French convent, but even convent lls can be scaled sometimes when either s or Thespis whispers the siren call.

n Joan's case it was Thespis, or rather rpsichore, for it was as a dance in the amps' d'Elysses theatre in Paris that she de her professional debut.

he next broke into the limelight when the ndon Daily Express held a competition to ect an ingenue star for a certain production. Joan, it is said, won over 20,000 others, and then the fact that she had danced as a youngster caused her to be denied the plum on the grounds of professionalism.

But immediately the Gance Film company of France snapped her up for a series of pictures in southern France.

Then back to London where she appeared on both stage and screen on the former in "The Ruined Lady," "The Man Who Came Back" and other hits and on the silversheet in "Lorna Doone," "Riders of the Night," "The Face at the Window" and many others. It was John Cromwell, now directing in New York for William J. Brady who was her first stage director, the man who gave her her first footlight dramatic opportunity.

Miss Cockram's life has been one of adventure. In addition to having the temerity to marry the same man twice after once divorced via an act of Parliament, she was the first actress who dared to cross the English channel in an aeroplane. Incidentally the gods were with her, for she decided to stay in Paris for a short visit and her pilot on the return trip fell into the channel and was drowned.

Then in 1918 she was the first actress to go into Germany after the armistice was signed, when the Germans were still murmuring to themselves "Gott Strafe England," and she did not know when she might have been ravished or torn limb from limb by excited Teuton burghers.

In other respects Miss Cockram has led a model life, if you will pardon the pun which authorities agree is the lowest form of humor. She modelled in hats for Revelle in Hanover Square and for Werth in the Rue de la Paix in Paris.

Moses

By ERIC MAYNE

Eric Mayne

This age is so far removed from that in ich Moses lived and worked, and is so cen- ed and absorbed in the marvels of its own vancement that it is in danger of forgetting w much that Greatest Israelite did to make sent day progress possible. No one can see t great picture, "The Ten Commandments," th its stupendous pictorial representation of exodus of the Children of Israel under the dership of Moses, without being led to a ser and more devout study of the man who ide a Nation then, and whose principles have d so much to do with the making of Na- ns since. The Creative genius of Moses laid foundations of Civilization. Before Plato d dreamed of his Ideal Republic; or Con- cius had laid down the principles of moral d political life; before Washington had led revolt against a degenerate Teutonic King England; and his sycophantic advisers; be- re Lincoln, Garibaldi, and the great host of ble men who have worked for the redemp- n of Humanity; Moses had shown men the rength of glorious freedom and the freedom sanctified strength. Moses was the youngest n, and his mother, anxious to save him from e edict that demanded the infant's life, put m in a papyrus cradle and left him in the er near the bathing place of Pharoah's ughter. He was watched with loving solicitude by his sister, who intensified the interest of the King's daughter in the lonely child and, undertaking to find a nurse, she brought his own mother, and so, in spite of all the untoward circumstances he had the advantage of maternal love, and her maternal pride had its reward in later years. Under the patronage of Pharoah's daughter, Moses was educated and trained for the work that was before him, and in the hands of Fate the royal lady was instrumental in preparing the man who was to bring disaster to the House of Pharoah. In spite of all the attractions that a luxurious environment must have presented, the soul of Moses was in revolt. "By faith Moses refused to be called the son of Pharoah's daughter. Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." He resented the oppression to which his people were subjected and in anger he killed an Egyptian who was beating one of his fellow Israelites. It is this incident that first shows us the humanness of Moses. Without human understanding a man cannot ever be a successful leader of his fellows.

So we read that after he had killed the Egyptian, fear drove him to Midian. There his antipathy to injustice brought him in contact with a Priest of Midian, who was greatly interested in him, and who eventually became his father-in-law. In Midian, the future deliverer of the Israelites was prepared for his great work. Before he could make he must be made. Before he could lay the foundation of a great Nation, The Almighty must lay the ground work of a great leader. And therefore when the time came he was ready for his work, and he dealt with it in no uncertain manner. He met Pharoah on his own ground and overcame him. He led the people forth a struggling, undisciplined, servile mass, he developed their strength, their nobility, their powers to give to the world imperishable names in government, literature, art, and all that ministers to the highest form of progress. He made laws for them and he taught them how to keep them. He began at the beginning. Before Moses there was no organized religion. He gathered up their wandering thoughts and disconnected impulses and centered them in one God. Man must worship! The advance of civilization is marked by the advance of worship. The better the man the better his God. Moses demanded spirituality in worship. Spirituality is the essence of all true religion. He would have no more graven images, no more likenesses of earthly things; it must be a religion of the heart. He went still further; a clean heart was not enough, there must be a clean body. Clean thinking, clean eating, clean living. If he was an Idealist his Idealism was practical; if he had visions of what ought to be done, he showed how it could be done. He combined the spiritual and the ideal with the constructive and the practical. He developed the personal and individual responsibility. The personal power he had over this people is clearly shown by the fact that the moment his presence was withdrawn they lapsed into the sordidness of their former state.

Here again we get a glimpse of his humanness. When he saw the evil that had taken possession of them in his absence, he lost his temper and threw down and destroyed the tablets on which were written the commandments for their guidance to the higher life. The progress of civilization is slow. It is retarded by the perverseness and stupidity of the people; by the failure and incompetence of its leaders. The Israelites wandered for forty years before they were in any degree fitted to enter the promised land. Mankind has been struggling through wildernesses forty hundred years seeking promised lands, getting now and then a glimpse of the golden fields, entering now By faith he saw the day of freedom and the

A Nigh Discovery By LAMAR BAUER

It took Will Nigh to discover the latent talents in Edward Burns to take him from the ranks of college boys and give him his first opportunity before the camera. Not that Mr. Burns had never acted before his enlistment by Nigh. Not at all; he had been grealy interested in the theatre and acting long before donning long trousers, and at fifteen was the author of several one-act plays, including "Lilac and Moonlight," which was produced at his school during his final year.

When I first saw Mr. Burns en scene, Sidney Olcott and he were standing in a Parisian apache den—at the Lasky studios, of course—and Mr. Olcott was explaining the business of the next scene with Gloria Swanson in "The Humming Bird."

He was dressed in a grey tweed sport suit, Fedora hat and carrying an ebony cane. When first meeting Edward Burns, one is struck by the very youthfulness of the actor who has appeared opposite most of the well-known stars of the screen.

I have learned from a certain actor in New York, who has been acquainted with Burns since his knicker days, that he has always had a difficulty in making people believe his age.

Mr. Burns really "broke" into pictures. That is, he left college upon deciding that all was not what it should be with Greek and the other dead languages.

Arriving at the Long Island studios of the Fox Film Company, with only the clothes he was wearing for wardrobe, he entered the casting office with a studied theatrical air.

After the usual courtesies given by the office were completed, Will Nigh, who was then directing Valeska Suratt, entered the office. He had been desperatly attempting to cast the juvenile lead in his picture "Love's Romance," and the production was being held up until the part was filled.

He caught sight of Burns and enthusiastically said "You are the very man for the part."

Calling Burns into the office, he spoke to him regarding the picture and offered him the juvenile lead. "Will you take the part for seventy-five dollars a week?" asked Nigh.

Too happy for words, Burns immediately signed. He was to begin work on the picture that very afternoon, and realizing that he knew nothing about screen acting to speak of, and nothing at all about film make-up, he returned with sinking heart to the studio that afternoon.

When greeting Nigh, Mr. Burns said: "Mr. Nigh, I saw you last night in 'The Red Streak,' and thought your make-up was perfect. Can I borrow your grease paint today? I think it the best I ever saw."

"Surely, Mr. Burns," agreed the delighted director, "And I'll make you up myself."

Nothing could have been arranged more perfectly for Burns, and upon his arrival on the set to work, he was instructed as to the action of the scene with Miss Suratt. It was an important scene in the story—a young man returning to the home of his beloved after having received the consent of her father—and Burns went through it like a trouper.

After his first day's work he was told to be sure and see the 'rushes' in the morning.

We will let Mr. Burns tell the story himself.

"I was totally broke," burns says, "having spent all my last month's allowance on my actor's wardrobe and had no place to spend the night. I asked Nigh if I could possibly get a loan of ten dollars till I could cash a check. He loaned me the money and I acquired a hotel room for the night and some make-up articles.

"Upon returning to the studio in the morning I met Miss Suratt, she asked me if I had seen the 'rushes.' I did not know what 'rushes' were from 'Eve's' leaves,' but agreed to do anything she said.

"Entering what I later discovered to be the projection room, I was met by Mr. Nigh and the other members of the cast. The picture was begun and I can truthfully say that never in my life did I feel so awkward as I did while first viewing myself on the screen.

"My work pleased Mr. Nigh and Miss Suratt very much and I could not resist telling them the truth. * * * that I had never before seen film make-up until that day and that I had not one idea what film acting was all about.

"They were surprised, but pleased and I soon received an advance on my first week's salary.

"My motion picture career had begun!"

Since then Mr. Burns has appeared in numerous screen successes, the most notable of which was "East is West" in which he played 'Billy Benson' opposite Constance Talmadge and in which picture it may be said he made his name. Afterwards followed "Jazzmania" with Mae Murray, "Scars of Jealousy" for Thomas Ince, "Havoc" for Universal and others too numer to mention.

Mr. Burns' success has not spoilt him in least, and he is often referred to as 'the h pist bachelor in Hollywood.' He lives in B erly Hills with his servants and dogs, and be often seen among the Hollywood H mounted on his favorite pony.

A splendid athlete, Burns is a proverbial ture of health,' although he finds occasi moments for his piano, on which he plays well.

Of his present picture, Burns does not s very much, but if looks convey anything, w out for him after "The Humming Bird." Gloria Swanson, star of the production, Sidney Olcott, the director, predict a real p for him on the screen, which may be pa gathered from the fact that Warner Bros., signed Mr. Burns to play the masculine in "Broadway After Dark," their biggest ture of the New Yar, which will be dire by Monta Bell, formerly associated with Cha Chaplin.

Thus a film career was successfully upon a bluff. But the bluff worked only porarily and proven ability was the fou tion upon which Burns' successful career laid.

"Where all good filmfolk get together."

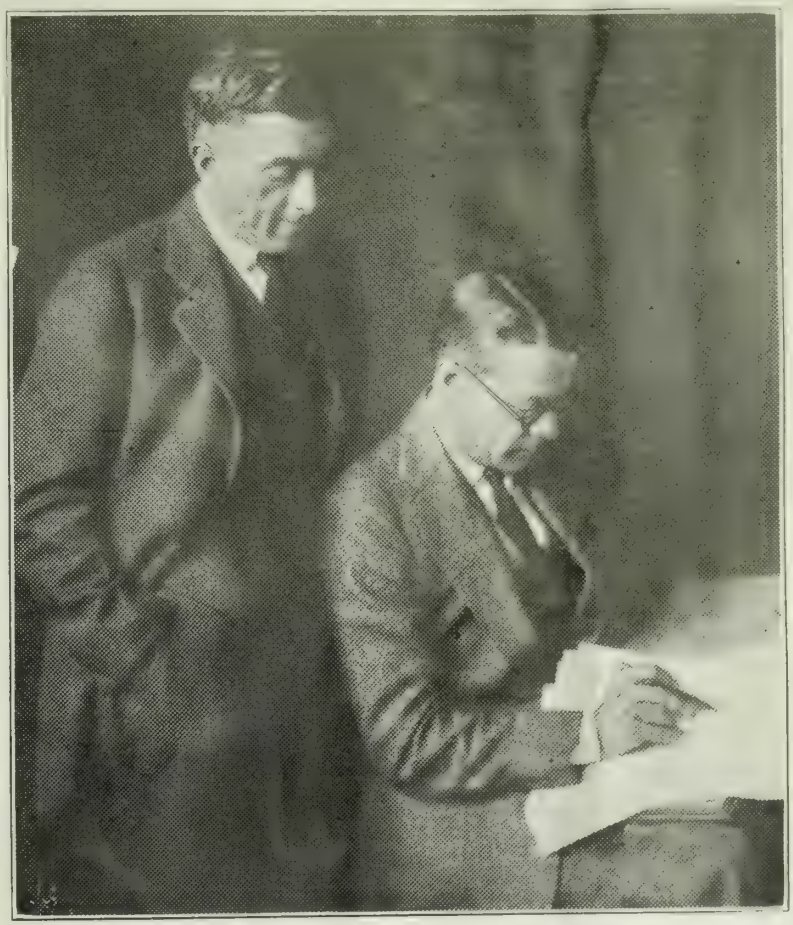
Centralization

By GEORGE LANDY



rles and Albert Kenyon are brothers od, and also in their craft as scenario s. As a matter of fact, they do not orate on their scripts, but it is entirely l that they discuss generalities re- g the literary end of the motion pic- vorld, and in one instance, at least, they ast to the same theory. This consists firm belief that the one great hope for tterment of films lies in a centralized rity, backed by ability to execute and idest latitude of actual execution.

" motion picture is, after all, based on ory. No story can be stronger than its st author; and the usual film has about uthors! First, there is the contributor e original idea or story. Then comes ontinuity writer. Third is the director, y with an assistant or two, who also ey must add something to the script. h is the production manager. Fifth star or leading player. Sixth is the . Seventh is the titler. Eighth is the al manager usually in New York.) is the big exhibitor, who is so often in to preview the picture and give his Tenth is the sales manager — and y some of his cohorts add their bit. ort, there are far too many cooks for e broth—naturally, it is spoiled.

"e motion picture producer can well re- at least one lesson from the stage. ilm producer or director strives not to ret the manuscript which is handed to but add to it. In this respect, he is ent from the stage director, who usually with the author—or even without him n endeavor to get the actors and the settings to bring out the story which lready been accepted. The film di- uses the script just as a starting he feels he must keep on building it d up and up; and each of the other people or more, who usually take a at the story, feels the same way.

"e chief trouble with the literary side otion pictures is that it is purely nical. The present system does not an author the opportunity to work out eatment of the idea, but merely per- im to state that idea, and then all these 'authors' treat it as they see fit.

"f the hundreds of thousands of stories have been submitted for the screen, ven of the thousands which have been lly produced, how few—if any—reveal work of a genius! Imagine Ibsen, espeare, or Eugene O'Neill, forced to it a play in synopsis form or as a short ! Take any one of Lord Dunsany's as—it is the treatment in all of these shows the master. The idea is im- nt, of course, and also the narrative expounds it; but after all, it is the ment and the execution which reveal the s. The painter, the sculptor, the archi- and the musician—each executes his ; and therein they find the opportunity press that spark which makes their s masterpieces.

short, the cause for the appalling me- ity which pervades the motion picture world, is lack of centralization. Those few men who have the opportunity to evolve an idea and carry it all the way through to the finished film, show the superiority of the individualistic method. Lubitsch, Seastrom, Griffith, Chaplin, Von Stroheim and Buchowetzski, the latest arrival from abroad who will direct Pola Negri's next picture—they all write their own stories, direct them and edit them. That is the logical procedure, and that is why the productions made by these men stand out as fine pieces of artistic craftsmanship. Insofar as they have the opportunity to work out the treatment of their stories, they have the chance to bring forth superlative pictures.

"Of course, this puts a far greater responsibility on the author-producer-director, but it is a responsibility which he must accept, and which must be granted to him by his employer. It may mean a reduction in the quantity of pictures turned out, but it will surely work an improvement in the quality."

To have Charles and Albert Kenyon propound a theory, gives it, of necessity, much weight because of the successful experience of each of them. Charles has come into national prominence as the author of "Kindling," for many years regarded as a most important contribution to our native drama. When its star, Margaret Illington, came to the films, Charles Kenyon came with her as her author. Subsequently, he served two years at Goldwyn as scenario editor, specializing on the adaptations for the Eminent Authors Series. "The Invisible Power," "Bunty Pulls the Strings," and "The Penalty," were also done there. Later he held a similar post at Universal, where his star contribution was "The Power of a Lie." He has been freelancing for about a year, with Fox taking most of his product on order; for this studio he recently finished an original, "The Apache," for Jack Gilbert, and is now adapting "The Power of Cain" for the same star's succeeding vehicle.

Albert Kenyon has been writing original scenarios and adaptations for over six years. He started at Universal, later went to Metro, where he wrote several scripts for Bert Lytell; returning to Universal, he scenarized "Bayu," "Nobody's Bride," and "The Self-made Wife." Of late, he, too, has been freelancing. His original, "The Country Doctor," is being filmed with Ralph Lewis, and he has just completed adapting "The Monster" for Roland West.

PUBLIC OPINION

6856 De Longpre Ave.,
January 12th, 1924.

Editor "Camera!"
Hollywood, Calif.
Dear Sir:

I have just finished reading the January 12th issue of "Camera!".

I have studied the article called "The Masquerader" and have come to the conclusion the clergyman who wrote "Movie Gall" is a wolf in angel costume. I suppose he is angry because he cannot become a "star" by being a "masquerader" as the moving picture industry only uses people who are on the level, and first of all, with clean characters.

I firmly believe that if said clergyman would start to clean up in the ranks of the reformers and ministers he would be far more in public favor as a man who had really done something. He is speaking of "Fatty" Arbuckle, Gaston Glass and some of the feminine stars. They have suffered for their wrongdoings, so why not leave the past alone? It cannot be done over.

I have traveled all over the globe and have held some positions in my day that required more intelligence and tact than this "wolf angel" will ever have. No matter how lawful and respectable an organization is there will always appear such cases as the "wolf angel" is trying to make a mountain of. But it appears to me that in recent years such cases, and many even worse, have been exposed in the ranks of the clergy and reformers. I would lik to know where this "wolf angel" gets this . . . . lingo. I have met many people in this world with foul tongues but certainly "Movie Gall" cannot come from a man who is supposed to be a servant of God.

I firmly believe the moving picture colony of Hollywood and the men who lead them can run their own affairs and be respectable citizens without any advice or insults from such a cheap-imitation reformer.

Yours very truly,
A Reader of "Camera!"
Signed: WILLIAM A. GEORGSEN.

Mr. Fred W. Fox,
Editor "Camera!"
Dear Sir:

The creed "Movie Gall" appearing in the January issue of Bob Shuler's Magazine may have been written by a disciple of the Man of Sorrows but it reads like the caporing of a moral degenerate, the idiotic raving of a moron, the assinine drivel of a filthy-minded imbecile. Such an outpouring of blackguardly invective and scurrilous falsehoods might be expected from a derelict of the slums but it does not become an exponent of Christian charity and brotherly love.

Who and what is this man, that he should presume to sit in judgment upon his fellow creatures? Is this outrageous attack inspired solely by religious zeal, from a desire to correct an evil or is it simply an outpouring of envy, malice and bigotry? The morals of the men and women of the motion picture industry suffer none at all in comparison with the morals of the clergy. There are individual exceptions in both classes. True, the Arbuckle affair was deplorable, deserving of all the condemnation it called forth; it was almost as bad, in fact, as was the case of the minister of God's gospel who, in this state, only a few months ago, was sentenced to imprisonment for outraging his ward, a child of tender years; almost as bad as that of a certain clergyman in New Jersey who was shot and killed in the arms of his paramour; almost as bad as other crimes for which hundreds, literally hundreds, of these teachers of righteousness are at present serving time in the penitentiaries of every state in the Union. One of the greatest scandals the world has ever known concerned a leading light of the pulpit and the wife of one of his parishioners. This took place in Brooklyn not so very many years ago. Of course, the reverend teacher was whitewashed, but his guilt was proved beyond a doubt. Do we, because of these individual derelictions, condemn the clergy as a class, and intimate that the best are no better than the worst? No; we have too much Christian charity for that. The clergy are not so free from sin and shame that they are fitted, by superior moral excellence, to sit as censors.

Take them as a class, the members of the motion picture profession have a deep reverence for religion and its earnest teachers. They honor and respect those ministers of the Gospel who expound the Word of God with a soul filled with sympathy and sorrow for human frailty, but for the egotistical ministerial-mountebank, scandal-monger and publicity-hound of the cloth they have only contempt too profound for words.

Taking it for granted that the Rev. Bob is the author of that filthy diatribe, he is deserving only the scorn of all right-minded men and women. A mind capable of such thoughts and feelings is not fit to preach the Gospel of Christ. His accusations;

Mr. Fred W. Fox, Editor "Camera!"
Hollywood, California.
My dear Mr. Fox:

I am taking great pleasure in complimenting you for your excellent article in the "Camera!" in the January 12th, issue about "A word or two about HIS "HYMN of HATE" and I want to say that YOU are more than RIGHT and I have told so to my pal Fred Niblo here last Saturday. Your little comparison about the Nobel and the Booby Prize is real witty and made me laugh. Our little crusader for the right? as you say in your article should be more than crushed when he reads your article, providing that he will be able to understand same. I have my doubts to that.

I was one of the pioneer directors in the City of the Angels and we were happy and contented there till the so-called reformers came to town and started things. When I first landed there we were the greatest and everyone was more than anxious to do things for us and try to make us like the City of Angels. But they were the real and honest to God Californians and not the long w..... Iowans and etc.

I want to assure you, Mr. Fox, that with you in heart and soul and if the something I can do to be of some servi you no matter where and what it is, command me and I am more than yours al and forever.

Thanking you for your many past kindn to me I am most sincerely yours always,

Dear Sir:

Just a line to let you know that I am you tooth and toe nail in your fight a Shuler's intolerant, unrighteous attack the people of the screen. I wonder if that blinded by self-righteousness and vait is aware of the fact that he is breaking E one of the commandments as well as ing the Sermon on the Mount. He is the name of God in vain every time he his inflated fabrications and he incurs the censure our Master gave to hypocrites. unto you, Pharisees! for ye love the most seats in the synagogues, and greetir the markets. Woe unto you, scribes and isees, hypocrites! for ye are as graves appear not, and the men that walk over are not aware of them. (Luke 11:43, 4 rejoice in the truth of our Master's stat when he said, "Not everyone that saith me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kin of Heaven; but he that DOETH THE OF MY FATHER which is in He (Matt. 7:21.)

I wonder if Shuler ever stops to thi the true import of the Lord's prayer wh repeats the first line even, Our Father art in Heaven—it does not say MY Fath YOUR Father, but OUR FATHER, it in ALL mankind.

The people of the screen are true hu tarians and are bringing joy and happir countless thousands. I love them all; th my friends and I am their friend.

As much as I dislike entering controv friendship, justice and true Christianity me to heartily endorse "Camera's" stan vehemently denounce Shuler's intolerar tack upon a well meaning people. "Ca and Filmograph are on the right track high time such persecution was stoppe and for all.

With my kindest thoughts and good for your success in behalf of the people screen, and assuring you of my staunc port, I am,

Very sincerely,
MRS. LORENZA STEVI

Custom-Made Scripts By EDITH M. RYAN

Better stories, better pictures! Better stories, once again, better directors, better actors! Better stories are reputation-makers! Hail the story and the scenario writer who has come into his own!

"Every leading star and producer who have arrived at eminence in motion pictures and kept their places have accomplished it through original stories," says Thomas J. Geraghty, well known scenario writer and production editor who has adapted many Paramount successes and prior to that was associated with Douglas Fairbanks following a long newspaper and magazine career. Mr. Geraghty quickly names Douglas Fairbanks, who has used originals entirely, Mary Pickford, half of whose successes were originals, Harold Lloyd, Charlie Chaplin, "Bill" Hart, Charlie Ray, Tom Mix and others, who have relied so much on original productions of Cecil B. De Mille and the Sennett Comedies as a starter for his argument. He declares that good stories have created star makers and that in the last word the success of the industry is largely in the hands of the skilled scenario writer.

"Every year since the beginning of pictures has shown the development of some phase of the art," says Mr. Geraghty. "Acting has developed about as far as it can go, photography highly perfected, direction has become a science while the last person to develop is the scenario writer. He was almost persona non grata at the beginning, for the early directors didn't care for scripts, didn't know their worth. Now important has he become today, that a clever director wants to be associated with a good scenario writer and even goes so far as to have it put in the contract that he be furnished one who can also cut, title and edit a picture.

"If the good director follows the continuity and does not deviate from it. He is supplied with all the details of production including scene descriptions, with all the action, mood, motivation and the mechanics of gesture faithfully recorded. Everything has been anticipated in the script, so his main business is to get his "props," sets, costuming, cast and crowd to work."

Mr. Geraghty is most optimistic as to the future of pictures, but his list of scintillating scenario writers is not a staggering one. He says the majority are ill named, since they can't follow routine and haven't the necessary experience and knowledge of things to know whereof they write. He confines his list to eight or ten who have survived since the advent of pictures and these he considers experts.

"Many pictures are not only done on the sets but as well in the cutting room. Here your scenario writer who knows production and editing, will take the material and get more insistent values, through the process of putting in and taking out, adding a title where it furnishes the sauce for the action, so to speak," says Mr. Geraghty. "All the text book learning and academic training will not make a scenario writer. He can only become eminent by outstanding work, to have made a reputation like a famous surgeon, lawyer, scientist and back of the reputation must be aptitude, and a thorough experience. The reason there are so few good writers is that those who are promising want to start at the top."

Mr. Geraghty believes that there will be more originals.

"Stories must fit the wearer. There have been so many failures because producers stocked up with stories and plays that could not be made to have the remotest relation to the talents of the star who appeared in them. Here is where the heaviest waste goes in production—investment in stories that are inadequate and the time lost hunting for stories. I look," he added, "for many leading authors to put their own stories into continuity. Booth Tarkington, for one, is greatly interested.

"Working with me on the continuity for his 'Pied Piper Malone,' his original for Thomas Meighan, Mr. Tarkington remarked that he had no conception of the difficulty of scenario writing, that it was far more intricate than play writing, for there is no end to the detail involved."

Mr. Geraghty puts the seal on the art of pictures by declaring that so much more logic is wrapped up in the construction of a picture that the loose ends of a play greatly impede its appeal. He agrees most emphatically with Ben de Casseres, noted New York critic who said recently that all of the seven arts are combined in a perfect picture.

"Back of the perfect pictures is always the superior continuity," says Mr. Geraghty. "Bad continuities have killed many a good story while good ones have saved many a poor story. The importance of the scenario writer to an empty theater is the same as a play wright with a good play which will open a theater and put a good company to work. He is the first important cog in the making of pictures. With a badly handled story the theater will remain closed. The play, as Shakespeare says, is the thing!"

Mr. Geraghty holds a most distinctive position among the noted writers in the film colony, since his name on screen productions as adaptor has its ranking with star, author and director for he has secured fame on his own for one consistent success after another. It is well understood that he knows his craft, and that he had won a name in the newspaper and magazine world when he turned his gift to originals and adaptations for the screen. The knack of story telling—"the brightening up each old dull bit of fact" as Browning puts it, is his, because he has the trained writer's eye for the right touch at the right time; the expert's quick intuition for values and shading, the experienced man's ability to handle most tellingly, the difficult mechanics in motion-picture making are likewise his because he started as a student determined to be a real force in this art that combines as he insists "all seven of the arts."

Operatic Patriotism By LUCILE ERSKINE

A curious thing happens when Lester Hugo sings. You understand every word. Furthermore, Mr. Castle believes we ought to sing in our own tongue.

"In Italy," he says, "German operas are sung in Italian, in France the same opera is presented in French and you bet the Vaterland goes on hearing German. Yet the same fight is made over there to nationalize the music as is being waged here now. A Russian tenor will sing the different languages of his audience in his concert tours through Europe, but when he gets to us, will he learn English? The idea would make him smile. No, he sings in Russian in the United States."

The movement to snatch music away from the net of European languages was started in Chicago, so Mr. Castle says.

"America began," he went on, "to think a little more of herself after the war. Then we decided to have opera sung in the language we all love and can understand. I feel, though, that Los Angeles rather than the East, is the favored spot for this truly native flower to bloom. For here, you have no mould of prejudice. Free ideas have a quick growth in this luxuriant land, too. And when the new opera house is built in this great music center, why shouldn't we weep with Butterfly in English and soar with Siegfried in our own tongue, too?

"France insisted on French, because being thrilled in the Gallic speech made their men better citizens, developed patriots. If we did the same, every opera sung in English would be another Star Spangled Banner."

Mr. Castle recently left Chicago where he was part of this movement for the lure of the new Mecca of art. On Saturday he was soloist in the concert given by the Trio Intime in Chickering Hall and sang all of the songs, some French, some German, in English.

He is wise enough to know that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," yet I doubt if he has ever been inside any of the gay cabarets of the city. He prefers the mountains, the streams and the big outdoors.

He is happily married and has a fine boy. He is not one to talk of his personal affairs, except when arranging for his family's welfare and comfort. He is a clever business man, as well as an actor and has made numerous real estate investments which have proven to be very wise. At present his home is in one of the very handsome flats that he owns—a comfortable, tasteful place, located where each month sees an increase in its value.

Mr. Chaney is one of my largest policy holders and I am proud to have him as one of my clients and I hope I have him as a friend. An honorable man, fair and square, a man that's a man.

Moses

By faith he saw the day of freedom and the land of great glory. Nowhere in history have we clearer proof of the inexorable demands that are made upon leaders. The people were clamorous for water and the Almighty instructed him to speak to the rock and water should be given. But the impatience of the people exasperated him, and he smote the rock vigorously twice, and said, "Here now, ye rebels, must we bring you water out of this rock?" He lost his temper, and with that he lost the promised land. Even after all his great work he overstepped the mark.

The greatest man must remember that he is a man, not a God.

If for a moment he forgets that, he loses all.

And now we come to the tragic close of this great career. But by the beauty and strength of his character, Moses turns the tragedy into a sublime epic. His greatness as a leader enabled him to realize the justice of his fate. When a man has done his work and he tries to do more, he undoes that which he has already done. Moses had worked for the people, and so long as that work went on ,the end was being accomplished. He was the greatest man, but above him there was a greater Power and to that Power, with the grace and dignity and strength that had sanctified his whole life, he gave devout submission. "But no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day."

D. W. GRIFFITH DISPUTES LONG-RUN HONORS; OUT-DISTANCES OTHERS BY FAR

Premier Producer-Director Cites "Way Down East" and "Birth of Nation" as Examples; Net More; Bigger Audiences

With the recent claim that a new record has been made for the long-est run of a motion picture on Broadway, it is interesting to recall that "The Birth of a Nation" ran at the Liberty Theater for forty-four weeks. This theater had a seating capacity 75 per cent greater than the Criterion Theater, for which the new record is claimed. To draw a fair comparison, it would be necessary for "The Covered Wagon" to continue thirty-three weeks more to equal the actual record of D. W. Griffith's old masterpiece.

"Way Down East" also makes a forbidding challenge to the new record, as this picture ran for forty-two weeks at the Forty-Fourth Street Theater, with a seating capacity of more than fourteen hundred, or more than twice as large as the Criterion (N. Y.). To equal "Way Down East" record, "The Covered Wagon" would have to run more than eighty weeks.

As to prices and volume of money, "The Birth of a Nation" played to the highest theatrical prices of that day, or two dollars a seat, and a similar price for today would be three dollars a seat, which is the standard theatrical price. "Way Down East" played at two dollars for orchestra seats, with two hundred of the best seats at three dollars, and eighty seats at five dollars, whereas "The Covered Wagon" has held the top price at one dollar and a half.

The totai records show that both "The Birth of a Nation" and "Way Down East" played to more than twice as many people and to not less than four times as much money as the new claimant.

Helene Chadwick Signs N. Y. Contracts

Helene Chadwick, shortly after her arrival in New York, signed two contracts which will keep her busy in the East for the next two months.

Miss Chadwick has been selected to appear opposite Rudolph Valentino in his first production for Famous Players-Lasky. Production on this will start within the next four weeks.

In the meantime Miss Chadwick will play the leading role in "The Masked Dancer" for Distinctive Pictures, upon which she will start work immediately.

Kerr Voted to Metro Executive Staff

Harry Kerr, for the past two years casting director for Metro, has been advancer to the executive staff of the studio and in the future will be assistant to Joseph Engle, vice-president. Kerr is succeeded at the casting office by Pete Hungate, for several years in the casting department of Lasky"s.

Slater Will Head Goldwyn Rentals

Clyde Slater has been added to the executive staff of the Goldwyn studios. He will be sales-manager of the newly created rental department. The studio has enlarged its technical equipment and is making an active campaign to induce independents to produce their pictures there.

This is the first time that the big Culver City plant has been open to outside producers.

Helen Lynch Cast in De Mille's 'Triumph'

Cecil B. DeMille has cast Helen Lynch in an important role in "Triumph" his current feature and his first directorial effort to follow "The Ten Commandments."

Miss Lynch was chosen for the role by Mr. DeMille after a careful scrutiny of available players, for her natural beauty and ability to wear stunning creations. She is now in the hands of the Lasky modiste and will appear in no less than ten new gowns.

Evelyn Selbie, whose characterization of the lame mother in strom's production of the famous "Name the Man," Victor Sea-Hall Caine novel, has been greeted with expressions of highest approval by local critics.

Defiles Pulpit With Message

Infuriated by the speed and vigor with which the film people replied to his recent editorial assault Bob Shuler, "reform"-crazed pastor, last Sunday night delivered a prelude sermon at his church in Los Angeles and read excerpts from "Camera!" and Filmograph denouncing his tactics. Needless to say he read only the parts that weren't too severe and twisted the replies to suit his own purposes.

He said the motion picture industry was "rotten," and instead of making any apology he would continue his tirade in the next issue of his magazine. His message, however, did not please his congregation and disgust was much in evidence.

NEILAN WILL START ON "TESS OF THE D'UBERVILLES" WITH BLANCHE SWEET

Noted Director Will Return to Goldwyn Fold; Will Film Renowned Subject; Starring Wife

Marshall Neilan is to return to the Goldwyn fold and continue work on his contract, interrupted since last spring for a long vacation and for his direction of Mary Pickford's' "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall.

His first picture will be the many times postponed "Tess of the D'Ubervilles" with his wife, Blanchec Sweet, as Tess." Camera work is awaiting the release of Miss Sweet by Thomas H. Inc, who has had her at work behind closed doors for many weeks on "Those Who Dance." It is expected that she will be free in about ten days.

When "Tess" is started it will be the first time that Miss Sweet has worked under the direction of her husband since 1918, when they did "The Unpardonable Sin" together.

And when it starts one of the oldest mutual admiration societies in fildom will resume its daily meetings. "Miss Sweet is the most wonderful actress in the world—the cleverest, most adaptable,, most beautiful, most soulful, most intelligent—" and so on until his listener wanders away, "Mickey" will tell everyone who comes on the set.

"Mr. Neilan is a genius, a positive genius, when it comes to the direction of pictures," Miss Sweet will start her conversation with a visitor. "He is limited by the commercial necessities of picture-making. But he stands out head and shoulders above every other director in the business. I feel inspired when I work with him. He could make a great acctress out of any woman."

Dorothy Seay With 'Flattery' at Waldorf

The portrayals of little Dorothy Seay continue uninterruptedly. According to latest report she was at the Waldorf studios playing the part of an old-fashioned girl in "Flattery," which is being directed by Tom Forman.

Belcher Protege in S-L Service Film

Ina Anson, pupil of Ernest Belcher, is dancing in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" the famous Service poem being filmed for the screen by Sawyer Lubin at the Metro studios.

The work of Philippe De Lacy is replete with heart interest. He enjoys an enviable position in the ranks of motion picture children. At the present time Philippe is playing in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" which Sawyer-Lubin is filming at the Metro studios. Previous portrayals include "Rosita" with Mary Pickford, "Pioneer Trails" for Vitagraph, "Divorce" with Jane Novak, the soon-to-be-released "Why Do We Live?" in which he plays the principal role, and many other productions of note.

Gertie Has Reel Artistic Recipe

"To a five-reel measure of good story, add six parts of capable artists, one tripod of first-class cinematography, flavor to taste with dashes of comedy and melodrama, turn it over to a conscientious director for mixing, garnish with a box-office title and clever sub-titles, serve with hot exploitation sauce, and you have a palatable photoplay pudding."

That is the recipe given by Gertrude Astor. Admittedly, some of the ingredients for this morsel of entertainment are as difficult to obtain as the wherewithal for a pre-Volstead, but they are available.

Sacramento Buys Farnum Script

Dorothy Farum, writer and scenarist has sold to the Sacramento Pictures Corporation one of her original stories, "The Unfair Sex." It is a story of bigamy—a woman who marries a man and a career at the same time.

The picture is scheduled to go into production immediately following "Listen Lester"—now being produced by the Sacramento Corporation with Louise Fazenda in the leading role.

Miss Farnum recently completed screen adaptions of "Beau Brummel" and "Lover's Lane" for the Warner Brothers.

Lewis Sargent and Billy Franey are playing the leading male roles in the third Hysterical History Comedy, "Benjamin Franklin," which Bryan Foy is directing at the Hollywood Studios.

Cameraman Shoots Night Sea Fight

What are expected to result in the most perfect and most beautiful moonlight scenes ever made a part of a motion picture were filmed last week for Frank Lloyd's "The Sea Hawk," now in its 4th week of production, by Norbert F. Brodin.

With the moon's rays making a very helpful hilation upon the ocean Mr. Brodin's camera recorded the attack of a Moorish gallease upon an English frigate of the 16th Century period, and of the chase which ensued. The night scenes made off Santa Catalina Island clearly show the action abroad both vessels in silhouette and considerable detail is revealed by the light from cannons and flares used in the combat between the gigantic ancient sea-craft.

Swickard Continues Stern Portrayals

Josef Swickard will be seen in prominent roles of the stern father type he made famous in "The Four Horsemen," as he has finished such a role in Wm. B. Brush's picture, "Defiance," at the Hollywood studios and is now in a like type with Jackie Coogan in his next picture, "A Boy of Flanders."

Tom O'Brien has completed his part under Scotty Dunlap's direction at the F. B. O. studio in a six reeler of the temporary title, "The Dollar Mark." O'Brien carries the heavy role.

FITZMAURICE WILL LOCATE ENTIRE UNIT HERE; MARKS BEGINNING OF RETURN TO WES

Director of 'Eternal City' Will Film 'Cytherea' Says Hollywood Peerless; Rest En Rou

George Fitzmaurice, director of "The Eternal City," will transfer his eastern producing activities to Los Angeles and establish permanent producing headquarters here immediately. This move is in accordance with Samuel Goldwyn's policy to center his producing in Los Angeles due to unsatisfactory working conditions in the East.

The picturization of "Cythtrea," the celebrated novel by Joseph Hergesheimer, and for which a number of scenes have already been made in New York, will be transferred to Los Angeles immediately. Among the players who will arrive shortly to continue their work in this picture are Lewis Stone, Alma Rubens, Irene Rich and Constance Bennett, daughter of Richard Bennett.

Within the next week Mr. Fitzmaurice's producing organization, including Robert Schable, business manager, Arthur Miller, chief photographer, and Sheridan Hall, assistant director, will arrive here from New York. Studio arrangements are now being perfected by Mr. Fitzmaurice and actual "shooting" will be started within the next ten days.

The transfer of Mr. Fitzmaurice's organization to Los Angeles comes as a surprise to the producing world here. The story has been adapted to the screen by Frances Marion, who arrived here last Sunday with Mr. Fitzmaurice, and was to have been partially produced abroad. In this connection, the director said: "Despite what has been said, I personally feel that there is only one place to make pictures, and that is Los Angeles. I have produced in New York, and I would like to say that Manhattan —or any other eastern city—can never compete with Los Angeles. New York, wonderful as it is, does not offer the physical facilities of Los Angeles. It is more expensive to make pictures in New York than in Los Angeles. Players and talented artists in the East look upon motion pictures as a side-line. It is a means of picking up some extra pin money. The technical talent cannot compare with that in Los Angeles. There is not the ficiency among the producing p sonnel that is found here. (stacles causing losses of time c stantly confront the eastern p ducer.

"At first we planned to tour rious countries to make 'Cythere After carefully analyzing the uation with Mr. Goldwyn and M Marion, we decided it would be waste of time and money to ca out our original plan. We fou that the picture can be made Los Angeles in its entirety, a with the exception of the scen already in New York, this is wh we will do.

"Our moving to Los Ange comes as a result of experience New York which clearly indica that our pictures must be made he if we wish to obtain the best tistic results at minimum cost. V are merely another example of t contention that Los Angeles nee never worry about New York p ducing competition."

Renaud Hoffman has left for New York City to confer on the opening presentations in that city of his two productions recently completed at the Hollywood studios. He will return to Los Angeles by the middle of February to commence production of another feature film.

Hersholt Loses No Time at All

Three hours after he had completed his role in support of Constance Talmadge in "The Gold Fish," Jean Hersholt was playing one of the featured parts in "The Woman on the Jury."

Hackathorne Fights Way to Fam

"She was educated in a conve in Switzerland," say the notic "He ran away from milita school to join a repertoire co pany."

"He was formerly a rising you sculptor in Paris."

All of which is, many tim found to be untrue when inves gated.

His latest film is "The Tu moil," in which he heads an al star cast, playing the part "Bibbs," who is the storm-cent of all the turmoil in the story.

Etiquette Shark Aids Griffith's "America"

Percy Sykes, of London, Eng. former commander in court etiquettes, aided D. W. Griffith in staging several of the most spectacular scenes in "America," the photodrama of the War of Independence, being filmed for the Daughters of the American Revolution which is scheduled to have its world premiers at the Forty-Fourth Street Theater,, New York,, Feb. 21.

Until Sir Percy, who has been three presented at the Court of St. James, as well as at the royal courts of India,, Persia and other Eastern countries, volunteered, Griffith and his research workers were at a loss to learn the details of court ceremonies in 1775, for despite the voluminous writings of the diarists of that period, none of them described formal court etiquette in detail.

Caldwell is Working to Put "Miracle" Over

Orville Caldwell, playing male lead in Morris Gest's "The Miracle," Broadway's greatest sensation for many a season, if not in its whole history of things theatrical, has had for many weeks only one word in his lexicon-rehearsals. For the two weeks before the opening of "The Mircale," he writes he had had no time to eat or sleep.

"My final rehearsals started with a continual grind from 12 noon of every day until 6 or 7 the following morning. Now we have started on another round of rehearsals since some changes have been made in the cast due to alternating in the role of the madonna."

So popular is the production, that Mr. Caldwell states that the house is practically sold out until the second week in March, when he overheard reservations being made the other day when he endeavored to get seats.

Has Played in Eight Countries

The distinction of having appeared in motion pictures produced in eight different countries belongs to Otto Matiesen, appearing this week in "Scaramoucche" at the Criterion Theater.

His screen debut took place several years ago in Demark, where he played in one of the first film productions made in Europe. In succession came France, Germany and England. The remaining four countries in which Matiesen has enacted screen roles are Canada, Spain, Mexico and the United States.

It is interesting to note that he has taken part in more photoplays in this country than in all the foreign countries combined.

Raymond McKee has been added to the cast of "Rose of the Ghetto," R. William Neill's production for Grand-Asher.

Aha, curses! Wicked work is under way! Who will protect the fair damsel from the clutches of the villainous Apache? It is none other than the diminutive Viola Dana shrinking under the cruel and merciless glances of Otto Matiesen.

This remarkable character study is from "Revelation," the forthcoming Metro picture directed by George D. Baker, which is declared to be Viola Dana's most ambitious effort to date. It is typical of some of the tremendous dramatic moments contributed by Miss Dana and Matiesen, and bids fair to create a new note in productions of colorful setting.

Penn Town Throws Party for Wm. V.

Doubtless every town and hamlet in the United States has its "idol" or its "home-town boy that made good in the big city"; but it remains for these same communities to demonstrate their real affection for their respective "shining example" as did the little city of Chambersburg, Pa., when a photoplay in which William V. Mong was one of the featured players held down the boards at the local "opree" house.

The announcement that "Bill" Mon gwas coming to the city's one picture house via the screen was the signal for a real demonstration. Flags and bunting, long unused, were dragged out from the attics, and the village band immediately went into semi-weekly rehearsals. The city fathers sent their "Prince Alberts" out for special renovating and the good mothers again took their wee youngsters on their knees and for the 'steenth time related the story of how young William V. Mong made good.

And then came the night of the exhibition of the picture of pictures. As the Chambersburg Clarion said of the event, "it was an eve that will not soon be forgotten. Our esteemed fellow-townsman was the outstanding actor in the entire seven reels, and we should one and all be proud of our own William V. Mong."

Charlie Chaplin Seeks Feminine Foil

Charlie Chaplin is without a leading lady. Finding one is so far the greatest difficulty encountered on his new picture. The story is complete, sets built, locations chosen and camera tests made. All is in readiness for the "shoot," but with no leading lady in sight.

Having elevated Edna Purviance to stardom in "A Woman of Paris," Charlies has been on a hunt for the past six months, looking for a suitable type to play the girl with him in his next comedy.

She may be dark or fair—not necessarily beautiful, it attractive and has a piqant freshness and charming personality. Experience not necessary, but brains very essential. To the lucky girl chosen, it may mean her future in the films.

Miss Purviance has been Chaplin's leading woman for more than seven years and is still under contract to him. She is to be again presented in a dramatic production which will be made under Charlie's supervisions.

When Reginald Barker changed the title of "Cape Cod Folks," his latest photoplay, to "Her Man," he covered three romances with two words. In this Mayer picture Barbara Bedford and Renee Adoree are the sweethearts respectively of Bob Frazer and Eddie Phillip while Ioan Standing and Victor Potel, two of the ablest comedians on the screen, play opposite one another just as effectively if less seriously than the other quartette.

About Anonymous Notes

The editor is constantly receiving through the mail, from various and undoubtedly insignificant sources, any number of impassioned epistles whose authors, while evidently spending much time and thought in penning their thoughts, are wont to forego the accepted courtesy of signing their names thereto. I feel deeply obligated to inform these unknown contribuors that their literary endeavors don't repose for any length of time on my desk, for they are hastily condemned to the office ash-can.

Ever since the inception of correspondence the signature has been observed as the bond and word of faith of the writer. Sending an anonymous letter is like stabbing a man in the back; there is no opportunity for defense. To me it smacks mightily of thievery, the theft of time, and it certainly belies the sincerity of the correspondent, just as if he had said to himself, "I really don't believe a word I've written. I'd better not sign my name for it if is made known my friends will give me the horse-laugh." Which, in all probability, they would do. At any rate, they hand me a big kick, these idiotic scribbles. Whenever I get one I surmise there is something radically wrong in the cerebral regions of the one on the other end, for they sure sound cuckoo.

For instance; last week I got a brilliant masterpiece just bursting with the sensational news I had changed the pages of "Pulse of the Studios." I was really surprised to hear this. The writer went on to state that she (for it was evidently a woman) would have joined the army of "Camera!" subscribers hadn't I mutilated the paper in this atrocious manner. That sounded pretty raw to me; dragging out this brand-new skeleton from the closet after she had had at least six years to subscribe. Of course, we nearly had heart failure upon hearing that our unknown critic was not going to be on our mailing list! It meant so much to us.

Someone else (a man, I think) has been spending his spare moments of late engraving sweet odes to me. He has sent in two or three gems informing me that I was all wrong, etc.. etc. The backbone of his complaint was, as he claimed, that the Hal Roach studio was all bawled up in the Pulse. He helped straighten out the supposed tangle by letting me in on the fact I was n. g. when it came to getting the right information. However, as I got the news direct from the Roach studio I decided I'd better not call upon the great advisor tipping me off as to what was what and when and why. So his letters went up in smoke, sad to say. All I've got to say to him, wherever he is or whoever he is, is this; you'd go a lot further in life by spending more of your time on constructive effort than destructive criticism. If you think you're getting anywhere with me by writing such a lot of junk you're all wrong. It doesn't mean a thing in my life.

Remember this; there's one thing we're never afraid of and that's The Truth. It may hurt at times, sure, but it's all in playing the game fair. If any of you think our paper's the cheese you're certainly entitled to your own opinion. "Camera!" isn't perfect. I know it. For that matter there's not a publication in existence that's perfect, or else they would not be continually announcing the bigger and better things they hoped to accomplish in the future, for there would be no such thing as bigger and better for them. Perfection is never won, no matter how hard we fight, and we of "Camera!" are fighting pretty hard. You can abide by that old custom; if you like "Camera!", tell your friends; if you don't like it, tell us. In any event we will always be glad to give you full hearing through our paper, provided you show your good faith by signing your letters, not necessarily for publication but so we will know who's who. Maybe we can learn a lot from what you have to say. I think that on the whole "Camera!" has given all of you a pretty fair break, and I trust that in time to come those of you who strike at us like vipers under cover, will be courteous and considerate enough to observe the basic kindnesses of correspondence, and thus be accorded our respect as ladies and gentlemen with whom we can deal on an equal plane.

Until such time, however, we refuse to take your admonitions with any seriousness, and your missives will continue to travel the waste-basket trail swiftly and surely, denied publication and comment.

RALPH LEWIS, WITH ILLUSTRIOUS RECORD, SEEKS RURAL ROLE; STARTED IN 1911

Past Includes Twenty-Seven Murders and Twenty-Two Death-Bed Scenes; Would Farm

Ralph Lewis, since starting his career in motion pictures with D. W. Griffith at the old Biograph company thirteen years ago, has played in one hundred and fourteen screen dramas, ranging from the split-reelers put out by the Biograph and including the big Griffith special twelve-reel features like "Intolerance" and "The Birth of a Nation."

He has played the role of a judge seven times, a politician ten times, a police officer three times, and has portrayed a ship captain twice. He ha scommitted twenty-seven murders and incidentally was himself killed thirty times. Lewis has been before the camera in twenty-two deathbed scenes. He has fought numerous duels and has gone down with sinking boats on three occasions.

He has played father to almost all of the big screen scars, including Mary Pickford, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Alice Terry, Lillian Gish and many others.

However, he has never played the role of a farmer, and for more than two years he has looked forward to enacting the role of the monarch of the farm.

Rowland V. Lee, who is expected back in Hollywood next month from a trip to Europe, is bringing home the "bacon" in the form of several American rights to noted European plays and several younger set" novels published recently by English firms. Lee has three more films to do on his current Fox contract.

Belle Green, film ingenue, has temporarily deserted pictures to essay a role in "Cornered," the current stage production at the Morosco Theater. While her part is not very big in scope, she has won the commendation of critics and public alike for her performance.

She is the sister of Dorothy Green, at one time one of the most popular delineators of heavy and vampire roles in motion pictures and well known in the New York film world. Contrary to her sister, however, Belle is seeking parts of a sweeter and kindlier nature.

A. S. C. Elects Louis Tolhurst

As an expression of appreciation of the work he has done in the world of the camera, Louis C. Tolhurst has been unanimously elected a member of the American Society of Cinematographers. The society has manifested an eager interest in Tolhurst's investions connected with microscopic motion pictures and has approved with official enthusiasm the remarkable achievements of the scientist in the "Secrets of Life Series" he is making for Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation. Previews of "The Bee," "The Ant" and "The Spider" have been given the camera experts who deemed it an honor to enjoy the fraternal association of the man who has made miscroscopic motion pictures possible and of vital and illuminating interest to non-technical audiences Frank B. Good, one of the society's distinguished members and head camera man of the Jackie Coogan productions in proposing Mr. Holhurst said that in his opinion the applicant conferred and received an honor and that the society's ideal was materially furthered by his membership, that ideal being "That membership in the Society may become a mark of distinction based on merit."

Nellie Bly Baker who jumped into fame in the part of the masseuse in Chaplin's dramatic production, "A Woman of Paris," will again be seen in his first comedy for United Artists in which Charlie himself will be the comedian of old.

There will be a comedy of Alaska during the days of the rush for gold and will give Miss Baker an opportunity to portray a comedy role in the character of a dance-hall girl of the mining camps.

George Larkin and Ollie Kirby are famous for their artistic dance interpretations, one of their most popular being the Argentine Tango. During the filming of "Yankee Madness" for F. B. O., in which Mr. Larkin is being starred, their talents were emphasized in a new version of the Tango especially created by Mr. Larkin for this picture. Miss Kirby is also a member of the cast.

"HIEF OF BAGDAD" WILL REACH RTISTIC HEIGHTS; MOST LAVISH

Wilson, Sterling and Willy Pogany Engaged to Aid in Preparation of Fantastic Production

The influx of leaders of other arts into motion pictures seems to reach its height when a single production engages the services of America's foremost composers, and poster artists. The musical background of "The Thief of Bagdad" is a symphonic work by Mortimer Wilson, whose New Orleans prize overture emphasized his versatility. Previous to this the whole world of music knew him for his chamber music,, symphonies and other classic work. Wilson's published works on orchestral technique and instrumentation are the basis for degrees in leading musical conservatories of this country.

In titling this picture,, Douglas Fairbanks, wishing to preserve the fantastic spirit of the story, got at the assistance of George Sterling, the poet. While England has long looked upon Sterling as America's greatest exponent of poetry, it is only in the last few years that he has come into his own at home. While he will not necessarily write the tiles in verse, the lyrical quality of his work should be especially effective in the romantic speeches.

Even the posters that will announce "The Thief of Bagdad" will strike a new note in advertising art. The are by Willy Pogany, one of our best contempor ary artists and illustrators.

British Film Due Here in Spring

It is expected that sometime in the spring we will be able to see Gaumont's super-feature, "Byron," which presents Howard Gaye, Hollywood screen player, in the title role as release negotiations are now under way for the American showing of the London-made film.

Mr. Gaye's interpretation of the great poet will be of particular interest inasmuch as he has recently completed another historical high light ,the Duke of Norfolk in Paramount's "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

Anders Randolf, distinguished actor who plays a featured role in "The Blue Moon" a Grand-Asher photoplay, will next be seen in "By Divine Right" also a Grand production to be released by F. B. O.

William McGann, veteran cameraman of dramatic productions, is photographing the Hysterical History Comedies under the direction of Bryan Foy. John Wallace, formerly of Vitagraph, is assisting Mr. Foy in production.

SABATINI PICTURIZATION CALLS FOR HUGE OUTLAY; COMMISSARIES IMMENSE

Frank Lloyd Films 'Sea Hawk' on Great Scale; Food and Supplies Used in Warehouse Lots

Motion picture producers have realized that "the story is the thing" and that great productions of the future must have the names of good authors and good producers as well as those of widely known stars in order to be successful, but to accurately picturize good stories costs a considerable sum, these days, and Harry E. Weil, production manager for Frank Lloyd"s "The Sea Hawk" a First National spectacle now being filmed on the Pacific and in the studio, has opened his ledger for a few figures to show the reason.

During the first two weeks the Frank Lloyd Company was encamped on an Isthmus location at Santa Catalina Island, 600 extras, 71 technicians, 114 principals and 64 sailors required 2118 pounds of beef, 7114 pounds of veal,, 1635 pounds of wieners, 365 pounds of chicken, 604 pounds of fish and 419 pounds of bacon and ham, 385 pounds of ground coffee and 105 pounds of tea were consumed, 1477 pies were eaten and 2915 loaves of bread were baked in the mess kitchen. 1117 dozen of eggs were served, 1935 pounds of onions, peas, beans, corn and other vegetable were made into soup, 725 heads of celery, 118 heads of cabbage, nearly two tons of potatoes, 75 boxes of crackers, 90 pounds of cheese,, 65 pounds of apples, 75 pounds of oranges and 375 pounds cereals.

Eighteen men were required to provide the meals for the Lloyd company on location, a large barge made daily trips to Los Angeles harbor for supplies. A complete lighting system had to be installed at the camp. Over 150 tents had to be erected and equipped with cots, bedding, mirrors, chairs, locks. Extra blankets to be worn while slaves were not acting, at sea, transportation to and from Los Angeles, for all employees, FOURTEEN—Carema tug boats, many gallons of oil for the engines in the big ancient ships and electric light bulbs, were only a few of the items of expense necessary for the maintenance of one location for the picture and none of which is visible on the screen.

Added to the $200,000 the four ancient ships cost to build and $85,000 worth of costumes, actors, salaries, equipment, studio expense and hundreds of other items,, it is easy to see that to make "the story the thing" on the screen requires a considerable investment.

Midget Gun Memento of 'Covered Wagon'

Vest-pocket pistols have been long in vogue, but John Fox, Jr., the banjo-playing Jed Wingate of "The Covered Wagon," owns what is probably the only watch-chain pistol in the world. It is an inch and a quarter long, is made of silver and shoots a tiny pin cartridge that makes a report out of all proportion to its size.

John was presented with the midget souvenir as a memento of his excellent work in "The Covered Wagon." A. Gilstrom, who directed the clever boy actor in two Jack White comedies, "The Great American Smile" and "Barnum, Jr.," was the donor of the baby souvenir, which is a miniature replica of the pistols carried by Ernest Torrence and Tully Marshall in the Emerson Hough photoplay.

Like all normal boys, John enjoys his little joke. He carries his baby pistol on a watch chain fastened in his coat lapel, and he likes to slip up behind timid boys and girls at schools and then fire off his tiny weapon near their ears. Needless to say, they jump, for the pistol, John says, might even be used to scare off a footpad if one tried to hold him up in the dark.

Mark and Mack

Mark Twain and Mack Swain!

A remarkable similarity in names, indeed, and now comes an equally remarkable parallel in their quotations. For 'twas none other than the beloved chronicler of Mississippi River tales of a half century or so ago who, in reply to a newspaper report of his death, said, "The report of my death is greatly exaggerated."

In a recent issue of "Camera!" through an absurd error we set forth, in a memoriam writing, that Mack Swain, foil of the antics of many of the famed Charles Spencer Chaplin's comic adventures, had joined the Invisible Throng of Filmdom. Through a misunderstanding the name of Mr. Swain was published in place of that of Eric Campbell, who will be remembered as the huge be-moustached terror of the derby-and-cane comedian's existence in the early days of Chaplin film-plays. Campbell was killed in an auto accident several years ago.

Inasmuch as Swain is slated to play an important part in Charlie's forthcoming comedy we can hardly blame him for taking issue with our reference to him as "a dead one." Luck to you, old-timer; may we see and hear more of you!

Eva Awaits Receipt of Comedy Custards

All that is missing is the custard pie! So said demure Eva Novak following her introduction to the other members of the cast of "Listen Lester," a screen adaptation of the famous farce-comedy, now being filmed at the F. B. O. Studios by Sacramento Pictures Corporation.

For there about the set were draped many screen celebrities who had served their apprenticeship with Mack Sennett in the days when gooey pastry reigned supreme at the comedy king's lot. And those of the cast who had not stopped pies for Sennett had at some time or other done their stuff for the Christie brothers or on the "Century" lot. There was Louise Fazenda, Lee Moran, Dot Farley, George O'Hara and Harry Myers —all now at the top of the ladder in the screen profession.

Miss Novak began hre career in pictures as a comedienne, and although she has played many serious roles since that time, she has a soft spot in her heart for the lighter form of silversheet entertainment.

"It's just like being home again to work with this company," she explained to Manager Jack Hunter of Sacramento Pictures Corporation. "The only thing that bothers me in my semi-serious role here is that I constantly work in fear of being decorated with an overstuffed custard pie at any moment."

"Listen Lester" is to be the second release of the Sacramento Pictures Corporation.

"No ban on brunettes; no rule against redheads."

This is the sign which Jack White is considering hanging out at the Fine Arts studio, since an observant reporter made public note of the fact that all the leading women there are blondes, the list including Ruth Hiatt, Virginia Vance and Mary O'Brien.

ALASKA SWEEPSTAKES WINNER ACTING IN NEW DUNCAN CHAPTERPLAY; HAS DOGS

"Scotty" Allen at the "U" in "Free Trader"; Won Laurels in Canine Events of Far North

"Scotty" Allen, for several years in succession winner of the famous Alaska Sweepstakes, the world's most notable race of dog teams, has turned screen actor. He is appearing with William Duncan in his new picture of the North, "The Free Trader." Incidentally, Duncan and the famous dog racer found that they both were born in the same town in Scotland, Dundee.

Allen has been internationally famous for years for his winning of the Alaskan race classic. Each year the sweepstakes gathers all the "crack" dog-team drivers of the frozen North. It is an event dating back to the old Klondyke gold rush, and miners and sportsmen bet fortunes on the strange contest.

Allen's dogs appear in the picture with Duncan, as well as some of those of Mrs. E. T. Darling of Berkeley, owner of the different dog teams which Allen drove to the sweepstakes victory. Allen is one of the most famous figures in Alaska, and has been so ever since the stirring days when gold was found at Nome and in the British possessions. A visitor in Hollywood, he was consulted by Duncan as to the manner of handling teams, and this led to his services being enlisted for the picture itself.

The new picture is being taken in the Sierra snows, near Big Bear, and later a trip North will be made for bigger snowdrifts for the new chapter-play, which features Edith Johnson with Duncan, director and star.

After completing an eight weeks' engagement playing the part of a soubrette with a production of the Walter Spencer stock company at the Hippodrome Theatre in Sacramento, Muriel Reynolds has returned to Hollywood, and is now preparing for her role in Fred Caldwell's next film.

FINIS FOX SAYS WRITING AFFORDS FOUNDATION FOR EFFORTS

Scenarist-Producer Says Knowledge of Scrip of Value; "Woman Who Sinned" His Next

Finis Fox, who is now producing "A Woman Who Sinned," at the Hollywood Studios with an all-star cast including Mae Busch, Morgan Wallace, Irene Rich and Rex Lease, states that the art of writing is the best possible foundation from which to graduate into the directorial field.

Before taking up the megaphone, Finis was a highly successful scenario writer, and prior to this was a reporter and later managing editor for various big mid-west dailies. Finis formerly was one of the foremost scenario writers in the industry, being associated with Metro, First National, Lasky and other of the big producing organizations for several years. Finis says that the art of building a screen drama is along similar lines of writing a newspaper story, composing a musical number or creating a stage play. "One great advantage the writer has as a groundwork for being a director is that he has learned a continuity of thought," says Finis. "In writing, he has learned to introduce his subject and his people simply and logically. He then develops his character and plot, working up to the big climax. The writer learned that he has to move ward in a natural and simple m ner in telling his story, no ma whether it is a description of murder mystery, a train wreck a social affair. If the writer ne learns this continuity of thought can never be a successful wr and, consequently, can never gr uate into anything that requ writing as a foundation. training of a writer is the grea possible aid to a director of tion pictures, as it teaches him build his drama slowly and gr ually, without ever wander away from his theme and ther wrecking his production. Anot great advantage to a director starting as a writer," conclu Finis, "is that it teaches him to serve the little things of life wh after all, are the big things drama."

Finis is not only directng Woman Who Sinned," but he a wrote the story, made the scr adaptation and will edit and t the finished product.

Cli Film for Hollywood First

Hollywood will be the first American community to view "The Loves of Mary Queen of Scots," the biggest English cinema production of the year, which Denison Clift, former supervising director of the Fox Film Corporation, is bringing back with him from London.

The feature represents more than year's work on the part of Clift and his staff, who put in several months in research work before attempting the filmization. As a result of their endeavors, the young director was presented with the first print of the picture and also with a bonus of one thousand pounds.

During the three and a half years Clift was in England he was supervising producer for Ideal Film Ltd., one of the largesct producing companies in the British isles. He is returning to America to accept an important directorial post with the Fox Film Corporation with which organization he was identified before his departure for England.

"The Loves of Mary Queen of Scots" will be given an invitational showing here by Clift in the drawing room of his new Hollywood home which is equipped for the showing of motion pictures. It will be the premier exhibition of the British feature in America.

Ray Hughes, independent producer, who has been in Arizona and New Mexico shooting "Around the State," featuring Donna Hale, is in Hollywood preparing his next two pictures, "Arizona Gold" and "The Cactus."

Marc MacDermott is Signed for 'Sea Hawk'

Marc MacDermott, one of the film stage stars to enter motion picture work and well known by virtue of his stardom by Edison, Vitagraph, Fox and other companies is the last addition to the cast of Frank Lloyd's First National picture, "The Sea Hawk" now being filmed at sea.

Mr. MacDermott has been cast to play the part of Sir John Killigrew, the guardian of Rosamond and Peter Godolphin in the colorful Sabatini story of Barbary corsairs and English knights

PANTOMIME REQUIRES CLOSE CONCENTRATION, SAYS HERSHOLT; CITES GRIFFITH

Claims European Dramatic Fundamentals Best; Would Bar Nobody-Home Expressions From the Screen; Must Think

Jean Hersholt, who had his first stage training in Denmark, where he later became one of the best-known juvenile actors in the country, said that one great fundamental taught generally in the European dramatic schools that proved to be a great asset in the American school of motion pictures, was the art of concentration.

"In Europe, all the big dramatic professors teach their players to concentrate," said Hersholt. "They teach that it is impossible for any player to express any emotion in pantomime unless their subconscious mind is concentrating and thinking the required thought, with all the force the brain cells can muster. This is more especially true of picture work.

"Griffith is very much like the big foreign directors of both stage and screen in this respect," continued Hersholt. "There have been many beautiful young women who seem to possess every qualification for being a great success in the silent drama, who have failed in their chosen work, simply because they have not been instructed by the director to think and think hard of the exact emotion they were seeking to express," continued Hersholt. "Without this instruction, the actress can never help but register a blank, nobody-home look in her face, and therefore fails. If the 13662—United Ptg. Co.— TWO young men and women who are coming up in the silent drama would learn to concentrate and think hard when they are before the camera, it will mean much to them in carving out successful careers."

Gang Passes Muster in Three R's

Just because they work in the movies is no sign they can escape school. Hal Roach's little rascals of "Our Gang" comedy fame spend three hours a day five days a week in a school of their own on the lot and yesterday the Los Angeles School Board came out to see how much they had absorbed in the way of "book learning" and from all reports the "gang" got by with flying colors.

Ralph Lewis, since his portrayal of the title role in "The Mail Man," has received numerous fan letters from young and old alike, asking his advice about what action to take in regard to poor delivery, and requesting information about parcel post, registered mail and other branches of the postal service. The writers seem to think that inasmuch as Ralph was a mail man on the screen, he should really be some sort of a general information bureau about everything in general pertaining to Uncle Sam's mail service.

Cullen Completes 'Magnolia' Portrayal

Cullen Landis has left for the gold fields of California—for this was his last threat in "Magnolia," the delightful James Cruze production which is now completed for Paramount. In the last scenes of the picture where Cullen returns, with his honor back again, he is likewise the awful man killer, which thought frightens the gentle "Lucy" (Mary Astor) and so the home coming has its strain. Says Cullen finally as "Tom Rumford," hero of the opus:

"I've never killed anybody yet except accidentally—and I'm going to keep on trying not to—though I don't believe there will be much room for a butterfly chaser exactly in California."

It's all over now—this joyful funning and Cullen Landis declares that never did he finish a picture so reluctantly as "Magnolia." He loved this earnest mock-braggart role, with the charming side play, he thrilled at the costuming, the lovely scenic back ground, the beauty of it all and above all it enthralled him living as he did all these weeks his favorite role.

Apparently possessing all of the requisites for leading man roles Buddy Mason prefers to perform upon the silversheet in hazardous capacities. He is one of the stuntiest of our younger stunt men and takes great delight in dangling by his toes, fingers, etc., from perilous perches. His most recent work was for Tom Buckingham's "Arizona Express" at Fox.

Follow Own Script Clear Through

Perhaps the greatest gift which can fall to the screen author is an engagement to prepare the continuity on his own original story. This is the good fortune which has just come to Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin, universally recognized as screenland's most successful collaborating authors, through their present engagement by Metro to prepare the script on "Don't Doubt Your Husband," an original story which they sold to this organization several months ago.

It is interesting to know that a few months ago one of Metro's stars concluded a similar arrangement with Cowan-Higgin. Mae Murray bought their original story, "Fashion Row," and then had them write the continuity for it. Incidentally, "Don't Doubt Your Husband" is a story of modern society life. In this respect it has some resemblance to "Broken Barriers," the Meredith Nicholson script which Cowan-Higgin have just adapted for Reginald Barker, but otherwise its plot and theme demand vastly different treatment.

Anzacs Collide on Roach Lot

There was considerable commotion on the Hal Roach lot the other day when Mr. O. G. Perry, business manager of the Union Theatres of Australia, ran across his old friend and former business associate, John Gavin, also an Australian, who has just finished an important character part in Hal Roach's feature production, "The Fighting Tylers."

Mr. Perry knew that Gavin was "somewhere in America" but had no idea that he was in Los Angeles.

With one letter "t," is the correct way to spell the surname of Otto Matiesen, one of six featured players in "Scaramouche," now being shown at the Criterion Theater. Another common mistake made in spelling this actor's name is the use of "o," instead of "e," in the final syllable.

THUS SAITH SCRIPTURE

[Shuler Crosses the Words of the Christ]

By Fred W. Fox

Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God.

Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called sons of God.

Blessed are ye when men shall reproach you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely.

—(Matthew 5:8, 9, 11).

"The Movies Open Fire on Trinity's Pastor." That was the title of a twenty-minutes one-man discussion held at the Trinity Methodist Church of Los Angeles last Sunday night. The one man referred to was the so-termed "Reverend" Bob Shuler, professing to be a minister of God, and the discussion was a prelude to the regular Sunday night sermon

Shuler was rather "het up" to put it mildly. He was throwing himself around like a Selig Zoo baboon and in his hands he grasped a copy of "Camera!". Some nasty things were said therein, said Bob. Therefore he felt it necessary to give vent to his wrath before his people and let them know what a wicked journal "Camera!" was.

Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.

—(Luke 23:34).

The gist of his talk was this; the motion picture business is rotten. He talked about "Fatty" Arbuckle, Gaston Glass and Mabel Normand. In insane fury he called them down. He spoke of his desire to uphold the Law. Yet in his appeal for unbiased observance of that L he evidently overlooked the fact that twelve represen tives of the people of California and acting for the La acquitted Roscoe Arbuckle of the charges prefer against him. Thus Shuler gave undisputable evide of his mental paralysis; shouting for the Law and nouncing its exponents in the same breath. How anyone say that this fanatic hypocrite is sincere when acts thusly? His ego has swept him toward the ab of deceit, falsehood and treachery. Is this man one those "peacemakers" to whom Jesus Christ referred?

I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. . . . Even if I bear witness of myself my witness is true; thy witness is not true. . . . . YE JUDGE AFTER THE FLESH; I JUDGE NO MAN.

—(John 8:12, 14, 15).

Jesus Christ said he judged no man! Is Shuler grea than the Christ?

In his oration he stated he was for a clean actor j as he was for a clean school-teacher, a clean lawyer, e Yet he did not, nor has he, advanced any theories as how to clean up motion pictures, if they need it any mo than the clergy.

Speaking of wayward ministers he said; "We get gether and say to them 'Get Out!' "

"Get Out!"—that is the religion of Shuler. D t say "Get Out!" to the woman in adultery? No, id "Let him without sin among you cast the first ." That is what we of Filmdom can say to Shuler.

And Jesus entered into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold the doves; and he said unto them, It is written that my house shall be called a house of prayer, but ye make it a den of robbers.
—(Matthew 21; 12, 13).

he attempt upon the part of this clergical masque- r to commercialize the Church must fail! Using the to advance his own personal schemes and to heighten his notoriety is sacreligious to say the least. It is time for the true ministers of God to have done with this scamp. He defies the name of Christ. He sits in wanton judgement upon his fellow-creatures. A mad craving for publicity and smutty fame has gripped him. He is headed for ruin.

And when ye pray, ye shall not be as the hypocrites: for they love to stand and pray in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. . . . Be not therefore like unto them.

From Mattoon To Hollywood

SAM W. B. COHN

He didn't run away from home to join a circus. Nor did he "supe" about the Matoon Opera House when a mere child. In fact, James Morrison did nothing that most of our popular fiction writers would have us believe are prime essentials to stage or screen success.

James Morrison studied to be an actor. Shortyl after graduating from the public schools of Matoon, Ill., the place of his nativity, he seriously entered into the study of the profession he had chosen as his life work, and, although he now ranks as one of screenland's foremost leading men, Morrison still is in search of knowledge pertaining to his work.

This is not a biography. It is a straightforward narrative of events that might be interesting to those who are of the impression that movie actors just happen. It is a synopsis of the early chapters of the life of a young man who took what he believed to be the true road to the top of his profession, and—

Today "Jimmy" Morrison is in demand by motion picture producers. Not because he is handsome. There are many handsome actors in Hollywood. Nor is it because he can act that the film magnates keep him constantly at work. There is no dearth of proficient actors in the film capital.

It is because Morrison is both good-looking and a real actor; because he is a student of his profession and a true gentleman, that he is desired for roles in important pictures. The combination is indeed a rare one for these hectic days.

Born in the little city of Matoon, and educated there, Morrison, following a course in one of New York's recognized dramatic schools, accepted a stock engagement. With this practical experience backing his theoretical knowledge, he continued to study, but now he turned to the lives of successful dramatic actors, past and present, for his textbooks. Shortly his sincerity of purpose was recognized by a big Broadway producer, and Morrison was cast for the leading role in one of Gotham's big stage hits of that time. He made an instantaneous success of the role and attracted the attention of Vitagraph officials, who were in search of new principals for the stellar productions they were then producing.

And so it went. Morrison continued to climb, following his contract with Vitagraph, and his career from that time on is doubtless sufficiently well known to need no repetition here.

The moral of this story—if one seeks a moral in his reading—is that the most certain road to success in the motion picture or acting profession is the same road traveled by those ambitious persons in other professions—study and hard work.

But for some unaccountable reason the public likes to believe that successful motion picture folk arrive via the luck route. They read of erstwhile barbers, butchers and bakers becoming cinema stars overnight, and they are prone to believe such trash. Should there exist such exceptions, they but go to prove the rule.

According to Morrison, who is not inclined to pass out advice to stage-struck youth, there is no set rule for success in acting, but the same general laws that govern one endeavoring to climb to the top of the ladder in the various walks of life apply to those who would succeed in the motion picture profession.

The Plus in Acting

By Edith M. Ryan

'cting is just acting with the plus mark added. It may be a large plus mark or just a fairly outlined one. But it is always there which acting is distinguished by the thing that makes it alive—personality. There are those who may call the mode of taking on a characterization—auto suggestion, self-hynosis and the like. But when we have respectfully regarded the impressive sounding words, we come back again to a truism, and that is, acting is just acting."

Louise Fazenda thus discounted any mechanical process when she enters the world of make-believe by adding:

"I am just friendly with them—these characters do. There are no limits to the extent one can go in friendliness with a screen individual, and so as one visualizes and lives with a character, the item of taking on the little tricks of manner, habits, movement, progresses in direct ratio with the amount of sympathetic understanding given."

Louise Fazenda, who holds a unique position on the screen where she has registered, since she entered pictures, a rare quality of humor that is absolutely inimitable, leaves well enough alone under delineation of a character. Mingled with the "friendliness" to her creations is a well bred reference and she pauses at the point where she might learn too much. Consequently, the friendliness is no probing, or search, or turning up, or poking out in a merciless hunt for something beyond the surface. She believes that few people have definite objectives, and that the majority of humans are not anchored to some compelling motive. They seem to motivate more than they really do. In actuality, they blithely drift along, according to her observation.

It has fallen to her lot since she began playing it "straight" to depict a variety of "drifters." Having left some of their complexes severely alone, and used her gift of suggestion, she has accomplished with her "friendliness" some rare performances in portraiture. Negotiating "ladies" as "Milly," the factory girl in "The Fog," "Mabel Monroe" in "The Gold Diggers," the opulent "Undine," diving Venus, in "The Galloping Fish," have also been delightful adventures, and now "Miss Arbutus Quilty," the little "comforter" in "Listen, Lester" is proving equally intriguing, for they have a way, has each member of this quartet, of seeming to get onto thin ice, but as Louise manipulates their destiny, never breaking through.

Now, if there is anything that appeals to Louise's risibles as she looks upon her work objectively, it is this ability to meet with a toothless grin the thinnest of ice, for she has managed, by being friendly, but not intimately friendly with her creations, to come unawares upon thin ice and actually to make it appear an injustice that it had to be around.

"I watch people, but I can't say that I analyze them. I have an intuition or a feeling about what is going on inside of them. Possibly I absorb. So when it comes to building up different characterizations, knowledge comes from somewhere so that they are flashed as real people, and at that instant I begin being friendly with them," she explained.

Louise Fazenda since entering the dramatic field, has met each character for the most part in its lighter moments. There have been some shadows across the cheerful surface of things, and she has etched these with the same sure touch as she sid rutibtes-uwC shrdl cmfw mm touch as she distributes her comedy values. In "The Gold Diggers," where she quickly brushes off the tears with the dag's ears, comedy and tragedy jostle each other in passing.

While she has proven to be a specialist in her "friendliness" with certain types guaranteed to bring a ready flow of unceasing laughter, there are somber "drifters" who would instinctively repel "friendliness," and these she has thought about with a longing to set them forth on the screen.

"I believe they wouldn't evade me, for some way I fancy I know how they would feel," she remarked recently, referring to certain roles that would involve as gripping drama as the screen has ever seen. "Tragedy and comedy are the nearest of kin. It has become an axiom that one who can do comedy can likewise do tragedy. The most side-splitting comedy arises from a serious situation."

It isn't with Louise Fazenda a question of what she can do. It's more a question of the insistence of a niche, of developing the line that has brought renown and, in the last word, letting fate decide.

Big, smashing tragedy lured her when a mere child to the world of make-believe where the divine Sarah reigned supreme, the greatest of them all, in her opinion. There is still a lure about it. Her admirers, who are legion, have been clamoring to see her in real moving drama. Should she venture forth in a characterization that has long appealed to her as having marvelous possibilities, she would more than satisfy her public that enjoys a new sensation. She could furnish it in this role. But she has never announced herself as even thinking about it. It could only be done by herself or that rare artist who has her philosophy which has found:

"That nothing walks with aimless feet,
That not one life shall be destroyed,
or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made his pile complete."

In the meanwhile, there are dreams of types that have never yet found their interpretation on the silversheet, dreams of old stock characters touched up with a different and more "friendly" treatment, while outwardly the vivid Miss Arbutus Quilty makes wonderful terms with life and wrings out of each day a generous portion of pleasure.

Louise Fazenda, a year ago, thought of drama as an alien field. Her thoughts reduced to words might have "handed" more to the comedy world.

Comedy had been a habit; drama had seemed a more conscious expression—something like freely using broad A's. But as she handled more and more the symbols of drama, Louise Fazenda, who is always the eager student, became fascinated, new worlds opened up and the old longings to traffic occasionally with the tragic muse have trooped back into the rich store house of her sub-conscious mind. That she is at the threshold of a career that will give all of her whimsical humor full play, is said on every hand by those who have watched her progress. With her knowledge of values and her clear-cut technic, she is now ready to furnish new combinations, something highly individual, something valuable to the development of screen art, since she is temperamentally fitted and artistically prepared for the widest range in her work.

Her "friendliness" would have more of an insistent quality as she entered a new field of acquaintanceship, but since she has conquered characterizations full of elusiveness, so she could meet on intellectual terms of friendliness even the Hedda Gablers who would find in her an appreciative audience.

Louise Fazenda has demonstrated that she can chronicle the doings of Judy O'Grady, but just as well could she give to the screen the poignant personality of the colonel's lady, for she knows that although there may be more repression with the latter, that she may not put her cards naively on the table, like, for instance, "Miss Arbutus Quilty" whom she is at present immortalizing in "Listen Lady," but that, after all, the colonel's lady and Judy O'Grady, and even the somber savage wight she thinks she would like to present on the silversheet, are sisters under the skin!

Triumphant Life

By BARRET C. KIESLING

As some writer of bromides once said that "variety is the spice of life," perhaps this explains why it is that Cecil B. De Mille, above the majority of his fellow screen celebrities, has held the interest of the public without diminution for over a decade.

For certainly of all those who make a living by the capering chromos, Cecil B. De Mille has a part and a present life of startlingly unusual variety. While most motion picture people become completely absorbed in the art of the films, to the extent that they are not known outside the celluloid field, Mr. De Mille has achieved success not only in pictures but also in several other entirely foreign fields of activity.

Mr. De Mille was born in Asheville, Massachusetts. His father was Henry C. De Mille, for some years a partner and collaborator with David Belasco in the writing of world-famous stage successes. After his father's death, his mother formde the De Mille Play Agency, one of the most noted and successful organizations of its kind.

It can be seen, then, that Cecil B. De Mille comes rightfully by his trend towards the dramatic. From the very start, however, his dramatic tendencies were not laid in any one rut or groove. He was first an acter ,then a playwright—his most conspicuous stage play being "The Return of Peter Grimm" and finally a producer and director of stage plays. It was at this point in his career that at a lunch at Rector's, New York, one day he, Jesse L. Lasky and Samuel Goldfish formed the Jesse L. Lasky

The San Francisco Photoplays, with Wayne Mack at their head, are getting under way in fine shape. They have established executive offices in the Insurance Exchange Building at 433 California Street, and production offices and studio in the Van Dorn Hotel at 242 Turk Street. Almost the entire first floor of the hotel will be used for offices and studio purposes, with a big stage 100 by 110 feet to be erected on the lot next door. The organization is being backed by H. H. Harris, wealthy real estate man and hotel owner; George S. Romanovsky, Russian Consul; and S. S. Novak, Consul for Czecho-Slovakia. According to the present plans, work will be begun within a couple of weeks on a series of five-reel westerns, to be followed by the filming of four big superproductions.

Philip Rosen, director, whose latest picture, "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln," is creating a furore in New York, will arrive in San Francisco the latter part of this week, having been signed by Max Graf, production head of the Graf Films, to direct their next picture, "The Wise Son." Work on the picture will be begun early in February at the Pacific Studios. The working continuity is being put into shape by Hope Loring and Louis Duryea, who did the continuity for the Graf's last picture, "Half-A-Dollar Bill," and will be delivered within the next few days, when work on the sets, and the assembling of the cast will begin. So far no one has been signed but that sterling actor Alec Francis. Lyman Broening, who photographed the big Rockett picture, and since that has been cinematographer on Douglas Fairbanks' "The Thief Of Bagdad," will be head camera man, and the entire cast will be all-star.

Bull Montana stayed in San Francisco after the Wampas Ball, and has been a guest all week at the Manx Hotel. Bull is enjoying a little holiday in our city, with a few motor trips to near-by points, but is getting homesick for Hollywood and will return to the South in a few days, after he has fulfilled his agreement to make a personal appearance at the Wigwam Theatre for two or three days.

Ivor McFadden, having severad his connection with the Intrepid "Round The World Expedition," is reported to be returning to Los Angeles to join the Bill Hart forces.

David H. Shuman, Western representative of the Karl Anderson Pictures Corporation, and Spenser Valetine of the Theatre Owners of America organization, have spent the last week as guests at the Plaza Hotel, and talking release plans with several of the local production companies.

Hermann Lubfin, president of the Cinema Arts and Crafts, spent last week in Los Angeles on business for the organization, and in conference regarding the early production activities of the Golden Gate Productions, one of its branches, who expect to begin work at an early date at the F. B. O. studio.

J. Warren Kerrigan was a week-end guest at the St. Francis.

William Matthews is starting production with not only one but two productions companies. His original organization, The Novan Productions, will begin work February 1st on their first picture, to be shot under the working title of "Straight Ahead." Meanwhile he has organized The Renello Production, who will begin work at once on a six-reeler, "Sticky Ropes." The Renello organization consists of William Matthews, president; Joseph A. Renello, vice-president; Thomas F. Noonan, secretary, and Marion Renello, treasurer, with John Orcutt as legal counsel. William Matthews will leave within a few days for Hollywood to complete his cast and staff for both companies.

The Marriott Productions moved the first of last week from the Van Dorn building on Turk Street, to much more complete and better equipped quarters at 255 Golden Gate Avenue. For a few days it looked like olden days in the studios, for everyone from Forrest Cregihton, the director, to the member of the cast, were helding to get settled, and even Walter Bell, who is behind the camera, was wielding a nasty paint brush. But they are now hard at work again on the company's first picture, "Young China," actual shooting on which will be finished in another week. Some of their scenes done in Chinatown, and the lovely tea-garden at Golden Gate Park, are unusually artistic. Irish, the dog, braved the cold waters of the Bay s other day in a big dive offi one of the d and some thrilling scenes in the water.

Having come to town before the Wan Ball, Jackie Coogan, with his father and mot stayed thru last week as guests at the Pal Hotel. Before they left it was announced Jackie's next picture, as yet untitled, will made in its entirety in San Francisco. company will come here to begin work in th weeks, of course under the capable directio Victor Schertzinger.

Hilda Dedman, screen star and filmdom's est recruit from Germany, arrived in San Fr cisco on Saturday.

Emory Johnson, head of the Emory Joh Productions, with his mother and family; I Fisher and a half dozen other members of s cast and staff, arrived in town on Sunday ning, to work for a week on the filming c picture here, and around the Bay district.

Once more San Francisco is having the ra unusual experience of being able to see the s big drama either on the spoken stage or on screen. "Anna Cristie" is in its fourth week the Alcazar Theatre, while the film made f the play opened at the Warfield Theatre on urday. George Marion, who gives a wonde performance of the old sea dog, is in t versions.

Much local interest was taken in the open last Sunday at the Imperial Theatre of G wyn's production of "Name The Man," as company which made it, under the directio Victor Seastrom, worked for two weeks in neighborhood, taking many scenes near H Moon Bay.

Larry Semon, stage and screen comedian appearing in person for three days this week the California Theatre, in connection with latest feature film, "Lightning Love." Se does a burlesque of a death dance in "Wo To Woman" which is the feature picture the bill.

Among filmdom's other well-knowns who guests at San Francisco hotels are Estelle T lor, Jack Livingston of Universal, Frank S mons and Walter King, and Rin-Tin-Tin, star, and his master, Lee Duncan, who w appearing in an act at the Orpheum last week

Normalcy

By GEORGE LANDY

Like many other statesmen, our late President made at least one literary contribution. He brought into popularity the word "normalcy."

Too much stress has been placed in the past, and even today, to a lesser extent, on the exotic in connection with the films and those who appear in them. Perhaps this has been due to the P. T. Barnum methods of showmanship, and the Tody Hamilton school of press-agentry, which dealt only in superlatives. Perhaps it has been due to a genuine belief that the public wanted its screen idols exotic, even to the point of unreality. In any event, the tide has turned—praise be!—and now the truth may be told. By and large, the workers in the film colony lead as normal lives as any other group of those who labor with their minds and their souls.

Kathryn McGuire is a case in point; in fact, she might almost be termed Miss Normalcy. Her career, in its brief span of three years on the screen, exemplifies each successive stage through which the film aspect must pass before her she can attain the coveted laurel of public recognition and popular approval. Kathryn McGuire shares with Uncle Joe Cannon, her one time neighbor and friend, the distinction of being responsible for whatever fame has come to Danville, Illinois. She came to Hollywood about five years ago, accompanied by her mother and sister, and attended the Hollywood High School. At the same time, since her early ambitions were entirely terpsichorean, she studied dancing under Madame Modaldita. It was during the influenza epidemic, when all the schools were closed, that this young miss, who aspired to follow in Pavlowa's footsteps, made her first public appearance. She appeared in a dance number at one of the Pasadena hotels, where she was observed by Thomas H. Ince and immediately engaged by him to repeat her dance role in a picture he was then producing starring Dorothy Dalton. Shortly thereafter, Kathryn did similar dances in pictures with Jack Pickford and several Universal stars. One day she called for a former high school chum who was working at the Sennett studio, and, while waiting, she was seen by the casting director, and he suggested that she do a few days' work on the lot. An occasional day as an extra soon led to a contract and a guaranteed extra—a system then in vogue in the studios—so that by the time school reopened Kathryn was a full-fledged actress and never did return to her academic studies. As a matter of fact, however, she has continued her dancing and has spent several evenings a week under the tutelage of Ernest Belcher, with whom, incidentally, she appeared in the picturesque Baby Stars Ballet at the last Wampas Ball.

A few months as a guaranteed extra, and Miss McGuire was elevated to play bits, and then featured roles, in the multi-rele comedies Mack Sennett was then making. When the "comedy king" turned to dramatic productions, he included her among the featured players of "The Crossroads of New York," in which she created the ingenue role.

Like several of the other youthful beauties who have been trained in the strict school of comedy acting, Kathryn McGuire registered an instantaneous hit in her dramatic review, and for a year thereafter she was farmed out by Sennett to a number of producers who wanted her services. During this period, she appeared in "The Silent Call"; "Bucking the Line," with Lefty Flynn; "Playing with Fire," with Gladys Walton; "The Flame of Life," with Priscilla Dean; "The Woman of Bronze," with Clara Kimball Young. Miss McGuire came back to Sennett's to be co-featured with Ben Turpin in "The Shriek of Araby." At this time her existing contract terminated, and she resolved to enter the field of free-lance players, for the sake of the greater dramatic opportunities it would give her. For Richard Thomas Productions she played the leads in "Phantom Justice" and "The Silent Accuser," both of which are shortly to be released by F. B. O., and most recently she was featured as the female lead in "Beyond the Veil," a metaphysical film produced by A. K. Mozumdar, the noted Hindu religionist. This week marks the conclusion of her work opposite Buster Keaton in "Sherlock Holmes, Jr." It is a long stride from metaphysics to mirth, but such changes are a manner of the day's doing for the experienced screen performer.

This detailed sketch of Kathryn McGuire's career is noteworthy because of the normalcy of her progress and the steady pace of her advancement. The increasing importance of the various engagements is absolutely characteristic of the normal development of a film actress, from a casual extra to a featured player. It involves the hard work of starting as an unknown, the continuous grind of the fun film factories, the contact with different directors and producers, and the unremitting study of the technique of her profession.

Shortly after "The Silent Call" was released, the Wampas selected Miss McGuire as one of the "Stars of Tomorrow" in its first series, and along with other girls who were thus chosen she has amply justified that selection. Without any unusual opportunities or pretentious glare of publicity trumpets, she has climbed ahead steadily, and is now rated well among the small group of ingenues and leading women at the top of the ladder.

MY EXPERIENCE AT THE FA BA

In the early summer of 1923 I was living the life of an invalid at an inconspicuous family hotel in Los Angeles. One morning, quite unexpectedly, I received a telephone call from the secretary of Douglas Fairbanks,, requesting me to come to the studio. What for? I queried. Oh, something special. I thought, no doubt, the great thespian tumbler wants to treat himself to a set of my art books, just as Chaplin, Pola Negri and Bertram Lytell had done. As a matter of courtesy more than anything else, for motion picture folks are not given much to reading. They do not need it in their profession.

At the studio I was met by Mr. Knoblauch. Could I be induced to play a part in Fairbanks' next production? It took me by surprise, as truly nothing was farther from my mind than entering the movies at my mellow age. People in past yars have often asked: how did you ever escape the movies? And my stereotype answer has been: well, if they want me they have to come to me. Now, the mountain had actually come to Mohammed. So I put on my Oriental mask. Yes, I could be induced, provided they had a real part for me. Fairly important, the part of an Indian prince, one of the three suitors of the Caliph's daughter, in the coming production of "The Thief of Bagdad." Whether I could mind a test? No, I wouldn't mind. Thus I was dolled up in a gorgous, very "costumy" East Indian costume and proceeded to the test set. There I passed through the regular examination. I had to emerge from a doorway, dscend a few steps, walk slowly towards the camera, move to the left, move to the right, look about in every direction of the compass, bow, turn quickly and make my fade away through another doorway. After doing this about a dozen times some close-ups were taken. I had to half close my eyes and peer about, sideways, and upwards and downwards, and smile and grin and frown. And thereupon I rode back to town wondering what would come next.

The next evening I had to deliver a lecture, also on the following evening, if I remember rightly before the Jewish Intelligentzea of Boyle Heights. Not a great exertion, still I wanted to rest up a little bit. But the telephone rang persistently, and finally the hotel clerk, mildly excited, came with the message that the Fairbanks studio was calling. The secretary asked, why do you not come out and see the test? I can't, I have to lecture tonight. I did not know there was such a hurry about it, you know I am not yet engaged by the studio. Will be out soon. An hour later Farbanks himself telephoned, what is the matter, why do you not come out? I just explained to your secretary. I will be out tomorrow.

Next morning I was met by the Thief of Bagdad in person. The High Council (apparently consisting of Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Fairbanks and Knoblauch) considered my test so saisfactorily, that they had decided to offer me the leading part of the Chinese prince. They would make it worth while. Do you think I can do it? Yes, they thought I could. No violent action in it? No, there wouldn't be. It is a picturesque but quiet part, a sort of contrast to Fairbanks, perpetuum mobile activities. After luncheon I signed the agreement and began work. A leading part, a six to seven months solid engagement with a salary quite exceptional for a novice? Not so bad. It takes some folks years to get what was thrust upon me without the slightest effort or even inclination on my part, and I accepted this gift of destiny without much ado. What I liked about it was the new experience. Unexpected changes alone keep life interesting. And now for the Chinese prince! The only costume available was a dilapidated mandarin coat that had seen much service, ordinary Chinatown trousers and shoes, and a headgear such as some Chinese Pavlowa may wear. The barber insisted on glueing two long horsehair appendages to my moustache. I objected however to make up and was seconded by Fairbanks (this later on was over-ruled on account of the out-of-door work and the length of the engagement). I went again through some walking exercises, also a few attempts at action, and for weeks after was utilized as a sort of "subject" for lighting, makeup, costume, texture, background and photographic trick tests, for camera man Edeson is a great experimenter and user of lights in the domain of visual art.

My first care was to get acclimatized to conditions, to the studio lingo and atmosphere of the place. Never in my life previous had I occupied a position demanding regular hours. Of course, I had to come to my lectures as a certain hour; and when a journalist had to deliver copy at a certain day. Still, I had been master of my time. This coming to the studio, for no earthly reason, at 9 and staying until after 5 was a hard task. I did not fancy it. Nobody else does. To wait in some impossible costume, perchance in armour or half naked, all day long to no other purpose but to obey the whims of some director is an imposition. Everybody feels piqued but does as told. If birds are caught in a net they are subject to the fowler's disposition.

Well, there was a lot to interest me. Whenever I enter a new field of activity, I make is a point, solely for my own gratification, to study the working methods. Thus I invaded every department just to make silent observations. Fairbanks had engaged me "to take an interest in the scenario and to help along the production." I was eager enough to make suggestions, but what can one do if they are met with indifference or even with slight antagonism. Fairbanks himself never failed to eulogize me in the presence of others. A dangerous procedure, apt to do more harm than good. Unless one is invested with real power chiefs in particular resent intrusion and unsolicited advice. After trying it repeatedly and noticing that nothing took effect unless I mentioned it to Fairbanks himself I stopped all further comment. When there isn't any needle's eye thread is not of much use. What is the use of wasting one's intellectual ammunition?

There were plenty of conferences, but never any conference between performers, director and scenario writer. The actors in picture production are reduced to mere marionettes. The director holds the strings and pulls them. You lift your leg, scratch your nose, roll your eyes, just as he sees fit. By the shades of David Garrick! Chaplin pointed out to me how subtle he had made Menjou's pantomine in "A Woman of Paris." Nothing of the sort. He had given Menjou merely some leaway to express himself. There are hundreds of motion picture actors who could act if they were allowed to do so. As it is, they are hand-and-ankle-cuffed.

I realize perfectly that the large bulk of acting material is of the automaton order. They can't and won't do anything without being screamed at. They leave their appearance to the costumer and make-up man, and the acting to the director. Perhaps the prevailing method had dulled them. As they are kept in complete ignorance as to the plot of the play, they have no idea of the characters they are representing and apparently do not care to have any. More than once I have been asked by principals, already in costume, if I knew what sort of a character they were impersonating. All this is babykin stuff, and disastrous to true dramatic expression.

Equally so is the actual method of taking pictures. It is like a remnant of the Inquisition with its torturing wiles, the rack, thumbscrew and the spiked virgin. To take the same incident 7, 12, 27 times in one session cannot result in spontaneous work. That is why most performers look like corpses on the screen. Fortunate for them that the public is so fond of morgues. It is mostly pure guesswork with the director as well as the photographer. They take a scene over and over again until all possibilities are exhausted, to be on the safe side, as after all one of the many exposures mus good. Even the clumsiest swordsmith someti makes a fine sword. True, photography i most unreliable vehicle. Still there should b limit to haphazard experimentation. At pre producers boast of having taken a scene a h dred times instead of weeping over their inc petence. Three or four times should be an if they really knew what they were about. as far as the performers are concerned, w they are supposed to have no feeling. Patie and endurance are considered more necess than histrionic ability. Don't they get paid? Let them earn their money. They handled like a defeated nation after a war; producers almost kill the goose which is s posed to lay the golden egg.

I found the work not only unsympathetic entirely too strenuous for my physical condit I had come to Los Angeles as an invalid. So how the climate of Southern California did a lot of good. When I entered the studi felt better than I had for years, so the cent was excusable on my part. Still, the idea o man suffering from a weird combination asthma and T. B. to act in the movies for length of time is preposterous. A person w wobbly legs cannot dance a jig. Neither F banks nor I did take this into considerat We gambled and lost. After three weeks fairly steady work under the diabolical lig and out-of-doors exposed to the even more p verse reflectors, I succumbed and was for to send in my resignation.

There was no way to continue. One can play a leading part and be brought on the in a litter. If I had been a great histric celebrity like Bernhardt or Duse, it might h been arranged that I work only two hours day at reasonable intervals. My "debili would have amounted to an advertising as But I was, after all, only a superior extra cently discovered. And it is impossible fo system, as rigid and iron-cast as picture prod tion, to establish any precedent in favor o novice. So Old Nick took me rather rudely the arm and told me to quit unless I desired steady company.

But it was not alone the work, strenuous it was, which affected me; the annoyances impositions which I was subjected to can cl an equal share. This is an easy and polite w of expressing it. Let me record some of occurrences, and judge for yourself, oh, sapi and impartial reader.

Robert Fairbanks, production manag seemed to have a strange predilection for delicate art of poisoning as an occasional lun eon topic. I heard him relate how foolish p ple insisted on sending all sorts of prese including fruit and candy, to "Mary" that at times felt very much like indulging, but never permitted to do so. Also, how easily products of germ culture could be utilized communicate putrefaction and disease to fo one is particularly fond of. And again, of gentle but obsolete device of sending poiso postage stamps for return answers. As I one of these pleasant parts that just for a p time commit an assassination or two bef breakfast, you can imagine that I felt those d as if I were living in Cesare Borgia's age. atmosphere seemed to be charged with mal and destruction.

I was not aware of it until I tried on my n costume. What is this, I demanded to kn something to advertise linoleum? Imagine costume made entirely of painted oilcloth, ab lutely air-tight, with no less than seven f lined aprons of oilcloth from the waist do It weighed at least forty pounds and encu bered all natural action. As it was the o costume available, I had to wear it. At very last moment I cut a lot of air holes i it and had all superfluous oilcloth removed. still remained a veritable hothouse encaseme And one warm day I almost gave way to a h

...sition, which no doubt was the vague in... ...ntion of its makers. This was the first at... ...mpt of rendering me hors de combat.

Thereupon one of the barbers of Bagdad came to me with the kind design of shaving my head. What for? No Chinese prince ever had his head shaved. Well, it was suggested higher up. Ah, that's their little game? (Now my temper was up.) They know that my hat measures 7⅜, and so they calmly proceeded to take one hat entirely too large and another 6⅞ so that it hurts me every moment I wear them. And now you want me to accommodate the artists, cover up their mistakes by shaving my head, and in that way make me run the risk of contracting a catarrh for the rest of my existence. Do I look like a greenhorn, landsman? And thus I made my second escape from dilettanti desperadoes.

And now for the third adventure. The art department held the opinion that a pair of boots with a one-foot-high sole would exactly meet my requirements, as it would spoil the peculiarity of my walk (one of the reasons why I was engaged), and because it would offer generous opportunities for me to a slip and fall and break my ankle, the body of the boot being limp and without any support whatsoever. Besides, they were too narrow across the insted, so I returned them to be changed. In the course of six weeks before "shooting") they were twice sent back to me without having been altered. Then they insisted on my going down town to have measurements taken over again. And finally when I had wriggled into them, ready for work, the director most graciously decided that he did not care for that kind of shoes. This is downright fiction. Only profane language could express it adequately. Think of any factory or institution being run in such slipshod manner! The motion picture industry, however, seems to thrive on this absence of executive ability.

Again I had thwarted somebody's aspirations toward physical aggression. Only one more disagreeable incident is to be recorded. When I was taken sick (I had already sent in my resignation) Actor Playall, an old standby of Fairbanks productions, a veritable crack-a-jack in changing his identity in minor parts, appeared upon the scene and offered me a bottle of rum. I thought it very considerate, and although I did not like the looks of the brew, toko it off with a grand. I indulged only in a taste or two. "Holy-holy-angels and ministers of grace, defend us!" I exclaimed, experienced one alcoholic poisoning years ago. This time a second one will last me until the end of my days. I stopped check and sent the bottle down to the studio, as some folks are known to drink anything. Has this been done with malicious intent, I asked Matt Moore? No, he replied; they do not go as far as that. Let us be grateful and rejoice. Is there anything like the Ku Klux movement in the movies? Perhaps Pola Negri and Lubitsch could answer that question. So it was, after all, a mere coincidence. Mighty queer, though, that a bottle of liquor should have been brought to my room unsolicited, by an employee of the studio, coming from a wigmaker at West Seventh Street —the headquarters of a bootlegger doing extensive business at the temporary city of Bagdad. Still, there is another side to it. I am liberal enough to think that many of the one thousand and one annoyances were due to my sensitiveness and prevailing working methods that ignore consideration of any kind. The remiander was due to the inherent nobility of human nature. Grown-up folks enjoy hazing and practical jokes just as much as college students. Any newcomer, in no matter what activity, whether it be in a newspaper office, circus or theatrical company, can tell of similar experiences, particularly so if specially favored by the management. Crows are black all the world over, Hollywood included.

I have often been asked if the motion picture was an art. A most unnecessary and futile question. Is a county fair art? Are Buffalo Bill shows, circus and hippodrome performances, parades, reviews, "claico" pageants, centennial celebrations art? No, they are public entertainments—that may or may not be artistic in spots. It is exactly the same with products of the motion picture industry.

The haphazard way in which they proceed and "get by" furnishes the best proof. "The Thief of Bagdad" is supposed to be one of the most elaborate and expensive productions ever put on the screen. Even the most obtuse Iowa health-seeker could vouch for that. And what is it all about? What sort of a play is considered worth while of such lavish exploitation? It is no play at all. Just a conglomeration of specatcular incidents. Of course, the scenario writer can claim authorship. But there is no real authorship, as it is a willful concoction, a composite, a salmagundi of suggestions derived from a hundred sources, loosely strung together.

Bakst, the great sensualist among costume designers, in a moment of exuberance invented a new cut of trousers for some Red Sultana; trunkless, loin and ankle gartered, very full and fluffy and yet tantalizingly transparent. This somehow was made the keynote and inspiration of this Oriental phantasmagoria. Fanrbanks, Sr., wore a pair of the same pattern with great gusto in the earlier scenes. The costume designers became wildly excited (as far as costume designers can become excited) and produced a hodge-podge of Oriental robes, adaptive and imitative of all that is known in modern costuming. A most gorgeous array, willful in character and riotous in coloring. But why all this display of color which would show to much better advantage on the legitimate, being more or less lost in black and white reproduction? The costumes of the extras were entirely too pretentious and conspicuous to permit emphasis of the principal characters in mob scenes. The effect was like that in "Kismet," a jumble of minor contrasts, a restless flare and flimmer, fatiguing to the eye, and never a harmonious division into decorative groups and complimentary parts.

The one step in advance shown in this production is in the handling of the out-of-door sets. They are conceived as big planes and masses with a skillful elimination of details, and their story is told in a few lines of a slightly "cubistic" order. Apparently it took producers ten years to see the advantage of comparatively plain backgrounds that silhouette mass movements more distinctly and in that way help clearness of expression. No doubt it will take another ten years before they will realize that the movements of principals would gain considerably by treating the extras with a similar method of simplification, of lifting the leading parts out of the masses, background, and pervading tonality by some special isolating color note, and to have the extras divided photographically into different groups of distinct patterns and shades of light gray, medium gray, dark gray, black and white, etc. Any illustrator or mural painter, may it be a Henry Abbey or Maxfield Parrish, would know how to do it, but I forget that motion picture producers do not seek the advice of real artists.

I made suggestions for my own costume, but what is the use of asking the way of blind men? In a production like this, one has to make the best of what one gets. If the designers had paid as much attention to us principals as to the tinsel draperies of some female extras, no doubt we would have fared better. Stillj it would have amounted to the same thing. There is no chance for personal preference and selection. There was, however, an opportunity for individual assertion in the makeup of my face and hands. Of the latter as I had to wear long finger nails and any amount of cumbersome rings. I made up with Leichner's 5-A, which is exactly the color of my complexion. I am sorry that they found it necessary to darken the parts around my eyes. But I was permitted to use my natural eyebrows and growth of beard to develop without false hair and pencil a distinct Manchurian mustache (from a color print that happened to hang in Fairbanks' office). My idea was to construct a face, sinister, cruel and yet not without some glamour of romance. I believe I succeeded (viz a still or two by Warrington). And how about the wrinkles of old age? Well, the photographer was rather kind in that respect. He spilled so much light and counte rlights that, although figures at a certain middle distance became as flat as pancakes, faces appeared as "ageless" even in gigantic close-ups. True, some of the finer lines in the face were sacrificed thereby, but who cares? A phoenix is not supposed to come from a hen's nest.

A Chinese monster grinned defiantly at me from the mirror of my dressing room. What should I ever do with it? How could this diabolical personality of my own invention behave properly in a picture, featuring a star in his specialty of athletic pantomime? How suit the action to your mask, oh, sinister Prince of Manchuria, or thereabouts? After a few attempts I felt discouraged. My neighbor, long and languid Julanne Johnston (marvel of willowy grace) inquired sympathetically, "Do you get used to your new profession?" I shook my head sadly. I never trained for a marathon race. It's all new to me.

For the peculiar technique of motion picture acting is no acting at all. It is more like a six-day walking race in Madison Square Garden. You simply walk into a situation. Watch your steps. Get out your pedometer. And you are a motion picture actor. Take a few steps to the right, then to the left, make a turn, and you walk (skip, hop or flounder) rgiht into the situation. Then you have to make a face for the close-up. After this, promenade some more until you reach another situation, and make another face. Nothing but ordinary expressions, please! Subtlety of facial expression or the transition of one emotion into another is tabooed. It is incredible, but a whole scene, no, an entire play, is made up of such pedestrial activity, and grimacing, with a few high-flung gestures thrown in for good measure. Of course, there may be fighting and shooting, pursuits an djumpings about, but what should constitute real dramatic action is muzzled, gagged and garrotted.

"The Thief of Bagdad" is one of those productions which had no written out scenario, but just a skeleton plot like a clothes-horse with many pegs on which you can hang whatever you like. The details of action are developed while working on the set. I had an episode of four scenes—"the Chinese prince in ouest of the apple of health"—pretty much to myself. I made a sort of scenario sketch which, with the addition of some more lively stuff, was played very much as I had written it. With no author's lines to follow, I thought there would be a wonderful chance to build up a type out of my own imagiantion. But I soon realized hat, although a cat may get the rice, a dog will come and eat it.

It is surprising, psychologically and pathologically, what they made me do. In the first scene the Chinese prince arrives in a barge in what it was supposed to be, a mysterious Chinese town. It was a makeshift set, Nottingham remodeled into a Chinese scene that no doubt would have made a great hit as a chop suey restaurant in some world's fair. There was nothing mysterious about it. But even if there had been, it would have served no purpose. I had planned to stand somewhere in the fore part of the vessel, in the attitude of a conqueror or explorer, with a chart in hand, expressing to my warrior attendants, crouching at my feet, my doubts as to the right direction, whereupon our young fisherman-guide at the prow would excitedly point toward the distance—"there it is!"— and the town would slowly come into view. But they, taking the boat from the rear, made me move about at the stern and gesticulate to haul down the sail, which fell like a proscenium curtain and at once revealed the chop suey scene; and then—who would believe it?—they actually made me clamber along the side of the boat as if I was eager to get off first, just like some Sunday excursionist, who, after arriving at Coney Island, rushes to the gangplank. A Chinese prince would hardly act that way, I humbly suggested. Never mind that, said the director. Good advice! In time one doesn't mind anything any more.

Entering the town, I thought the people would assemble in silent groups, mysterious faces would appear at the windows and doorways, all motionless, and I, aware of the hiding place of the apple, would show my evil intentions by my walk and proceed at once to the entrance of the relic house. But nothing of that sort happened. The whole population, wildly gesticulating, thought it fit to fall down on their knees, and I had to stop at the corner of the street, just as at a drug store, asking where lives Mr. Jones. And the result: more action, undeniably, but commonplace and meaningless action.

Inside the relic house I again had to meander this way and that way, sit down (which was difficult in the oilcloth armor) and get up, threatening the keeper of the treasure, so that he, frightened, stepped back and fell into a dagger held straight from the waist by one of my bodyguards. This scene took us over three days—I could have hiked to the Yosemite in the time—the same incidents, sitting down and getting up, over and over again, and always to the same strain of music, until I was ready to elope with any lady of the orchestra, just to escape the ghasly monotony of the performance. I wonder what world-stuff directors are made of! After the death of the keeper, I had the one chance to make an out-of-the-ordinary gesture, and I made it—a signal to one of my attendants to break with crushing blows a statue of Buddha hiding a secret passageway. Entering the same, I was not allowed to grope my way, the natural action in a dim and unfamiliar tunnel-like structure, but had to run as fast as my legs would carry me on the uneven ground and wriggle through the circular opening of a magic door into another chamber containing the apple of life. The poor apple was fastened with adhesive bandages to the barren art nouveau tree. It was a tricky thing to pick. Sometimes it would yield only after energetic pulling; at other times it would not budge, or again it would fall off before I got to it, and thus for the sake of insufficient property arrangements the scene had to be shot a dozen times or more. One obstinate horse may upset the entire stable.

In the last scene I had, apple in hand, to rush back through the first chamber, out to the street again and back to the boat. A performance worthy of a college athlete doing a sixty-yard dash! And strange to state all passages of exit and entrance were either so low or narrow that I, standing six and a half with my Pavlowa hat on, had to negotiate all with a decided stoop or twist. Why should it be thus? I asked Miss Beesknee, Chaplin's secretary. And can you imagine the reason, because any unusual movement of the body as bending, swooping, pouncing, wriggling, etc., is valued as extra action. They must be indeed hard up for dramatic material. My part, as Fairbanks expressed it, was to be one of repose with as few movements and gestures as possible. This was simply beyond the vision of the director who, trained to the tradition of action, meaningless or otherwise as long as it is action and plenty of it, could not obey the wishes of his master. Alas, Fairbanks knows that it is easier to rule a kingdom than to regulate a motion picture concern.

Just a day or two before I fell sick I saw the episode in the projecting room, still "unfinished" but carrying out the sequence of events. Chaplin and Fairbanks told me that it was a wonderful performance. I personally thought it was "rotten," esthetically, dramatically, pictorially. Well, I have never been a picture fan and do not understand the psychology of people "who go to the cinema." It seemed to me that they had always selected of the dozen shots depicting one incident invariably the most commonplace one. They left out what I considered my best efforts, and some of my most telling gestures were deliberately cut in two. And the continuity of action was constantly interrupted by close-ups and changes of viewpoints. Why was it necessary to engage me? There are many retired grocers in Hollywood who could have done as well. What is the use of having individuality of expression, and of exploiting the same, if it does not show on the screen?

The thirty years ago much debated theory of the great Antoine, founder of the Theatre libre, that scrubwomen should be acted by scrubwomen, and society ladies by society ladies is the moving spirit and simulant of motion picture acting. The producers and their casting directors are just crazy on the subject. They notice a person crossing a lot. What a fine pre Would look well in that part or in that Their whole life, what they see and hear, domestic relations, amours, luncheons, id cracies, are judged from that one angle: photograph and look well on the screen? theory becomes most fallacious when carr this extreme. And the human face, even the most or one, is such a complex affair and photog so treacherous a recorder, that the simple of "looking natural" can not produce a sired results. Take my case for instance. banks said: "You have the eyes of a sain rest of your face is like that of a villain. objection raised. But the director did n it that way. He tried to make me e menace in a colossal close-up of my eyes All I could do to look fierce was to wrink brows. Looking into my eyes even a would give up all his horde for the ben stranded extras; they would never frigh hard-boiled egg Chinese necromancer an tributor of poisons to such an extent th would lose his head, stagger backward like a poor bug have himself pinned up extended dagger.

Motion picture acting of today, the so "photoplastic genius," requires outward a ance, adaptability, vitality, the patience o and the endurance of Ulysses. Brains and ity are hindrances. The Grail of Realized Hopes

The was an item of news of unusual interest ...ren in the Hollywood film colony this week. ...pertained to a modest announcement of the ...ir completion of a feature production entitled ...isio," the filming of which has been in prog...s f some time behind the proverbial "closed ...ors due to the fact that new processes and ...revolutionary screen technique are involved. ...e responsible for the new idea, as well ...the story, is none other than Delbert E. Dav...port formerly editor of "Camera." The un...al interest phase of it lies in the revelation ...clo friends of Mr. Davenport as to what ...ten...e has made personal sacrifices for the ...eat part of the last four years in order to ...ach...he goal he is approaching now—specifi...lly, ...at stage of the game where the results ...h... costly labors are to be divulged and ...ge...

Ac...rding to those who know the history of ...Davenport's notion to essay introducing a ...pletely revolutionary technique to the film ...br...he gained his first inspiration about six ...ars ago when he was editor-in-chief of one ...f... leading photoplay magazines. In this ...with he was the target for fan letters galore ...bo...thing like an average of five hundred a ...w...nd as a consequence of having these let...s ...assified, he discovered that a majority of ...contained some reference to the desirability ...improvements or changes in the cinema in ...de...that it might develop into a greater me...ium for imparting general diversion. Out of ...numerous letters arose a veritable "hue ...d ...ry" for something new—always some...ing different. Now the question which came ...t... editor's mind first of all had to do with ...ssibility of the oft-repeated statement rela...ve there being "nothing new under the sun" ...erroneous. Thereupon he ventured to as-sume there might be something brand-new, and subsequently started spending his own money and many hours of his time when he should have been resting. Later he had to call upon friends to help him financially, as the costs of his laboratory experiments mounted.

Now, as Mr. Davenport admits frankly, he is indebted to practically everybody he knows in one way or another for aid in pushing to a conclusion the rather gigantic task he has undertaken. "I should like to have it published far and wide that I am deeply grateful to everyone who has in any way helped me, and I should like to have it known generally that the chief part of my ambition is to be placed in a position to reward every benefactor I have had in a way far beyond their wildest expectations," Mr. Davenport says. "The perfection of this new technique represents countless worries, many heartaches and some painful experiences in being prematurely judged because of a perseverance which has made it necessary to sacrifice even friendship in some cases in order to keep on the trail I am so confident will lead to the goal from which I will be able to demonstrate the utmost in appreciation to all those deserving it from me."

The new Davenportian Technique is highly interesting for what it promises to accomplish in the way of revolutionizing the constructing of screen stories, as well as the making of motion pictures of them. Under this unique system practically every present-day "characteristic" of a photoplay is eliminated and something else is substituted for it, the whole theory being to base the unfoldment of visualized fiction on the basis of the workings of a normal human mind rather than along the lines requiring mental acrobatics to make possible following the plot.

Among the striking changes promised in "Visions," the first feature picture to be made under this technique, include the elimination of cutbacks, the complete alteration in close-ups and their purpose, the revising of the matter of titling to the extent of making the present system totally obsolete, the removal of any necessity for interrupting the action of the story on the screen for any reason whatsoever, the introduction of an innovation in the way of symbolic visualization said to have surprising effects in making the cinema a more universal language than ever, and the pressing into service of an ingenious method for sustaining climaxes. In short, from beginning to end the system of producing pictures has been upset by the theories of Mr. Davenport, and it seems a foregone conclusion that when his "Visions" is pre-viewed here at an early date it will start a widespread pro-and-con discussion. One of the interesting questions which is likely to be raised is, whether or not the new style picture is superior to the old style.

Although an all-star cast has enacted the various roles in this picture which bids fair to be epochal, no point will be made of this in the first announcements of this feature. All the emphasis will be stressed on the revolutionary character of this production, it being the high hopes of all concerned that it will prove a useful contribution to the advancement of the silent drama as an art and as an agency for wholesome entertainment of the masses and classes.

It is stated the definite date of the Los Angeles preview will be published very soon, and that all the critics, as well as the leaders in the motion picture industry, will be invited.

Much of this ma...l was being profitably absorbed as the ...stry struck its stride. Lois Zellner, desper...t for independent success in a new world, ...ded upon scenarios. Surprisingly enough, ...sold fourteen of her first fifteen efforts—and was established! Needless to say, there were many thrills attendant upon this sudden projection into the midst of cosmopolitan work and art after a staid Dixie existence.

"That first glimpse of life was indescribably dazzling! It carried me far away from my early, almost colloquial views and provided a deal of interesting perspective. But although I soon thought largely in the new terms, I've never entirely eliminated my origin. Almost every one suspects it," Miss Zellner chatted along, as she stroked O'Sing, a red Persian kittne; and we nodded that for her at least there was no denying Old Dixie, nor or ever. She might think New Yorkese are anything else, but that accent and those cadences were the arts of just one American locality.

We caught up with her career then, discovering that many of her early achievements were Dorothy Gish, Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy and Charles Ray successes. She had also provided some of Ince's well remembered Enid Bennett features, which were produced by Fred Niblo, and, after heading the American scenario department at Santa Barbara for a long terms and fulfilling Metro contracts both here and in New York, Lois Zellner bought a Hollywood home and settled down in the sunshine.

Four Universal photoplays and a half dozen independent pictures formed her output for 1923! A consistent worker who sticks to life as she knows it, without ever stilting her presentation with conventionalized methods, this brilliant screen writer is a refreshing combination of realist and romanticist, conservatist and radical. Incidentally, she has been responsible for some highly effective drama. She explained her view of the photoplay before our departure. "While human nature is human nature, and we writers can't take too many liberties with it—technique—ah, that is different. There is no technique, or rather, none that will not be swept away by continual improvement. It is this knowledge that renders picture making so fascinating to many of us. How infiitely more interesting it is to build tradition than to live it. When more of our producers are willing to sponsor the radical, we will move faster, even though there will be many mistakes." After all, we decided that Lois Zellner had traveled quite a way from Georgia.

Triumphant Life

By BARRET C. KIESLING

Feature Play Company and definitely threw in their fortunes with the then somewhat precarious business of making motion pictures. Mr. De Mille's success since that fall day in 1912 needs no particular mention.

When Mr. De Mille came to California, he came as a pioneer of motion pictures and remained to be a pioneer of real estate, banking and other business interests as they developed in the most rapidly expanding land empire in America today.

Mr. De Mille is perhaps best known as the producer of such successful photoplays as "Joan the Woman," "Why Change Your Wife?" "Old Wives for New," "Manslaughter," "Adam's Rib," "The Ten Commandments" and "Triumph," which is his latest Paramount production. He has attained wide fame for his success as an organizer of the gigantic film plant, in his capacity of director-general of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Among people outside films, however, Mr. De Mille is acclaimed for still other and equally notable successes. He came to Hollywood and Los Angeles when the former was a village and the latter rather a sleepy city. He has seen over 1000 per cent growth in Hollywood during his stay there. The same vision which made him successful in motion pictures has brought him a large share of this world's goods in transactions in Hollywood real estate.

Coincident with this, Mr. De Mille became associated with the Commercial National Bank of Los Angeles as director. Shortly thereafter he became director of the Bank of Italy, then vice-president of the Federal Trust & Savings Bank of Hollywood. Recently he was made vice-president of the Commercial National Bank and placed in charge of the new Hollywood agency of that institution. This election is a most significant one, as it is the first time that a high executive in motion pictures has been made active head of a financial institution.

The Harlem flat from which Mr. De Mille brought his wife and daughter Cecilia in 1[9]1[3] is somewhat different in extent from the beautiful ten-acre estate and spacious home which the producer now occupies on his imposing hilltop in Hollywood. Mr. De Mille has four children. He finds his leisure hour pleasures at his mountain ranch, a six-hundred-acre stretch of wooded country high up in the Sierra Madre mountains, and also on board his yacht "The Seaward," a 106-foot schooner in which he anticipates a trip around the world in the not too distant future.

Mr. De Mille has been known as a pathfinder in motion pictures because of his daring in trying out new processes and new methods of presenting attractive screen images. While he has attained world-wide fame for the glittering spectacle and the gorgeous trappings of some of his productions, many critics state the belief that he reaches the finest point of his directorial genius in small, intimate scenes not requiring over two or three people.

Mr. De Mille's method is to paint in broad sweeping strokes. He is a master of contrast. His method is one that catches the eye. He is not an etcher. Rather does he use a broad brush and brilliant colors. Perhaps one of the foundations of his success is the variety of his attack. The present is an excellent instance of that. He has gone from the stupendous magnificence of "The Ten Commandments" to the small, humble, modern story in "Triumph" where the major part of the action is confined to small sets and very few characters.

Conscience

By ERIC MAYNE

Eric Mayne

A well-disciplined Conscience is a mans best friend; but, outraged, it becomes his bitterest enemy.

Paul, in his defense before King Agrippa, admitted that "he thought within himself that he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth."

Men in all sections of religious life have thought they ought to persecute those who did not believe as they believed.

And they have not all admitted, as frankly as Paul did, that they were wrong.

Conscience is that Supreme Power within us to which our actions are instinctively submitted.

The higher our moral education, the more reliable our Conscience.

Cowardice asks, "Is it safe?" Expedience asks, "Is it wise?" Vanity asks, "Is is popular?" Conventionality asks, "Is it done?" Conscience asks, "Is it Right?"

That which is called Conscience is often merely fear of the law.

Conscience is not Law; but there is no Law so relentless in its punishment as the offended Conscience.

A mariner must not think when he reads his compass; he must know, or his ship will go on the rocks. And if a man does not read his Conscience correctly, he will become a moral shipwreck.

Conscience lays the foundation of true joy with which the stranger cannot interfere, and the bitter remorse which no friend can alleviate.

"Labor to keep alive in your breiast that little spark of celestial fire—Conscience." An extract from Washington's copybook. A precept that he undoubtedly followed. We may in safety do likewise.

Rowland Lee Will Go On His Own

That immediately upon concluding his current agreement with Fox, Rowland W. Lee, noted film director, will become a producer of independent photoplays, was the announcement made by Mr. Lee upon his arrival in New York after an extended trip to Europe.

In a wire to his brother Robert N. Lee, well known scenarist, Mr. Lee stated that the trip abroad had given him a different perspective of the public's need for wholesome film entertainment, which, with the addition of various innovations in production methods, he evolved during his ramblings in the "old country," he proposes to try out.

Beyond the fact that Leo has purchased the film rights to several European stage and literary successes, as well as a few screen originals by noted foreign writers, little is known in Los Angeles of the details of Mr. Lee's plans.

It is expected that Mr. Lee will be in Los Angeles in February. He has three more films to direct under his Fox contract.

United Producers Plan Historic Epic

Plans are being completed by the United Producers and Distributors for the filming of a big American epic in which one of the foremost men of this country's history will be visualized in a very striking way. It is announced that definte information in detail relative to this production will be given to the public within a few days.

Marks Finishes In "Iron Man"

Robert Marks, who is remembered for his many excellent characterizations in recent comedy series at the Fox Studios has just finished his part in the current episode of "The Iron Man," under the direction of Jay Marchant at the Universal, featuring Luciano Albertini and Margaret Morris.

Peggy Cartwright, child actress, plays one of the principal roles in "A Lady of Quality" now showing at the Mission Theater. She is a player of rare promise and has met with exceptional success.

Gertrude Astor has been signed to play a prominent part in Roland V. West's next production, the filming of which will start immediately.

Universal Will Have Printzlau Script

Universal has engaged Olga Printzlau to adapt Kathleen Norris' story, "Butterfly," which is to be produced under the direction of Clarence Brown. Brown and Miss Printzlau have been in conference this week, following her completion of the scenario for "The Breath of Scandal."

Valli Return For First of Month

March 1st is set as the date when Virginia Valli will return to Los Angeles, according to information which she imparts in a letter to friends here.

Miss Valli is now in the East, where she is being featured opposite Thomas Meighan in a picture for Paramount. Upon her return she will again take up her work at Universal.

Ben Carre on "Cytherea" Art

George Fitzmaurice, who will shortly start "shooting" on "Cytherea" at the United Studios, yesterday signed Ben Carre, prominent art director, to create the settings for the Joseph Hergersheimer picturization.

Mr. Carre has been identified with many leading producers and has been responsible for the art direction of various prominent picturizations. His most recent work is evidenced in the Constance Talmadge picture, "The Goldfish."

Newspapers Link Dead Girl With Movies

Late Friday night newspaper reports of the slaying of a woman by the name of Louise Lawson in New York stated she was associated with the Triangle Studios here about seven years prior to the D. W. Griffith interests assuming control. Her age was given as 24 and it was said she came east from Texas.

Inasmuch as she was not of preeminent importance in motion pictures and as it was not definitely known whether she was a member of the profession, it leaves no doubt whatsoever as to the desire of the yellow press to grab every opportunity to link dark deeds with the profession.

It is sad that the editors of our local papers, anyway, will not take the trouble to verify such reports.

Foy-U. P. D. Farce Now Complete

"Horrible Horace," the comedy in which Ned Sparks and Harry Tighe are co-starred and in which Mollie Malone serves as leading lady for both, is in the final stages of the editing processes and will be ready to contribute its share towards making the people laugh very soon now. Bryan Foy, son of the famous Eddie Foy, directed this picture. It will be a United Producers and Distributors release.

Rush "Listen Lester" For Early Release

Listen, folks! "Listen, Lester" is finished and is now in the cutting room of the Sacramento Pictures Corporation. When it emerges about two weeks hence it will be turned over to Sol Lesser and associates for distribution through their releasing organization, Principal Pictures Corporation.

William A. Seiter, who directed the farce-comedy, predicts that "Listen, Lester" will be one of the most-laughed at pictures of the year. In the cast of the production are Louise Lazenda, Lee Moran, Dot Farley, Alec B. Francis, George O'Hara, Eugenia Gilbert, Harry Myers and Eva Novak.

TULLY SEEKS OPINIONS ON ACTRESS FOR "BIRD OF PARADISE;" INVITES LETTERS

"Who Will Play 'Luana?' " asks Noted Producer; Role Is of Tremendous Dramatic Scope; May Use Unknown

Who would you like to see as Luana, the Hawaiian princess, in Richard Walton Tully's screen version of his internationally famous stage success, "The Bird of Paradise," which he is to present as a First National picture this year?

Probably one of the reasons for the startling success of this great producer, in both his stage and screen productions springs from the fact that he is ever on the alert to accept suggestions from the public he strives to please, and ever had his finger upon the changable pulse of that public.

Tully admits that as yet he has made no decision as to the actress who will play the role of Luana. Many have already been suggested and have received consideration, but he declares he is still open to conviction, and that he has not even determined the point as to whether the lucky lady will be a star, already famous, or whether some talented girl, as yet unstarred will receive the plum.

And he will welcome suggestions. For your guidance, Luana, the little "bird of paradise" should of course, be beautiful. She should not be tall; should be brunette, and of a certain voluptuous type, exotic and vivacious.

Nearly everyone knows the beautiful love story. Luana, a native of the Hawaiian Islands, with royal blood in her veins, loves and is loved by an American who marries her and leads a butterfly existance in the land of palms and awa. Then he awakens, too late, and casts off the native girl, who loves him as life itself, in the belief that she is the cause of his degradation. She, heart-broken, makes the supreme sacrifice.

In the many different stage productions of "The Bird of Paradise," Tully has made famous a bevy of now renowed actresses, including Lenore Ulric, Laurette Taylor, Bessie Barriscale, Carlotta Monterey, and Florence Rockwell. For the screen version, he will secure the girl he believes best suited to the part, regardless of her present claims to fame.

So if you decide upon whom you would like to see in this great role in the picturization of America's greatest stage success, drop a line to Richard Walton Tully, care of United Studios, Los Angeles. Who knows? Perhaps you may be the means of securing the part for your favorite artiste?

Potel Funning Accorded Praise

At a recent preview of "Her Man" Reginald Barker's latest Mayer production, the role played by Victor Potel, was acclaimed one of the cleverest pieces of comedy relief that has recently been seen upon the screen. The tall, thin funster characterizes a love-sick cook on a fishing yacht in this picture whose awkward action is a riot. Decked out in a shabby, rough-neck sweater and shrunken stocking-cap, Potel's performance in "Her Man" is reminiscent of his first famous characterization, Essanay's "Slippery Slim."

Evidently Is Very Optimistic

Jean Hersholt, in his role of the saloon keeper in "The Woman on the Jury" for Associated First National, plays the role "with a smile" all the way through.

Foreman Was Right, Avers Pat

Actors generally prefer to tell about their achievements and seldom go into detail about how they have been fired from more or less well-paying jobs.

Pat O'Malley, who will play the lead in Universal's "The Throwback," when being interviewed, prefers to tell about the time he was fired from the job of pump-boy in a coal mine in Forest City, Pa.

Pat's job was to watch the steam pump which removed the water from a coal pit. Pat fell asleep at the switch. The pump ceased to function. He awakened when the water in the pit reached his hips—and as the foreman entered the scene with a howl.

"I'm sick," feebly exclaimed Pat —and he was, from fright.

"You're fired," yelled the foreman as he assisted Pat make his exit with a well directed boot.

Wonder If Shuler Was Peeking?

Dignified, conservative Crenshaw Boulevard ran to the window and threw up the sash the other morning when a police patrol backed up to the home of John A. Waldron, general manager of the Mack Sennett Studio. The bell clanged as the front door of the Waldron home burst open and a motley crowd of men and women tumbled out and were pushed into the conveyance by a dozen policemen.

The melee bore all the earmarks of "another Hollywood party," and Crenshaw Boulevard compressed its lips and narrowed its eyes as it hung over the window sill. Then the siren shrieked and the loaded patrol pulled out—revealing for the first time a small group of men surrounding a motion picture camera.

Crenshaw Boulevard gnashed its teeth and tore its hair as it muttered, "Fooled again!"

John A. Waldron had forgotten to inform his neighbors that he had loaned his front yard to the Sennett comedy unit making "Flickering Youth."

Louise Finishes Sacramento Role

Louise Fazenda has completed another hilarious role as "Miss Arbusus Quilty" in "Listen, Lester" which the Sacramento Pictures Corporation has produced. "Miss Quiltv" has some points in common with "Mabel Monroe" of "The Gold Diggers," a role which sent soaring the Fazenda stocks. "Miss Quilty" is a vampish young lady and possesses great ability in concentratiton where her fancy is intrigued. Louise lends to the characterization her delightful humor, quite a bit of drama here and there and her usual realism that makes "Miss Quilty" a most vivid piece. This is the third featured role she has completed since "The Gold Diggers," the other two being the enactment of the well meaning cook in the Hal E. Roach western "The King of the Wild Horses" and the vaudeville headliner in "The Galloping Fish," an Ince production. For one solid year and a month, the comedy queen has had a program of uninterrupted production.

Malatesta in Role of Bum Journalist

Fred Malatesta, one of the well known "heavies" of filmdom, is now negotiating a leading role in "Love Insurance," a Universal production with Reginald Denny. Mr. Malatesta has the role of an affluent newspaper man, who uses his own methods in furthering his interests.

Tom Forman, who is directin the final scenes of the Mission Fil Corporation's production of "Fla tery," from the story by H. H. Va Loan, was at one time one of t screen's most popular leading me He had been playing leads Lasky's for six years when he w asked to give up his makeup-b in favor of the megaphone, an since that time has made some no able productions. At Lasky's directed "If You Believe It I So," "The City of Silent Men "White and Unmarried," an "Cappy Ricks." Under his contra with B. P. Schulberg he directe "Shadows," "The Girl That Ca Back," "April Showers," "T Broken Wing" and "The Vi ginian." He began his screen c reer with the old Kalem compan as actor and director. He made considerable success at writing f the screen, and was for two yea in the scenario department of Un versal, where sixteen of his stori were produced. His scenarios ha also been picturized by Lasky an Fox. Forman says he will neve forsake directing to become act again because as a director he h a broader and more interestin field in which to work, and in a dition he finds his present callin more lucrative.

James B. Leong, has complete one of the leading supportin heavies in "Defiance" which wa filmed at the Hollywood studio under the direction of Bertra Bracken.

Now, Mr. Thomas H. Ince is a very, very busy man. Everybody knows that producers have lots of important things to attend to. But Mr. Ince is never too occupied to see Muriel Frances Dana when the little miss whose thespic talent he discovered and first presented to the world in "Hail the Woman" comes a-calling.

Three years ago, when she was dancing in a prologue at a Grauman theatre in Los Angeles, Muriel's winsome charm attracted Mr. Ince's notice and led to her film-debut. The friendship formed then has been cemented more firmly during the past three years and Muriel, who is now six, thinks Mr. Ince the best ever. When working at some other studio, the child often begs her mother to take her out to visit "Uncle Ince" and upon such occasions the cares and work of being an important producer are cast aside while the two have great "chin-chats." And now that Muriel is acting at his studio, in "Love and Lies" with Lila Lee and James Kirkwood, Mr. Ince often comes out on the set to watch her at her work.

Recently, Muriel decided her dollies needed entertainment and, having at hand Santa's gift of a top projection-machine, wrote a very polite little note, looking up the big words carefully in the dictionary, asking Mr. Ince please to let her have all the cut-outs from his laboratory rooms, so she would have plenty of film to amuse her dolls with on cold winter evenings when they can't go out. Disdaining his secretary, or perhaps fearful that such important people might forget the very necessary requests of little girls, Muriel insisted upon leaving the note upon Mr. Ince's desk herself, early one morning before he had arrived.

And here is Mr. Ince's reply: "I have told my Grand Vizier to hunt up the cut-outs and if they are not forthcoming, the Vizier will be bastinadoed, tied up in a sack and thrown into the creek in the back of Stage 5. Will that please your majesty? Your humble subject, Thomas H. Ince."

So you see, hard-hearted and commercial though this movie business is supposed to be, there's still a lot of sentiment in it too, when important producers remember lovely little girls and write them such very nice letters.

It has often been said that "truth is stranger than fiction" and this ancient adage is substantiated to a great extent by the colorful events that have transpired in the life of Jack McCready, film extra man and author of "Movie Money," the satirical novelette of Hollywood motion picture life which begins in next week's issue of "Camera!", complete in four weekly installments.

'Twas a good many years ago, indeed, that McCready started in the world of drama. His hopping-off place was in Ireland where he elected to exhibit his talents as a song-and-dance artist. In the course of events he joined a traveling variety company and was stranded in Calcutta, India, many, many weary miles from dear old Erin. Undaunted, however, he sallied forth and secured a position under Lord Curzon, Viceroy of India, and was placed in charge of the royal train. Later he was elected mayor of Kharjpur, Bengal, and took part in suppressing several native uprisings.

After he had had his fill of mayoring he joined another company of troupers and sailed for China. He opened in Canton and upon going to the theater the following morning found all of his belongings stolen. One member who was likewise victimized and somewhat discouraged with affairs in general, thought it expedient to do away with himself and forthwith blew out his brains. The company was eventually resuscitated in Hongkong and McCready traveled on to Shanghai, just in time to join in that merry frolic known to history as the Boxer Uprising.

When the Boxer trouble was finally solved McCready assumed the position of boarding officer of the Chinese Imperial Maritime Customs for the Port of Shanghai. Later he was transferred to Hankow in the interior where he was appointed chief of police. He was filling this role when the Russo-Japanese holocaust burst. Inasmuch as he had some friends in the Russian service and as he was itching for more battle he joined the bewhiskered legions and served with distinction. He was only captured twice and the last time his captors evidently became serious for they were discussing something about "shot" and "sunrise." This did not smack of fraternity to the genial Irishman so he immediately beat it and stowing away on a coal tramp waved an adventurous adieu to the Orient.

Just as Father Time put out the 1907 sign McCready arrived in New York and forthwith placed himself in the employ of William Fox, noted producer of flickering drama. From there he continued to follow the celluloid trail and saw service with Pathe, Edison, Majestic-Reliance, Famous Players Film and the North American. His return to the legitimate for a brief spell was under the management of William A. Brady in "The Whip," a Drury Lane melodrama. He was in this play three seasons including tour, when he came to Los Angeles. Noting the great film activity in Los Angeles he resolved to return upon the expiration of his stage contract and again take up the threads of his motion picture labors. He returned just as D. W. Griffith commenced "Intolerance" and as the Griffith studio found his old-time friend George Seigmann as chief aide. He was immediately engaged.

For four years McCready was on the Griffith lot playing odd character bits, finally leaving to play the character lead in "The Spirit of '76." Upon completing that work he rejoined Seigmann, who was now directing "The American Beauty." Since that time this adventurous son of the Green Sod has been free-lancing in the realm of the shadow stage and has appeared under approximately 97 per cent of the directors in the profession. Some of his roles were: the banker in Cecil B. DeMille's "The Cheat," as John Rolfe in George Melford's "To Have and to Hold," in five Joseph Henaberry pictures, in twelve films with William Duncan, four pictures for the Haworth company, two for King Vidor, two for Ted Sloman and so on.

In all his colorful career McCready has never pretended. As he says, "I'm just an extra man and I've only played extra parts for the greater portion." He makes no insincere flair for greatness or big-time recognition, yet it is doubtful if anyone else in pictures has had Arabian Night experiences akin to his. McCready is genuine and his sincerity is adequately reflected in his novelette, a pen-and-ink farce of the trials and tribulations of an extra man. you can't afford to miss it! Start it next week in "Camera!". It packs a big punch, brother!

LANGDON ESTABLISHED ATTRACTION FOR SENNETT; VAUDEVILLE FANS AWAIT HIS PRODUCTION

Great Exploitation Unncessary for Farce Exponent; Gained Fame on Big-Time Circuits

The usual procedure in "putting over" a new face on the screen is an expenditure of much money in advertising and publicity by the producer sponsoring the new player. From the time he is signed up until the moment of his first appearance on the screen, he is publicised to the limit—this to create an audience for his pictures.

Harry Langdon proves an exception to this rule. He comes to the screen with a ready-made audience, composed of the countless people that have watched with glee his comic antics on the vaudeville stage. Two of his biggest successes were "Johny's New Car" and "Golf," in which his singular get-up and "toneless" voice made him one of the most popular comedians of the day.

Since signing with Mack Sennett for a series of two-reel comedies, Langdon has received many letters from his admirers, congratulating him upon his decision to go into pictures. One letter from a small town in New Hampshire, states, "I am sure glad you are going into moving pictures for now we can see you every week or so, instead of once a year which is all anything good hits this burg!"

This seems to express the sentiment of all his admirers, and Harry Langdon comes to the screen, not—like other newcomers, with a mixture of hope and apprehension—but with a feeling of confidence that all his old friends are waiting to greet him warmly.

So far Harry Langdon has made two comedies for Mack Sennett that entirely fulfill the expectations of his fans, "Picking Peaches" with the Sennett Bathing Girls, and "Shanghaied Lovers." "Flickering Youth," just completed, promises to prove the old saw that "the third time tells the tale."

Morrison N. Y., Club May Close

Although a very conservative man in most things, James Morrison is guilty of maintaining at least one unusual luxury, it has just been revealed.

The popular leading man maintains an exclusive apartment at No. 327 West 56th street, New York, which he occupies but about two or three months out of each year. The balance of the time the apartment has been available to any of Morrison's friends or associates who chance to be visiting in the metropolis.

Morrison has maintained his Gotham home for the past four years, but is now seriously contemplating giving it up because of the constantly increasing rentals in New York. Many of great and near great of Hollywood's picture colony have enjoyed Morrison's "open house" at one time or another during their visits to the Atlantic coast and a register maintained at the apartmen reveals that at least sixty persons have enjoyed is shelter during the four years "Jimmie" has had it under a lease.

It was Sunday morning, and many of the cinema's horny-handed sons of toil were taking their customary extra hours of slumber at the Christie, Hollywood's elite hostelry, when from the windows of a fourth floor room came the melodious notes of "Traviata," in high tenor; the voice boyish, soulful, full of pathos, raspings and sour notes. Naldo Morelli, in his native Italian tongue, was welcoming the new day with his favorite aria. A voice, a positively rude voice, strident and belligerent, broke in upon Morelli's inspired strains.

"Hey!" bellowed the p. r. v., "If it's fihs you're trying to sell, wait until Friday!"

Deep silence.

Minus Telephone: Loses Big Part

Blame the telephone company for the loss of a splendid role in Cecil B. DeMille's current picture titled "Triumph," with Otto Matiesen the loser.

When Matiesen recently moved to a new address, he was assured by the telephone company that his phone would follow shortly. That was two months ago and Matiesen is still without the instrument.

Meanwhile, DeMille's assistant director, at the request of the producer, spent two days persistently trying to get Matiesen for an imporant role in "Triumph." A telephone would have assured Matiesen of the part, according to both the assistant director and the actor.

Victor Potel, clever character comedian, who recently returned from New York will continue his screen work with a featured role in a forthcoming Hollywood comedy. Mr. Potel has been responsible for an unusually long line of consistenly amusing screen characterizations accomplished over a period of twelve years.

"UNSHINE" PROFFERS SWEETS TO PETITE ROACH STAR; IS COMPLETELY INFATUATED

rie Mosquini Object of Dusky Thespian's ovemaking; Receives Box of Luscious Candy

Ernie Morrison, possibly better known as "Sunshine Sammy," one of Al Roach's 'lil rascals' of "Our Gang" fame is in love.

Ordinarily this announcement wouldn't mean a thing—it's being done every day—some of us get away with it and some of us do not but that angle has nothing to do with this story, because in this instance—Sunshine's, to be exact—it is simply a case of long-distance and respectful admiration for Will Rogers' new star, Marie Mosquini.

The plot of the story runs somewhat like this. When Ernie first beheld the diminutive Marie he rushed up to 'big brother' Robert McGowan, director of the "Our Gang" comedies, saying, "Ah wonder if you all would 'low me to give that beautiful lady a box of my father's candy—'cause he sure does make fine ones," and all the rest of the old stuff about "sweets to the sweet, etc.' '

Upon being assured by "Bob," who is in reality like a big brother as well as director to the whole clever gang which includes Mary Kornman, Ernie Morrison, Mickey Daniels, "Farina," Joe Frank Cobb and Jackie Condon that such a procedure would be K. O. Ernie hesitated (or "prolonged," as expert statistics are not available on this point) a huge box of his father's chocolates.

On bringing them to the studio a few days ago the old saying that "true love and busses of ancient vintage never running smooth, etc.," again proved itself because Miss Mosquini happened to be on location on that certain

Press Agents Will Meet February 12th

The memory of "Honest Abe" will be honored on Lincoln's Birthday, February 12, which will be celebrated by the "Wampas" with the first big open meeting since the recent Wampas Frolic and Ball in San Francisco. It will be held at the Piccadilly Tea Room in Hollywood.

day—then so did Ernie the next.

Ignoring the many proffered offers of aid Ernie stuck to the job and at the end of the third day his patience was rewarded—the presentation being made with Chesterfieldian courtesy and respect. Needless to say the gift was accepted by Miss Mosquini.

Helene Sighs For Sunny California

Eastern motion picture producers seem determined to keep Helene Chadwick in New York.

Shortly after her arrival there recently Miss Chadwick signed to play the lead in "The Masked Dancer" and the part of Lady Mary opposite Rudolph Valentino in "Monsieur Beaucaire."

In the past week Miss Chadwick has had two other offers from prominent New York producers which, if she accepts, will keep the popular star in Manhattan until the middle of next summer. Miss Chadwick has also been offered a leading part in a new Broadway play which she has turned down in favor of film work.

It is quite likely that Helene will not sign any further Eastern contracts other than the two she has already agreed to in that she is anxious to get back to her home in Los Angeles and resume work here. Like most Hollywood stars who visit New York, Miss Chadwick after a few weeks of theatre-going and visiting popular show places is now homesick for California and anxious to get away from the ice and snow as soon as possible.

Many tales have been told of the hardships endured by players in spectacular films during location trips and the great portion of the censure directed at those responsible is well deserved. The most recent production to be subjected to this talk is "The Sea Hawk" which Frank Lloyd has been filming at Catalina, using a multitude of folk for many days.

In the ranks of those who are more prone to accord praise, however, is Jesse L. Clay, who was employed in minor bits in this buccaneering tale. While working aboard the "Gallease," eighteen miles out at sea several weeks ago he was stricken with illness of a very serious nature, attributable to the exposure to sun, sea and wind because of the scanty attire his role in "The Sea Hawk" demanded. He was immediately rushed by Lloyd to patched to the Golden State Hospital here by Dr. Davis of the Lloyd forces. Mr. Lloyd had him placed under the care of Drs. French and Earls and specified that his every want should be cared for. By this time pneumonia had set in and Clay was confined to the hospital for almost a month. During this time he was frequently visited by Lloyd and members of the staff and cast and flowers were plentiful, to say the least. Among his visitors was James G. McFarland, Grand Exalted Ruler of the Elks, who was visiting here at that time from Minnesota. Many of the "Sea Hawk" company were B. P. O. E. members. Upon leaving his sickbed Clay was paid employees' indemnity and also received his salary straight through upon order of Lloyd.

Mr. Clay desires to take this opportunity to thank Mr. Lloyd and his other faithful friends for their interest and consideration. He is unstinted in his praise of their loyalty and through the medium of "Camera!" wishes to assure them that their kindness is duly appreciated, with hopes of due reciprocation at some time.

Prior to entering film work, Mr. Clay was on the legitimate stage for eleven years, the last five years with the world-famous W. C. Fields.

VON ELTZ AWAITS NEW FILM NOMENCLATURE; 'HEAVY' NOT CORRECT, HE CONTENDS

Believes Screen Villians More Polished Type; Wickednss Outgrowth of Definite Situations

Theodor von Eltz looks soon for a new nomenclature for the screen. Time, the all powerful, as it has brought this industry of picture making out of its much exploited infancy, has produced new types so that old terms no longer fit, this actor has found. Now Mr. von Eltz, according to the old phraesology is the "heavy" in Herbert Brenon's "The Breaking Point" for Paramount.

"Heavy," says von Eltz, "according to Mr. F. Sturgess Allen, A.B., L.L.B., means weighty, hefty, leaden, ponderous. In the old melodrama, the villian who held the mortgage, was weighty, ponderous and seemed hefty until the hero gave him a jolt. His watch chain was leaden and so were hearts when he came around. Mr. Allen, A.B., LLB., takes up the abstract qualities when he tells us that a villian is a blackguard, a miscreant, a slip halter, a nothing and a ruffian.

"Comprehensive as screen art is, I have never yet seen a villian who was both a nithing and a slip halter. The movie actor on or off the screen I am confident has never been either. So the physical and abstract qualities are misfits.

"The screen villian is usually slender, fair to look upon, polished, subtle, pleasant, a good mixer, good spender, but a nithing, he isn't, a slip halter-well not this year—while in this day when art is no longer obvious, a black guard and miscreant as synonyms become anacronisms.

PROMINENT THESPIANS ADDED TO D. W. GRIFFITH CAST; RECRUITED FROM EARTH'S ENDS

Lucille La Verne Figures Prominently in "America;" Wolheim of "Hairy Ape" Renown Also Represented Prominently

A number of prominent actors have just been added to the cast of D. W. Griffith's "America," the photodrama of the War of Independence which Griffith is making for the Daughters of the Revolution as their contribution to the country-wide sesquicentennial celebration of the freedom of this country.

When "America" has its world premiere at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, Feb. 21, theatre lovers will be pleased to find in addition to Carol Dempster, Neil Hamilton and Lionel Barrymore, a host of favorites in excellent roles, among them Lucille Le Verne, whose performance in "Sun Up" is one of the outstanding triumphs of the stage year. Other well known players in "America" are:

Louis Wolheim, college graduate, Mexican revolutionist and actor extraordinary, whose performance in "The Hairy Ape," is still vivid in the minds of all who saw it.

Riley Hatch, concert singer, artist and actor on both stage and screen, now playing in "The Nervous Wreck."

Arthur Donaldson, a musical comedy star of two continents, who, after achieving fame in Norway, Sweden and Denmark, created the title role in the original "Prince of Pilsen" company here.

Erville Alderson, attorney at law and actor, who founded an art theatre in Kansas City, Mo., and gave up the stage to enter the Griffith fold, where he has been seen in several productions.

Sydney Deane, another musical comedy star today is as well known to film fans as a few years ago he was to light opera patrons.

Edwin Holland, who played in "The Copperhead" with Lionel Barrymore, with Olga Nethersole, Richard Mansfield, and other stars too numerous to mention.

James Clarence Malaidy, another stage veteran of long experience.

Charles Bennett, who began his career with Edwin Booth, quit the boards to become a lawyer, and returned to portray an important role in "America."

OURNEUR ASKS AID OF FRANCE IN SCREENING TRUE FRENCH WOMAN; SCRIPT CONTEST

-operates with 'Le Journal' of Paris in Big cenario Meet; 170,000 Francs Are Offered aurice Tourneur, noted direc- tor has completed arrangements to pr nt to the world via the motion pic re screens of every country, the eal French woman of today.

he picturization is to be a m rn drama that must, in addi- tio to offering exceptional enter- tai nent, offset the general errone- ou conception among countries fo gn to France, of the French fe le, generally pictured as the ele nt, flighty woman encountered in he inferior establishments of the Montmart.

a most effective manner to ob n such a story, Mr. Tourneur ha conceived the idea of inviting the French nation to supply it by me s of a contest to be conducted in rance under the auspices of "L Journal," a leading Parisian ne spaper. Prizes and awards for ac pted stories involving the sum of 0,000 francs are to be awarded in his contest by Mr. Tourneur. T total amount covering the pri s was deposited yesterday with Lo s Sentous, French Consul in Lo Angeles.

ne judges have been appointed to ass on the stories submitted co rising leading representatives of arious arts and industries, as fo ws: Louis Sentous, French C ul, President of the Board of Ju es; L. Brunswig, Officer of the French Legion of Honor, L. J. Ch stopher, President of the Fr ch Colony in Los Angeles, M rice Tourneur, Maurice Fog, Di ctor of L'Union Nouvelle, Er e Chautard, French photoplay di tor, Georges Jomier, author, Pe Smith, motion picture adver- tis g manager and Francis Becker, bu ess manager.

he average French woman is a clever, happy companion, a devout wife, an admirable mother, and an excellent housekeeper," said Mr. Tourneur, in discussing his plan. "It has been my hope for some time, to bring about a better appreciation of the true French woman of today and this hope has been shared by many other Frenchmen. There is no greater agency to internationally accomplish this than the motion picture and so, with the assistance of my associates, I have arranged this plan for a national contest in France with the belief that a story will result, written by someone most familiar with the subject, that will give a better appreciation in this and other countries, of the French woman.

"The story will essentially offer exceptional entertainment. It must be a scenario that will be enjoyed and appreciated by the motion picture public of the world—but it must also carry the message that it is conceived to carry. History has made the French woman an international institution. As a nucleous for story material she is second to none. The motion picture can pay tribute as no other medium and it is my ambition to so honor the true French woman of today."

Clothes Will Help in Acting, Says Carl

Have dress clothes a good "stand in" with the scenario writer?

Carl Miller, who wore them for 21 hours the other day for scenes in "Once In a Blue Moon" in which he is playing a featured role opposite Marie Provost suspects they have. He has heard of no less than half a dozen male leads who are clad these days in the claw hammer.

How Mr. Miller has been foiling the villian, who knows something of his past life. He is doing it with poker face expression and much suavity.

"Dismissing any preference for the scenario writer who may like to see a man dress up, the psychology of clothes cannot be disregarded. A man will be more master of a situation when he knows his tailor has done well by him. Reasoning thus, he can hand a nicer wallop to an arch enemy when his figure is moulded into evening clothes," says Mr. Miller.

The actor doesn't' state how the other six are wearing theirs, but Miller himself has his fit like a glove!

Adeline M. Alvord, head of the Editorial Department of the United Producers and Distributtors, announces that she is not only continuing her service as authors' representative, placing stories with various motion picture companies, but she has expanded her business, adding more readers and critics to her staff.

For two years Esther Ralston played leads on the Universal lot opposite every male star from Joe Martin in comedies to Herbert Rawlinson in dramas and William Desmond in serials. Realizing the greater opportunities of the free-lance player, she terminated her contract and was engaged as Rose Maylie in "Oliver Twist," a role which called for a typically Dickensian saccharinity. Then came a really alive present-day debutante in Rupert Hughes' "Remembrance." This was followed by Lubitsch's "The Marriage Circle," wherein she seemed one hundred per cent iennese, an adroitly expert manchamber. Her delineation of Fraulein Hofer resembled the Northwestern Mounted Police: she never left any doubt in the minds of the spectators as to whether she'd get her man.

In her present engagement, Miss Ralston presents the crowning touch of versatility. She is playing a "heavy" in William Duncan's chapterplay, "The Free Trader," for Universal. She left this studio a leading woman—she returned to it an actress.

Col. W. F. Fleming, the "Kit" Carson of the show business, known all over the world for his characterization of the famous plainsman of the West's early days, has been cast for a character role in Jack Hoxie's new western feature, "Ridgeway of Montana," now in production at Universal City under the direction of Clifford Smith.

Incidentally, Fleming gave Hoxie his first job in the show game when the Universal film star was still a lanky cowboy on the Oklahoma range. Fleming was the proprietor of a wild west show which featured himself in the role of "Kit" Carson. Hoxie was employed as a trick rider and fancy roper in the troupe. At that time Hoxie had a national reputation as a rider and roper and had won a couple of championships at famous rodeos in the Southwest.

Death of Fleming's mother gave Hoxie his first chance at dramatic characterization. Fleming left the show in Jack's charge while he went to Texas for his mother's funeral. Hoxie not only managed the sho wbut played the role of "Kit" Carson during Fleming's absence. Hoxie followed the wild west show game for a couple of seasons and then got a job as a cowboy extra in pictures. Since that time he has become one of the most popular of the western stars.

Fleming has had many shows and has taken them many times around the world, but he says the day of the wild west show is over. It has made its bow to the western screen play.

This Seems to be Syd's Year

Good things come in threes, says an old adage which seems to be proven in the case of Sydney Chaplin. The instantaneous success this famous comedian has registered since his serious return to comedy acting was demonstrated in three pictures "The Rendezvous," "Her Temporary Husband" and "Galloping Fish," just completed.

News travels quickly in the film world and Syd Chaplin's triple success has brought him three distinct offers of stardom in as many foreign countries. First came the invitation from the Ideal Film Company, of England, for whom Wanda Hawley and Betty Compson have made pictures, to appear in their coming production of "Charley's Aunt," internationally popular stage farce. Second, the Mundus Film Company, of Paris, wants Syd to come over to France to star in a series of comedies. The third offer, just received this week, is from The Vita Film Industry, of Vienna, which now has Max Linder under contract, to come to Hungary as its premier star at the new studios to be opened in March.

Naturally, Syd's offers have brought him all the flattering emotions invariably evoked by such foreign engagements—and each of these offers carries alluring salaries and other perquisites. At the same time, however, he is considering two important contracts offered him by American film producers. Within a short time, he must make his decision and then we shall know whether he will stay on here or go abroad.

Alright, Boys, Rack Your Brains!

Rosemary Cooper, who recently completed her featured role in Emory Johnson's production of "Swords and Ploughshares," is in a quandary. She wants a name for her dog. It is a cross between an Irish terrier and an Airedale, with all the virtues of both of these strains and but one vice—it is passionately fond of corned-beef! Miss Cooper's friends have suggested that she call the dog "Dinty Moore," but the consideration of sex, which is supposed to be Hollywood's chief pastime, unfortunately prevents the adoption of this name.

To the person who gives Miss Cooper the best name for her dog, she has promised the reward of a lucious corned-beef sandwich, accompanied by a glass of real beer, "alcoholic content less than one-half of one percent by volume."

The name of Delbert E. Davenport bids fair to be much rumored in the minds of movie fans for the next few months and possibly years because of the fact that he has devised a new screen technique which many say promises to revolutionize the whole cinema art. Mr. Davenport has just completed the first feature picture to be made under the rules of his new methods and it is said to be a veritable revelation.

You missed your guess that time! This is not a talking doll from Ye Toy Shoppe; it is five-year-old Virginia Davis, one of our new kiddie exponents of silent drama, in a very real imitation of one, however.

Virginia is making a series of twelve one-reel cartoon pictures for Walt Disney, local cartoonist and short-subject producer, at his studio at 4651 Kingswell Avenue. She is now at work on the third. One picture will be made each month. In these productions Disney combines flesh-and-blood players with thespians from Cartoonland. Between three and four thousand drawings are required for each film, in addition to the regular negative.

Prior to her advent in the Hollywood motion picture colony Miss Davis was one of the principal players for a big film advertising company in Kansas City with which Disney was also associated when in the east.

Madeline Outlines Attributes of Pearl

Pearls, to some people mean tears, but to Madeleine Hurlock, beautiful Mack Sennett screen siren, they are the only precious stones which appeal to her. "I always wear pearls in preference to any other jewelry," said Miss Hurlock, "probably because I am not superstitious in the first place, and secondly, to me they represent something sympathetically innocent and delicate, and I do not spend half of my time eating oysters in the hope that I may some day find one of the valuable little stones hidden inside a shell."

Beautiful, she was, and the man who passed through an office where she was seated looking at some pictures of Cullen Landis, most attractive in the southern costumes he wears in "Magnolia," the Paramount production just completed, was decidedly intrigued. In an outer room he heard her explaining shamelessly:

"Isn't Cullen adorable! Did you ever see anyone look more adorable than Cullen!"

All these raptures were to Mr. Landis' secretary. Finally the girl left and the man came to the secretary with a long face.

"She looked mighty adorable to me, but a nice show I have," he said and then added:

"Well, break the news. Who is she?"

"Oh she! Why she's Cullen's sister, Margaret Landis," laughed the secretary.

Conway Believes In Film Voic

The voice is important in mot picture acting after all, acco ing to Conway Tearle, popular star to be co-featured with Barb LaMarr in Maurice Tourneu "The White Moth," for First tional.

Says Mr. Tearle: "It's true t the voice can't be heard on screen, but it isn't too much to that it can be seen. I mean t the vibrations of the voice aff the playing of a motion pict performer to a far greater ext than most people dream.

"In the first place, screen act isn't pantomine. It follows clos the technique of the speaking sta and it is silly to suppose that could follow that technique, ev with the variations demanded the cameras, and abandon the m potent force an actor possesses the voice.

"I have played opposite vario stars and I have noticed in alm every case that those stars w know how to use their vocal chor in enacting their roles drew t most from their cast. All play a ing demands a certain sincer and a certain assumption on t part of the audience and spectato that something fictional is som thing true. Well, do you thi that it is possible for motion pi ture performers and their directo to enter spiritedly into acting whi is manifestly unreal, or rather u convincing, since we who are b fore the camera hear what is b ing said?

"MOVIE MONEY"

By JACK McCREADY

actus and mesquite and chaparro—sombrero and serape—Gringo and Greaser—revolution and banditry—long stretches of mesa and scorched hillsides—wine-like air and cloudless skies—the multi-hued glimmer of white stars on a velvet night panoply—a baby bed of sifting sand.

Silver City, New Mexico, is the birth of origin of King Gates, tiny film player and able contestant at the Cinema gaming table. He hails from that wind-swept country to the east that has figured so prominently in the southwestern development of our country. Silver City—suggestive of a prospector's imagined El Dorado, the terminus of the quest for terra firma fortune—of railroad millions—of stubborn abuse and equally stubborn cowpuncher—of conflict between two nations.

Yet from these desolate and barren wastes has come a youngster who has pitched camp in the midst of Filmdom and hurled defies at the usual obstacles in the path to motion picture success. King Gates is the exponent of manly Kidhood (if we may so crudely refer to the most delightful period of a young man's existence) and he acknowledges no superior. One can almost see a "By golly, I'll FIGHT!" in the firm, determined set of his mouth. The eyes are quizzical, decidedly so. There is an unusually mature strain in the Irish make-up. He has an air of bravado that he has no doubt inherited from the turbulent surroundings of his New Mexico; an indefinable mental position of self-defense. He has come to conquer Hollywood—Hollywood will not conquer him, that is certain!

King is five years old; he has understanding beyond the usual units of sixty-odd months. He spells. He reads. He writes. He sings and he recites ably. A diminutive exponent of the soft-shoe dance is he. He takes himself seriously but not too much so. As we have said he is essentially a fighter. But there is a great deal of charm to his gladiator attitude, one is almost tempted to pick him up and throw him around like a rubber ball at times. He has a very disarming smile; it's broad and infectious. It jumps around his face like a grasshopper leaping from one grass blade to another. It breaks out here and there helter-skelter. He knows his stuff, King does. He ought to be a mighty popular young actor.

Upon arriving in Los Angeles a short time ago he was selected for several prologues at local theaters, including appearances on the stage at Loew's State and at the Philharmonic Auditorium. This prologue business was only a prologue for his film work, however, for not long after he plunged zestfully into the business of putting the move into movies. His 1923 count was fourteen pictures. Some of them only gave him a breath of space, but they were pictures and it's all in the game, these "breaking-in" roles. There was "Hollywood" and "Crooked Alley" and "The Extra Man," Hoot Gibson's burlesque. Not to forget "You Can't Get Away With It" and others too lengthy to enumerate. Ambitious effort went into each par. Sincerity and sick-to-it-iveness was abundant. King was slowly but surely progressing.

"I've just begun to act" is his paraphrase of Perry's challenge. And like the British on Lake Erie, Filmdom will capitulate; to the personality barrage of this youngster. He fights. King Gates has lots of pep and spunk. He'll get there, alright.

Films Hailed as Unities Resurrector

Charles Kenyon, the eminent playwright and screen author, who is now adapting "The Mark of Cain" for John Gilbert, Fox star, points out the resurrection by the films of the dramatic unities. These restrictive laws of time, place and action, were first evolved by the Greek dramatists, and actuated all writing for the stage, until centuries later, when William Shakespeare, and the other Elizabethan dramatists, made literary history by disregarding them entirely. When motion pictures first came into being, the greatest field they provided to authors was the ease with which the unities could be disregarded, and as a consequence, pictures jumped here and there without limit.

"We realize today," says Kenyon, "that the best picture is one which develops its story smoothly, using fades or titles to indicate lapse of time, which keeps its locations close together, and which knits its action into a singly developed dramatic episode. I dare say that every reader in the offices of the great motion picture companies, avoids the episodic tale, and searches untiringly for stories that are closely knit. All hail the Greek unities! They have been resurrected by the motion picture!"

Autographs on Eat Shop Menu

Tourists visiting Los Angeles and who fail to get past studio gatemen have discovered a new way of getting close-up of prominent stars in the flesh.

Madame Helen's restaurant adjoining the United Studios on Melrose Avenue, is the newest and most popular eating place of cinema celebrities. It has not taken long for the public to discover this fact with the result that noon and dinner hour finds the popular stars autographing photographs between courses.

Among the screen celebrities who may be found rubbing elbows with their admirers at Madame Helen's are Conway Tearle, Estelle Taylor, Pat O'Malley, Blanche Sweet, Maurice Tourneur, Barbara La Marr, Celleen Moore,, Milton Sills, Enid Bennett, Richard Walton Tully, Owen Moore, Bessie Love, Lew Cody and many others not forgetting "Strongheart," hero of dogdom.

Orville Caldwell, now on his third week as male lead in "The Miracle" presented by Max Reinhardt under the direction of Morris Gest to Broadway, has arduous rehearsals behind him in this production whose magnitude is difficult to grasp. There is a cast of 700 and according to a recent letter from the Hollywood actor, the weekly pay check alone to actors is $34,000. Seats on the opening night sold for $16.50, with gross receipts on the first night of $20,000. Apparently there is no abatement in the sensation the production has caused, for the demand for seats has sold out the house for February and the first week of March.

"Stoneman" Nets Notes for Ralph

Ralph Lewis has received more fan letters in regard to his role of Stoneman in "The Birth of a Nation" than any other character he ever played. He is still receiving them from Arabia, Japan and other eastern countries.

While hair dressers have been encouraging women in an effort to perfect new styles of "bobs" for temperamental flappers, a most unique and attractive effect has been accidently obtained by Anna Q. Nilsson, who has just completed work on Richard Walton Tully's "Flowing Gold." Just shingle your hair and allow it to grow into a pretty, tousled tangle of equal lenght, and look like Anna Q.

It will be remembered that Anna suffered the barber's shears to ship her former golden tresses preparatory to her work in "Ponjola," where she most ably portrayed the role of Desmond, the boy. She has since allowed her tresses to grow, without rhyme or reason, with the result that her hair is now a mass of pretty ringlets about four inches in length, giving her pretty face a most captivating, Gypsy-like appearance. Try it.

Kenyon Outlines Author's Don'ts

Albert G. Kenyon, well-known scenarist, who recently finished his adaption of "The Monster" for Roland West, has formulated three interesting DON'TS for aspiring film authors:

"DON'T try to write screen stories at all unless the urge within you is so strong that you are prepared to starve, steal, dishonor your parents, and break all the other eight commandments for the simple satisfaction of seeing the child of your brain depicted upon the silver sheet before your eyes. Having committed all these sins, and having at last reached your goal—

"DON'T expect to recognize the infant when you do see it. You may be its Mother, or its Father, or both, but it will bear no family resemblance to either parent. Be forewarned!

"DON'T fall for the bunk that all you have to do is to submit an idea to be the recipient of a check for some fabulous amount. It's the new treatment of the same old idea that brings home the bacon to an author. There is nothing really new under the sun but there are a lot of things we don't know about yet, or haven't tried."

Auld Lang Syne

Charles Rankin brought many new ideas into the production of pictures, and put into vogue numerous systems of accounting and methods of operation which stand today as a monument to his ability and foresight. He held the strenuous position of Production Manager at Universal in the hectic days when forty-four separate units were operating on that lot. Producer of several successful independent features. Now head of the firm of Rankin and Ripley, Realtors.

[What Filmdom is Striving For]

By Fred W. Fox

Retrospection of the great ideals and achievements of Woodrow Wilson have been highly intensified with the news of his illness and subsequent death claiming the limelight the past few days. He has been eulogized on every hand as a man of brilliant principles and the predominant factor in an effort to thoroughly solidify the nations of the world into one brotherhood through the medium of his far-famed and ill-fated League of Nations. Yet the work of the twenty-eighth president of the United States has also been accorded rather childish surveys at the hands of our more sensational and gushy news purveyors who were probably his bitterest opponents during his career.

It is not for any of us to eulogize Woodrow Wilson. Like Lincoln he belongs to the ages. We are too close to the span of his mortal existence to fully understand the honesty of his ideals and the momentousness of his work. America and the world fifty or a hundred years hence will understand, for he spoke in language far beyond our present comprehension. He sought Idealism in a world that is not ready for Idealism, a world that is still pregnant with strife and conflict. To the public-at-large of our present generation Wilson will be remembered as a man with a great idea that was smothered by powerful opposition. Wilson intended the League of Nations as a body to initiate a war-torn world in the blessedness of fraternal intercourse and harmony and he was defeated by clever propaganda issued by selfish political interests. The League of Nations was not perfect in plan but it was something for the world to think about. It should not have been totally abandoned.

* * * * *

Woodrow Wilson was essentially a man of unusual intellectual capacities. He was more the educator and student than politician. As head of Princeton University he was a force in moulding the thoughts and ideals of hundreds of young men, equipping them to play their roles in life with dexterity and completeness. But the pre-eminent quality of Wilson as seen from the angle of the motion picture industry was the fact he enjoyed good entertainment. He was a frequent visitor at film a vaudeville theaters. He was of serious mien at m times but he knew the value of worth-while amuseme and it is significant that he turned to the cinema for great portion of this recreation. We may even ventu to say that the Idealist found exceptional artistry in t motion picture and the fact that a man of his mental ca ber should thus recognize the innate worth of the moti picture is indeed deserving of recognition. It belies t sincerity of the statements of others of lesser status w have been so free in their condemnation of the profe sion, its standards and its people. If the motion pictu was big enough and wide enough in its scope to plea Woodrow Wilson, the Idealist, Warren G. Harding, t Democrat, and Theodore Roosevelt, the Soldier a Statesman, it is certainly of sufficient magnitude that can laugh at those who are continually harping on i few inferiorities. These men accepted Filmdom and i work for what it represented in itself and they were t concerned with deriving entertainment from it to sit do and pick out the flaws and knock. Just as the Leag of Nations was the prologue to a bigger idea and had i imperfections, the motion picture today is but the pr logue, imperfect in many respects, to a greater motio picture. It is the idea that counts.

* * * * *

It is sad but true that the time has not yet arrive when the motion picture, the pulpit, the press and th other constructive forces of our country can work in a cord to further the highest ideals of life. Yet the motio picture has progressed in this respect; it does not pand to the sensational and debasing. It does not climb u on the hilltops and bawl and rant about the inexcusabl faults of the pulpit and press. It is certainly alone in thi It is a regrettable state of affairs when publishers of influ ential public organs must stoop and throw dirt in orde to "increase their circulation." They are not men o vision; else they could easily see where the fickleness o the public will eventually cause it to tire of the continua scandalous publicizing of the personal affairs of the fol

The Quest of Idealism

Filmdom and subsequently drop their vaunted ilations to Lilliputian proportions. It is even more ettable when ordained ministers of the Gospel, of lk of the infamous Bob Shuler, must resort to sensaal subjects in order to fill their churches. It belies drawing power of the pulpit and the sincerity of the logical teachers. By these signs we are led to the lusion they fear the strength of the cinema and its lung popular appeal. And, my friends, that is not rom right! It therefore behooves us to devote our hts and energies to lead the motion picture to even ter heights.

has been said that "the public press, even as the ic office, is a public trust." In maintaining those dards and fulfilling that tradition the bulk of Ameri- newspapers have failed. They have sacrificed the h to the Shinto and Buddha of the publisher's realm e great god Circulation. And it is enthroned on a bly shrine. The "reform" heretics have defiled the tity of the Church. They have wandered from the ne admonition to "go out unto all creation and ad the Gospel," and have substituted for their sacrites a passionate worshipping of—Publicity. They e forsaken Religion for Politics and "Reform" and ous egotistical discourses as topics for Sunday delibion.

Will it come to pass that the motion picture will find ecessary to spread News, that is the Truth, and Reon, through its celluloid channels, too? Or will the s and pulpit eventually function normally again and more be vested with the faith and respect of the lic? All three are avid in their quest of Idealism, but have chosen wayward paths that can never lead aright. The motion picture industry has created Frank lin Booth air castles oftimes, 'tis true, and it has been erroneously publicized, to a great extent, through its own distorted ideas of advertising that held sway in the early days of the business . Circus press-agentry was never intended for the cinema; it is an Art. But the other two have not been cognizant of the refinement that has come to motion pictures in the last decade. They are sadly behind the times.

* * * * *

Woodrow Wilson sought to perpetuate Idealism. His quest was futile to some extent, for as we previously said, he was ahead of the times. But his effort, the League of Nations, was an idea for the attainment of the ideal of universal fraternity. The unreal aura of romance surrounding Filmdom must be done away with. In our quest of Idealism we must not lose our heads in the clouds. For after all is said and done we are dealing with human thought and human beings, and our ideals should be practically consistent with the trend of human understanding. Some of Filmdom is away ahead of the times; the rest is modernly mediocre. We must find the balance. Our quest of Idealism, incorporating Art and Entertainment, Education and Invention, must not fail. Motion pictures need a man like Woodrow Wilson to define our ideals to the public, a man like Warren G. Harding to give them everyday explanation, and a man like Theodore Roosevelt to give us real action. Such a triumvirate is bound to triumph. But first, last and always let us keep faith with our ideals. It is not necessary for us to sacrifice them to false gods. Our quest is along the right road, but we must keep step with Father Time—and human comprehension.

When one, at the tender age of six, successfully masters one of the finer arts, it is considered rather extraordinary.

Suppose then, if you were a little child, you could boast of five victories over difficult accomplishments? Wouldn't you be proud?

Little Elizabeth Ann Keever, one of the many tots now gracing the silver sheet, is equally efficient in screen artistry, eccentric dancing, elecution, singing and at the piano.

Her first opportunity to emote before the clicking camera came when the late William Desmond Taylor discovered her in the act of interpreting a difficult buck and wing number. To be able to sustain natural appearance while executing this dance is of course hard, and the eminent director immediately saw the possibilities in her if given the proper chance on the screen. Consequently, Taylor signed her for a part in his Lasky production, "The Soul of Youth."

Her work in this production, although unimportant, won comment at the pre-release showing and Elizabeth Ann was given a bigger and more important role, this time in E. Mason Hopper's production then being filmed at the Goldwyn Studios. Since then she has enacted scores of important parts, each one bringing fresh laurels.

Her musical career started when she was able to span an octave on the piano and immediately afterward it was discovered that the child possessed a remarkable voice. Both piano lessons and voice culture played a big part in her earlier youth.

Never once has Elizabeth Ann neglected any one of her accomplishments. Her piano, elecution, dancing and singing—they all are cared for—but her screen work is often given the preference.

Not Just Jean

By ANDRE THIBAULT

"May I always be in character! May I never be just Jean Riley on the screen. That's the daily prayer of petite Jean Riley, leading woman in many independent productions.

"The screen has enough players who depend upon their personality or their beauty to carry them through," declares Miss Riley. "We all know players who are always just themselves rather than the character they are portraying on the screen."

"I want to avoid that. I want to have as many personalities as there are roles for me to play. I never want people to say: 'Wasn't Jean Riley cute in such and such a picture?' but I do want to say, 'The character that Jean Riley portrayed really lived.' That's my idea of what an actress should be able to do—always be in character regardless of ones own personality. I don't care whether I make them feel or not. I want the public to feel what the character felt—perhaps what I felt in portraying the character. If the character was happy I want to be the medium of making the spectator just as happy as the character was."

"That's my ambition," concluded Miss Riley. "It's a rather big one perhaps, but I am going to do my best to gratify it."

As a child, very studious and serious-minded, Jean Riley, first sprang into public notice in 1917, by passing the regular state teacher's examination when only fifteen years of age, being the youngest student in America to pass that examination. The following year she entered the University of Chicago where she contemplated preparation for a journalistic career. A few months later the Chicago Tribune conducted a beauty contest, and one of the boys at the University entered Jean Riley's picture without her knowledge, and the close of the contest found Jean the winner of first place over fifteen thousand other beautiful girls.

Jean Riley was just an untravelled school girl and unlike the average girl at sixteen, it had never even occured to her that she was pretty, until after her victory in the beauty contest, when she became so inoculated with the movie-fever that without reluctance she ran away from school to join a vaudeville troup working it's way west from Chicago. The show disbanded somewhere in Kansas and Jean took her small savings and bought a ticket to California and the movies.

Shortly after her arrival in Hollywood Miss Riley participated in another beauty contest—this one being held by the Los Angeles Express. During the course of the contest Sid Grauman the big exhibitor, became attracted by the bevy of beautiful girls whose pictures appeared in the paper and whom did he single out as his favorite but little eJan Riley. Believing her to be a diamond in the rough, Mr. Grauman not only gave her a boost which helped her win in the contest, but also created a prologue featuring her at his Million Dollar Theatre with twenty other beauties from the contest. This attracted the attention of a now prominent director, who at that time was producing comedies at the old Metro studio on Gordon Street. He immediately placed her under contract for ingenue parts in his comedies.

Later she appeared in a Lois Weber picture entitled "What Do Men Want;" in two pictures for Metro, with May Allison and Bert Lytell respectively, also with Monroe Salisbury at Universal, while he was at the height of his popularity.

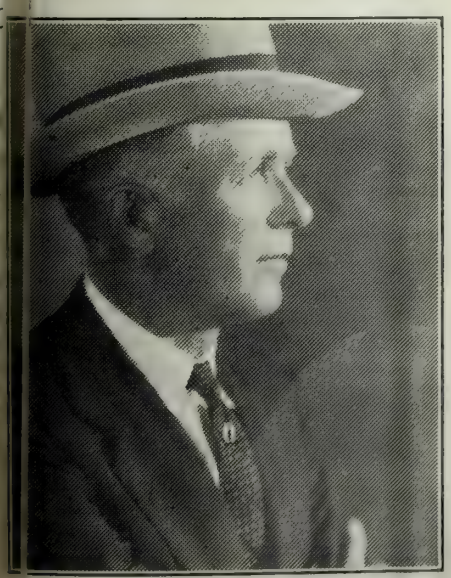
Since that time Miss Riley has devoted her attention to independent productions in which she has played leads and feature roles. In 1922 she was featured by Schwartz Productions at the Astra Studio in Glendale in a series of five-reelers under the direction of Fred Caldwell.

Last year Miss Riley organized her own company and produced a series of comedies featuring herself. These pictures are now running throughout the country on a state-right basis. While in the field Miss Riley was distinguished as being the youngest producer of motion pictures in the world.

Jean Riley has just finished a contract with Bob Horner Productions and negotiations are pending for a starring contract with one of the foremost independent producers; announcement of which will be made later.

Phonofilms

By JAMES M. FIDLER



"For a period covering three years, the motion picture industry as a whole is facing the most serious issues it has been called upon to meet since the first early struggle for a foothold as an entertainment," George Melford told me this week. We were sitting in his offices at the Famous Players-Lasky studio

"Aside from the general reduction of costs, elimination of wastes, perfection of methods, improvement of facilities and other numerous things that are to be done and with which most of those acquainted with the business are familiar, the matter of talking motion pictures is going to cause considerable stir before three more years have passed," Melford declared.

I asked him if he thought talking motion pictures would really prove practical.

"Practical?" exclaimed the producer. "I should say they will. There are many skeptical people who are of the opinion that they are an hallucination of wildly inventive brains—but I can remember the days when the world scoffed at moving pictures. I firmly believe the time is not far distant when talking motion pictures or, as they have been called, 'Phonofilms' or 'phonophotos,' will completely replace our modern silent drama."

"Just how will these 'conversational movies' cause such an upheaval with the industry, Mr. Melford?" I inquired. "Why won't they be taken into the business very slowly and gradually, like color films?"

"Because color films have not affected the business of producing pictures to any great extent," Mr. Melford returned. "Coloring films is a process of the laboratory or of scientific photography. The actors, the sets, the stories, have not be affected.

"But with the coming of talking motion pictures, the entire productive field of the film industry will be changed. Scenario writers will have to be as well versed in stage playwriting as they are in screen adapting, for they must write their conversation into their stories just as the stage play is written.

"There are numerous widely popular stars on the screen today who must go. They will lose their popularity because they have bad voices. When talking movies become practical, the voice of the actor will be all important. Therefore, many present day stars whose voices are weak or uncultivated will disappear suddenly. I predict that the arrival of phonofilms will see the establishment of schools of voice culture, with movie stars as pupils.

"The stories themselves will be effected. For example, operas can be and will be produced. It has been tried in the silent movies, but with little success. After all, operas are written for the musical voice. The coming of talking motion pictures will make it possible for the voices and songs to be heard via the film."

Again I interposed a question

"You suggest, Mr. Melford, that many

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

The Rinella Productions, of which William Matthews is president, has gotten under way promptly according to schedule on their first picture. The cast and staff left for Monterey on Monday morning, where it is planned to shoot exteriors for two weeks, following which the studio work will be done at the Gerson Studios on Page Street. The filming of "Stickey Ropes," already announced, has been postponed till a slightly later date, and the first picture will be a story of the finishing fleet, as yet untitled, from the pen of Tom Gibson, who also will direct. George Crocker will be at the camera, and Jay Morley plays the leading role, supported by a capable cast recruited from Hollywood, with Everett Hill and several other local actors in addition.

Phil Rosen arrived in San Francisco last Thursday from New York, where he had been a-tending the world's premier presentation of the "Dramatic Life of Abrama Lincoln," made under his direction for the Rockett Brothers. Mr. Rosen had been signed several weeks ago by Max Graf, production head of the Graf Films, as director on their next big picture "The Wise Son" a screen version of Charles Shenmann's best seller of the same name. After a day or two here in conference, Rosen and Max Graf motored to Los Angeles on Sunday, to sign their all star cast, and complete final arrangements for the filming of the picture. Actual production will begin at the Pacific Studios at San Mateo the later part of this month.

Emory Johnston, with his company and staff left for the South on Sunday, after a week spent here getting some really wonderful airplane and military stuff for his next picture. Most of the scenes were shot at the Presideo, of Uncle Sam's own men and the army airplanes in action, but one evening's work was done in the lobby at the Manx Hotel.

Gerdon Michie and his wife, Grace Sanderson Michie, active heads of the Rellimeo Films of this city arrived from New York, where they have been making releasing arrangements for the company's last two pictures, on Wednesday. On Sunday evening they departed for Hollywood, where work will be begun almost at once on the organization's next picture "The Bowery Bishop," which has been gotten into continuity form during their absence by Colin Campbell, who will direct. The latest picture made by the company, filmed under the title of "The Yellow Stigma" but now retitled "Pagan Passions" will be released by Selznick on March first.

Andre Ferrier and his company of French players at La Gaite Francaise have added one more delightful play to their list of this season's productions, when they gave "Blanchette" for the first time a week ago. "Blanchette" is one of Briex's sparkling and clever comedies, and Ferrier's typical French company are giving it a production worthy of its great author. As usual at the little theatre the cosumes and sage effects would put to shame in their charm and artistic effects may of the largest theatres of the city.

"Lightnin" moved on Monday from the Columbia to the Tivoli Theatre, as the formed theatre was under contract for the opening there on Monday evening of May Robson in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Marry," her Broadway hit of many years ago. And "Lightnin" has proved so popular that it was decided best to start it on the second edition of its long San Francisco run with no time limit set for its stay in is present home.

David Shuman, Western representative of the Karl Anderson Pictures Corp. and Spencer Valentine of the Theatre Owners of America, spending a week here and signing releasing contracts with at least two local organizations, left for the South on Friday.

Bull Montana, made personal appearances in a little skit at the Wigwam Theatre four days last week, where he met with a most cordial reception. Having completed his short engagement he motored to Santa Cruz the latter part of the week for a few day's stay.

The San Francisco Photoplays, Inc., having completed releasing arrangements with a big organization, will begin production at a very early date. George S. Romanovsky, Russian Counsul, who is one of the heads of the new ganization says that he feels that San Franc should have great picture making possibili and that it is the aim of the company to put this city in the front of the picture ma world. The aim of the organization is no make in any sense advertising or commer pictures of San Francisco, but to produc series of big feature pictures from stories modern authors, using for a background beauties of this city's hills, ocean front, and varied scenery of the Bay district. Th will be recruited from Hollywood's best kn with the smaller parts played by local ac and actresses.

J. S. Joffre, President of the Northern C fornia Photoplayers, Inc., returned to San F cisco a week ago on the Pacific Mail Stea "Newport" from a rather ill-fated picture ing expedition to the wilds of South Amer The party left for Colombia, December 1922, and from the first were beset with h ships, sent out with insufficient capital supplies; internal dissension promptly broke Jerry Bolton, director and original head of expedition was stabbed.

Six men in the party died of fevers and s bites, and the other sixteen at last deserted. fre brought back with him some fifteen thous feet of film of South American wild anim the head-hunting tribes of the interior, which he plans to exhibit as soon as it ca put into shape. The corporation here has b in financial distress for some time and Harry Harvey, its executive head, vanished from to and the officers in the Phelan Building c closed several months ago, so Jofire has an vestigation awaiting him on the part of stockholders most of whom are disgruntled.

The El Dorado Productions finished t first comedy, "Bumpers," on Saturday, and gan the second of the series on Monday. W is still going on at Santa Rosa, and this sec film will probably be titled "Rural Rou bouts," Earl Olin, well-known comedy direc is at the megaphone, with Troy Brown beh the camera. R. E. Sibley is art director w Wm. Robotham handing the technical end Danny Rogers as chief electrician. Besides feature player, Frank Alexander, the cast cludes Martha Bayes, Al. Thompson, W Dennis, "Wild Bill" Hauber and others.

PUBLIC OPINION

Editor,
"Camera,"
Hollywood, Calif.

Dear Sir:

Slightly less than one year ago, a certain allied ambassador of God, who counted that day lost whose setting sun saw not his name in print, made the unqualified declaration, "The movies are sending us all to hell." This public pirate, knew his assertion would carry considerable weight for he was the leader of one of the largest and most influential church congregations in the country. And yet he did not hesitate to voice such an assinine statement.

At the time I took occasion to, "get off my chest," a tirade in which I intimated the church was not without sin. But the publisher of, "Movie Weekly, apparently fearing accusations of atheistic inclinations, declined to publish my piece. At that time I ventured the declaration, "The devil does not park his horns and tail when he enters the church." I now reiterate that I will add that the mythical fiend does not leave behind his characteristics appendages when he enters the theatre, either. But theatres are not supposed to be without blemishes of sin, like the church is.

Now it appears others who share the "Hell-bent-on-movie-skids, view, have unlimbered their hot air guns. And they are "telling the world," all about the follies of Hollywood. But the vacuum in empty heads must be concealed by the barrage of sense-maunderings from a pliant tongue. And "Be it ever so sinful there is no place like home."

Parading our streets, peering in our windows, looking under our beds and examining our ears; are the members of the Mouth Almighty tribe. And at their head stalks the chief of them all, "Heap Big Bazoo." For this I would nominate our prince of piety, "Rev." Mr., (pardon the impertinence) Robert Shuler. May his tongue not burn out its bearing for lack of oil. For he knows not how much his accompaniment to the weekly comic supplement would be missed by the children.

It is surprising some of the film folks have not come out with a challenge to Mr. Shuler. It seems as though they could issue one to a debate on the question, "Resolved—That crime does not prefer movie folk to ministers." And I venture the assertion that for every movie star linked up with a crime, a minister who wandered from the straight and narrow, could be found. For our newspapers are record of the fact that members of the clergy are often attracted by the pretty, sweet smelling blossoms which rear their enticing heads in the meadows of indiscretion. But just because some of the clergy do roam afield and pluck rather informal and improper bouquets now and then, I do not denounce the church. And therein it would seem we differ from those who put the label of hell on all movies and movie folk, because of the sins of a few.

Our ministers would need more traffic cops on their too numerous highways to Heaven, if they altered their methods a bit. Less preaching and more teaching, fewer "don'ts" and more "do's," and saving sinners instead of polishing the saved would help a lot. Less "blah-blah," and more silence; less penny-piety and more prayer and fewer caterpillars and more pillars in the churches would also point the way to more travelers when the day arrives. Also it might be beneficial to cast into the discard those invisible week day and incomprehensible Sunday, ministers and pulpit occupants. Let those with nosey inclinations enter a profession where it is an asset, or else confess they are victims of the disease which is responsible for "Peeping Toms."

I have heard ministers, in a humorous manner, refer to an ancient attempt to reach Heaven by means of a huge tower constructed of bricks. I fail to see the humor in so serious a matter. It appears bricks are still perfectly ethical and essential pulpit material. For many of our pilots to the hereafter are certainly free in their use of them during their Heaven directing activities. And to think many of them own nice glass houses.

There is one thing for which these members of the Mouth Almighty tribe should be grateful to their Creator. For the Good Lord, who they profess to represent, certainly exercised great wisdom and foresight when he constructed Man. Just think how some of the tribe would suffer if their tongues responded to exercise in the same proportions as the rest of their body. Some of them would be forced to build extensions on their mouths.

In shutting off this flow of steam may I emit one last squawk. "Man will not love or revere that which he fears." The Good Book does not say. "The hate of God," it emphasizes, "The love of God." And love is ever tolerant of faults. According to one poet.

"Though the day of my destiny's over,
And the star of my fate hath declined,
Thy soft heart refused to discover,
The faults which so many could find."

Therein lies wisdow for our chief, Heap Big Bazoo. May the decline of his star of fate and the close of his day of destiny, not discover him without some soft heart which will assuage the wounds and the sorrow which will be born of his own blind hypocrisy. And as for myself: "Were I a lone sinner on an isle in the sea,
With life's tide ebbing out from the shore;
I'd offer a prayer that the flow bring to me,
Just the voice of a friend at my door."

Very truly yours,
(Signed)) F. J. DOXTATER.

P. S.—It might be of interest to you to know I am a former newspaper reporter who covered both church meetings and police court for several years. So I have seen both sides of the matter.

January 31st, 1924.

Dear Fried Fox:

I hasten to add my quota to the well-deserved denounciations of Bob Shuler! Here, touring the East and Middle West, playing one-night stands with Margaret Anglin—with whom I have now been associated for over six months—I still hold a very dear and sacred spot in my heart for all my dear friends connected with the motion picture and theatrical professions in Hollywood and Los Angeles, and, as you know, am keeping in touch with their activities through your faithful little "Camera," which I look forward to eagerly every week. I read of the Shuler affair in last week's issue, but, owing to lack of time for "one-night stands," as you know, leave one with little or no time for correspondence." I was unable to write to you as I had wanted to do. Ten minutes ago I received the latest issue of your sturdy and loyal little publication, and reading from that to what magnitude the Shuler affair has grown, and in reply to your "Drop us a line NOW and let us know what YOU think about this matter!" Announcement, I am losing no time in doing so.

MAKE BOB SHULER EAT HIS WORDS! This is not the first time he has tried to gain cheap publicity for himself by his dirty, sensational attacks on motion picture actors and actresses and the industry in general. I recollect, very vividly, a placard outside his church on which the name of Charles Chaplin figured prominently. Being a great admirer of Mr. Chaplin, I made a point of attending the service at Shuler's church in order to listen to his sermon (?). I knew nothing of Shuler; this was the first occasion on which I had heard him speak, and, needless to say, when I now sit down in my room at this hotel in Danville, Illinois, many, many miles away from the scene of Shuler's disgraceful tirade, and recollect, in retrospection, some of the remarks he made about a man who has been acknowledged by the world to be a genius in his line of work, I feel only disgust and contempt. One of the particularly revolting attacks Shuler made upon Mr. Chaplin was to hold him up to ridicule because he was not a father! Can you imagine anything more un-God-like coming from a man placed in a position of responsibility and authority, whose words were supposed to be "marked, learned and inwardly digested" by the hundreds of people under his guidance? Shuler practically accused the public of "worshipping at the shrine of Chaplin!" These may not be the exact words Shuler used, but I have a fairly good memory, and I'll stake my reputation on the general resemblance, and at least the insinuated meaning, of the above expression to Shuler's.

Anyone with ordinary intelligence can realize that it was Shuler's rabid jealousy of Mr. Chaplin, of the latter's popularity, success, honorable standing in the community, and above all, real ability (acclaimed, as I have stated before, as nothing short of genius) that caused him to make the scathing denunciation. This, and of course, Shuler's mad craving for publicity, was the reason for the Rev. (?) gentleman's coleric outburst. Doesn't Shuler realize that the public may hold their actors, actresses and directors in very high esteem, may pay them homage in recognition of their services to the Arts of the Screen and Stage, with "idolizing" them, in the theological meaning of the word—? Now comes this tirade of his against Mr. Niblo! We have had enough of Shuler! HE MUST ANSWER! MAKE HIM EAT HIS WORDS! That's all I have to say. Call on me for any support you may need. I'm many miles away, but I'm morally and spiritually right there in Hollywood with you all, eager and willing to do my share in upholding the dignity and credit of a profession of which I am PROUD to be a part—even though it be as a minute screw of a diminutive cogwheel. I'm with you all, heart and soul!

Here's success to our noble cause!

Sincere personal regards,
Cordially,
(Signed) WHEELER DRYDEN

Dear Mr. Fox:

I am writing you just a line to express my congratulations for the great battle you are waging in Hollywood against the hypocrite pastor Shuler.

I wish I had the power and [illegible] position to help you, too.

I do hope you and Mr. Niblo [illegible] on him from Los Angeles.

Yours truly,
A "Camera!" Reader.

The Chameleon Titler

By GEORGE LANDY

The writer of the sub-titles for a motion picture is the real Chameleon of this kaleidoscopic drama-art. The better he is, the more closely will the titles fit the era, the trend and the action of the story, not only in their component vocabulary but in their entire feeling. The perfect title takes on absolutely the color, so to speak, of the film.

This statement is suggested by the recognition which is now coming to Marion Ainslee, and the fact that a number of critics throughout the country have called her "The Chameleon Titler." When she did "The Flirt," reviewers all over the country spoke of "the Tarkington touch" in the subtitles. In Ferdinand Pinney Earle's production of "The Rubiayat," the subtitles furnished by Miss Ainslee, outside of the direct quotations from the book, had all the romanticism of Fitzgerald's translation of Omar Khayyam. In "The Chorus Girl's Romance," which starred Viola Dana, the sub-titles were as characteristically colorful in their slang as the original story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, from which the picture was adapted; and in "Foolish Wives," Miss Ainslee's titles had a dramatic directness and masculine virility which made them absolutely appropriate to the stark note of the story. For "The Lady of Quality" which is now having its world premiere, Miss Ainslee has written sub-titles which veritably breathe the excessive courtliness of the Stuart period of the story. And at the present time, to demonstrate her possession of that versatility which is an invariable need for success in every part of the film world, she is editing and titling "The Turmoil," Hobart Henley's picturization of a contemporary American novel.

Everything is grist to the maker of motion pictures, and every experience helps. Marion Ainslee was born in the town of Marcelline, Kansas. It was not until many years after its foundation that the municipal authorities realized they had named it after a famous clown; they had seen the name on billboards and were attracted by its flowery style! Miss Ainslee spent all her childhood in Marcelline, and thus came to know intimately the typical attitude of those small towns which furnish the vast majority of motion picture audiences. At the age of fourteen, Miss Ainslee became an orphan, and from that day on, it was necessary for her to earn her own living, and in that struggle for existence she came in contact with the different strata of society and gained varied experiences, all of which have helped her in her film work.

At the age of sixteen, Miss Ainslee went to Kansas City and while there she earned her way through a course in journalism doing occasional reporting for the Kansas City Post at the same time. After a few years of this work, she felt the urge to follow Horace Greeley's advice, and came West to enter the motion picture field. She started at Fox as an assistant to June Mathis. Shortly thereafter she was engaged by Charles Giblyn to help on his scripts for "Upstairs and Down" and "The Spite Bride," starring the late Olive Thomas. Through a fortunate accident, Miss Ainslee had the opportunity to act as assistant director on these productions, and later worked in a similar capacity with Frank Borzage on several pictures starring Fred Stone.

Through all this work as assistant director and script writer, Miss Ainslee kept her determination to write scenarios and titles, and finally at Metro, she got her first chance on a Viola Dana picture entitled "The Chorus Girl's Romance," which was adapted from F. Scott Fitzgerald's jazz story, "Head and Shoulders." At this studio she titled a number of other pictures for Miss Dana, May Allison and Alice Lake. About two years ago, she went to Universal, where she worked with von Stroheim on "Foolish Wives;" since that time she has been assigned continuously to the biggest Universal specials, and at the present time she is working on "The Turmoil," Hobart Henley's last production at that studio.

The recognition of Marion Ainslee as one of the leaders in her craft completed the triology of famous Marions in the film world, the other two being Frances Marion and Marion Fairfax. In all her assignments, Miss Ainslee's success has been due to her absorption of the story which she is editing and titling, her sympathy with the author and also the director, and her ability to enter into the spirit and feeling of the production as revealed in the sobriquet which has been bestowed upon her—"The Chameleon Titler."

Mong and Mong's Work

By SAM W. B. COHN

Meeting people—everyday folks in the everyday walks of life— is of great educational value to the actor who would do character work for the screen. Contact with human nature and rubbing elbows with characters in real life are absolute essentials to one who would master the art of expression, make-up and costuming for motion pictures.

At least this is the opinion of William V. Mong who has perhaps essayed as many important character roles for the silversheet as any other contemporary actor. And behind Mong's judgment in the matter are many years of stage experience in character parts.

Unlike many of his calling, "Bill" Mong did not drift into character work from straight acting. He made a specialty of such roles from the outset of his theatrical career which began when "Bill' was about seventeen years of age. It was during these early days that he made a diligent study of the make-up and costuming art and it was while he was in his early twenties that Mong registered one of the greatest hits of his stage career in "The Claybaker," in which dramatic vehicle he essayed the title role—an aged worker, perhaps two-score years older than himself at that time. This play, which was written by the now well-known actor, toured the country for years and eventually gave Mong a rightful niche in the "hall of fame" of stageland.

"It was my intensive study of real people at work and at play that gave me the key to success in my work. I made it a point to associate with outstanding persons in the various walks of life and I grew to appraise these people immediately after meeting them. As a result I today have a mental catalog of the looks, actions and costumes of hundreds of distinctive types which now stand me in good stead in my character work on the screen.

"One thing I always strive to avoid in my delineation of characters, that is over-acting and over-dressing a part. I would far rather under-characterize a role than do the opposite," explained Mong. "The less one needs to resort to artificial make-up in stage and screen work the btter off he is. Personally, I never wear a wig unless the part absolutely demands it. I much prefer to either shave my head or let my hair grow long, as the occasion demands. I prefer to wear my own clothes—new or old—in a part than to costume myself in made-to-order apparel. And lastly, I stay as far away from a make-up box as I possibly can. Of course it is absolutely essential to a great many character parts than one must employ artistical agencies and when this is true I personally supervise the making of my wardrobe and wigs and I will devote hours, if necessary, to the making-up of my features properly."

Artistic Progress

By EDITH M. RYAN

"We shall see in the next fifty years a remarkable artistic development in the United States, with the chief agent in this development, motion pictures. The school will be the starting point, for pictures will be the great educational medium. Already in many private schools the lessons today are being picturized. Children will grow up with pictures. Consequently with this growing intimacy will automatically be brought about a higher artistry in pictures."

Carl Miller, screen actor, who is also a well known sculptor and always the art student, responsible for the above optimistic view point, has followed with interest the screen's advance, and so his anaylsis of some phases of the situation are worth recording.

"We are at the 'plateau of development' today. This year, I believe, will see the turning point. I don not look for violent change all at once. Artistic advance always comes slowly. But it is an axiom that a superior thing once launched on the market will crowd out an inferior thing. Pictures that are full of significance have been shown on the screen and they have set people thinking. The more they think and the more they compare will be brought about the doom of the inferior production, that heretofore has passed as a masterpiece.

"There will be better pictures of different kinds. There is something wrong in the making of pictures when the verdict is universal praise or universal condemnation. There are many kinds of people with varying tastes. Hence, the day will come when pictures will be classified and will be shown only in certain theatres. The shop girl will see the picture she likes at her favorite theatre, the high brow will have his, while there will be the theatre for the comedy and short subjects. With this differentiation of pictures and their corresponding theatres will come about a better understanding of exhibitor and producer, to the end that the product will be greatly enhanced in value. Literature is addressed to many, many classes. There are books with universal appeal, to be sure, that are works of art. But a writer has a clearly defined audience. So when pictures are no longer a compromise, they will be on the upward grade."

Mr. Miller believes that the artistic test of a picture is found in the amount of thought it accomplishes on the part of the theatre goer.

"The artistry of a picture is not a matter of spectacles, mobs of thousands of people, big sets," he declares. "The subject matter of a painting can be most simple but its treatment will make it immortal. So the artistic motion picture excels through form. Chaplin's 'A Woman Of Paris' is a notable illustration of an artistic picture. No picture has aroused so much discussion for old paths were left in the handling of the theme. And above all it made you think!"

Mr. Miller also presents for consideration among the artistic pictures he has seen, Seastrom's "Mortal Clay," Nazimova's "Salome," Henry King's "Tol'ble David," Charles Brabin's "Driven" and Griffith's "Broken Blossoms." These pictures, he says, are most significant of the signs of the times for artistic advance.

"Another good sign is the eminent foreign director," says the actor-artist. "The foreign director, such as Seastrom and Lubitsch, have grown up amidst artistic influences. They believe in art, reverence art and have the courage of their artistic convictions. They have come untrammeled because in Europe freedom of expression is tradition. They have the touch. The foreign touch on a picture has its counterpart with that note imparted to a Parisian gown by a French costumier. We may buy the same goods, follow the same style but when it is made up it will not be a Parisian model. Our own directors have been hampered. The box office has been the prime consideration of the producer—or rather the exhibitor—and so th tor is not the freest man in the world, comes to registering on the screen the ca art he holds dear. So it happens that th many good pictures, but few marvelou When this present year ends we shall able to forcast the turn pictures will ta this is the crucial year. I believe, thou pictures will be shorter and presented wi finesse.

"Everybody is talking about pictures, body is mightily interested. On the set one who has anything whatsoever to d the production of a picture is 'on his give his best. The electricians manipula switches with scientific knowledge of thei ness and pride in the lighting effects when they are distinguished. The dra carries with keen interest his responsibili the 'prop' man feels he is an important indeed he is. Last but not least the a intrigued with making his work a creatio day it is an honor to belong to the moti ture profession, for there is an opportun everyone in whatever capacity."

Mr. Miller was recently named with actors who have accomplished brilliant the past year, his performance in Chapli Woman of Paris" being designated a tinguished." The young actor, who playing opposite Marie Prevost in "Onc Blue Moon" adapted from the "Rose Ghetto" bears his honors modestly, for h pictures he says, to learn and give.

"One cannot learn too much. One cann too much," says Mr. Miller, who was time divided in his ambitions between h dio and the screen. Sculpture will als some portion of his off time, but the silv has won him, for its possibilities, he sa infinite.

twithstanding the sustained industri- ousness of Mr. Sullivan, there is no evidence of any diminution either in the quantity or quality of his output. Rather, his work is constantly increasing in scope and influence.

Although the advocates of the original film script find encouragement in the simultaneous picturizing of these important productions from the pen of Mr. Sullivan, he himself, attaches no particular significance to the selection of his scripts, despite the fact that the majority of this writer's contributions to the screen have been written especially for the box-office.

"The only thing that counts," he declares, "is the value of the story itself—not who wrote it, or what it was taken from.

"There have been just as many good pictures made from adaptations as there have been from originals. It is necessary only to mention 'The Marriage Circle,' 'Secrets,' 'Anna Christie,' and 'Thy Name is Woman' among recent releases, and to recall 'The Miracle Man' and 'The Four Horsemen' to estabblish the fact that the source of a story isn't as important as its substance.

"The same rule should prevail in the selection of a story for the screen, in my judgment, that applies in every good newspaper office; namely, Is it human, is it true to life, is it sincere?

"If you can consequently satisfy yourself on these things, you may be certain that you can satisfy the publis. Human nature is pretty much the same, and picture-goers will respond to whatever is true and sincere."

In the olden days the language of a nation underwent changes as frequently as the invading enemies conquered the homeland. The armies of the invader sometimes despoiled the pure (?) tongues spoken in the subjected areas; more often it enriched its language, both in structure and vocabulary. To this day the English language is being changed in many ways. Foreign invaders have long [illegible] Great Britain and America. But the change is going on just the same.

The two great agents which have taken the place of the numerous "barbarians" of the dim past are the motion picture and the dalio. Have you ever noticed that the chronic kicker against subtitles on aphotoplay film is usually a true or pretended intellectual? The "man in the street" has no difficulty getting the sense of a photoplay title, no matter how banal the text. The average photoplay title writer is just as intellectual as the kicker, but his job is to entertain and to reflect the mood current when the photoplay is titled, and how often the American mood changeth! Motion pictures present showmanship in the nth degree. And showmanship is not, and never has been, a classic calling. There is an educational element in showmanship, none can deny but the bitter pill of knowledge must have a sugar coating of varying thickness to make it palatable and easily digested. People go to the theatre to be amused, not to take enforced lessons in grammar. True, good English is always necessary, but it would be rank folly to place the words of pedagogues in the mouths of Getto costers.

As a result of this mirroring of current idiom and phrase, and sometimes a few vulgarisms, the photoplay is not only aiding the change in the English language, but is enriching the language through the publicity given studio jargon and semi-scientific terms used in production. Witness cut-back, fade-out, close-up.—back-light, long-shot, kileg eyes, static, baby star, newsreel, subtitle, silversheet, soft focus, release, preview, extra, fan, insert, hokum, photoplay, cinema, and many other words rapidly being adopted by the Ameircan people.

The words which have their roots in radio's fertile field are being adopted more slowly.

George Larkin, star of "Yankee Madness," just completed at the F. B. O. Studios, and also featured in the current releases "Flames of Passion," "Saved By Radio," and "The Apache Dancer." Mr. Larkin has brought to the screen in his latest role a rollicking romantic character that is irresistible.

poplar stars of today will go because they lack proper speaking voices. Who will replace them?"

"Players from the legitimate stage," answered the director, without hesitation. "Because they have the trained speaking voices already.

"And something else. There is considerable talk about salaries in motion pictures being too high. I believe they will be much higher after phonofilms become general. The reason salaries are high is that only a few people have the requirements for screen success. When these requirements are made more difficult by the necessity of a go speaking voice, which is not possessed many, demand will be greater than ev Then salaries will rise again. It is inev able."

Peace

By ERIC MAYNE

Eric Mayne

Ex-Prsident Woodrow Wilson is at Peace.

He went to Europe with the Idealist's vision of Peace, but he did not find it there.

He found the bitterness of Conflict, heard the babble of antagonistic tongues, saw the Spirit of Peace in a steel shroud.

In the midst of shattered ideals, and disappointed hopes he has found the serenity of death.

After life's fitful, restless struggle he has found the Peace that passeth understanding.

There is no need for solemn chant, and the mournful dirge and the depressing black because a great man has ceased to be mortal and has become immortal.

Death seeks youth; but age seeks dea Woodrow Wilson was tired; the machine w worn out—he was ready to go.

Death is a mystery. We think it destro but it may save. We think it is a loss—it m be a gain. We think it is the end—it may the beginning. All we know about death that it is a mystery.

Death has no terrors for the man who h lived a straightforward life, and served generation to the best of his ability.

The best preparation for Death is to lea to live.

When a man, who has worked for the u lifting of humanity, passes on, his work mains, and his spirit lives in his work, and t ture generations will rejoice in the fruits of labors.

A great worker, a great Idealist, who, for time meant more to the world than any oth man of his generation, has passed on,

"From the winter's gray despair,
From the summer's golden langour,
Death the lover of Life
Frees us forever."

Melodrama and young romance will be the outstanding elements of the plot of O'Hara's first full-fledged starring vehicle. Mr. Santell is now co-operating with the author in the preparation of the continuity. Production will begin in a few days.

Emory Johnson is shooting some of the scenes of "Swords and Plowshares," his next attraction for F. B. O. Returning recently from Santa Barbara, where his company stayed three weeks, Johnson will devote the next two weeks to interiors on the lot, after which he will take his troupe to San Francisco to photograph the battle scenes under the auspices of the U. S. Government at the Presidio—the government army reservation flanking the Golden Gate. Soldiers, cavalry horses and other army equipment embracing airplanes, motor lorries, big guns and tanks, will be used in the battle scenes. Johnnie Walker and Mary Carr are the leading members of the cast.

Chester Bennett will start a new Jane Novak production within the next week or so. He has not yet determined upon a story but the choice has narrowed down to two. A big cast will support Miss Novak in what Mr. Bennett predicts will be his most ambitious effort to date.

The widespread popularity of H. C. Witwer stories as reflected by the unusual success of the "Fighting Blood" series has also impelled the F. B. O. executives to prepare for early production the new "Alex the Great" series. These will get under way at an early date.

Independent producers are also camping in large numbers on the F. B. O. lot. William Seiter will soon finish the editing of "Listen Lester" for the Sacramento Pictures Corporation. Scotty Dunlap, director-producer, is at work on a new picture with an all-star cast. Carlos Attractions are at work on a new feature for Richard Talmadge called "In Fast Company."

Dorothy Mackaill in Frank Woods Feature

Dorothy Mackaill has been selected by Frank E. Woods to head the all-star cast of the big feature, as yet untitled, which he has just started to produce.

Virginia Davis, child screen player is completing the third of her series of twelve cartoon comedies for Walt Pisney, local short-subject producer.

Brower Cast in Cummings Picture

Robert Brower, screen actor of long and varied experience, has been cast in a character part in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," the Universal feature that Irving Cummings is making from the racing story of the same name by Gerald Beaumont. Brower has appeared in "The Beauty Market," "Held by the Enemy," "The Jucklings" and "What Every Woman Knows" and many other film stories that are well and favorably known.

Richmond Enlists Aid of Prosecutor

In reply to a libelous article printed by Bob Shuler in his magazine Rev. George Chalmers Richmond swore to a complaint against the reform fanatic at City Prosecutor Friedlander's office late yesterday afternoon.

He gave the prosecution a copy of the magazine containing the article and asked for immediate action, which will probably be taken within the next day or so. This is the first real evidence of the contempt in which the clergy hold the masquerading Shuler.

Shannon Day in Universal Serial

Shannon Day, versatile featured player, has started work at Universal City in a new "Information Kid" special featuring her with Billy Sullivan. Miss Day will interpret the title role of the picture, which will be called "The Fiddling Doll."

Hampton Pockets 5 Scripts For Spring

Jesse D. Hampton, who produced Rex Beach's novel, "The Spoilers," for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has purchased five stories for production in the spring. Hampton has the film rights to four more Rex Beach stories.

Continue Plans For Stedman Picture

The plans for presenting Myrtle Stedman and her young man son, Lincoln Stedman, in the same picture, have not been abandoned, but have been necessarily delayed by Lincoln's injury sustained while completing his scenes in "Captain January." The Stedman case is the only instance in which mother and son appear in the same vehicles, and due to her astonishingly youthful appearance, Mrs. Stedman often portrays a character only a few years more mature than the character delineated by her son.

Kid Instinct Still in Cullen's Makeup

They know him when they see him, for on the spare tire of his car is this bit of reading, "The Ridin' Kid from Powder River." But when the "ridin' kid" clad in blue jeans and Stetson hat, dashes by on country roads a horseback, there is nothing to indicate, unless one knows his habits, that it is Cullen Landis. Now Cullen has a phonograph, a portable affair that goes with him everywhere. The other day it was with him, when he paused to rest at the wayside. When he started it going, a crowd collected, with children in the majority and everybody was happy, for the young actor loves the kiddies and the kiddies loved his records. And the nicest thing about it to Cullen was that nobody knew who he was. One of these days Cullen is going to produce "The Ridin' Kid," and probably there will be a scene just like this in the picture, for the kid is a regular kid and a regular kid doesn't grow up!

Big Italian Stage Built by Brabin

The largest motion picture stage in Europe is being constructed in Italy, for the making of Goldwyn's production of "Ben-Hur," according to messages received from Charles Brabin, the director, and his staff.

A stage 175 feet long and 100 feet wide is being built at Cines, Italy, for the interiors for "Ben-Hur." In reality, an entire studio is being built, from dressing rooms to wardrobes and carpenter shops.

Brabin is supervising the preparations for "Ben-Hur," assisted by assistant director, cameraman, electrical expert, business manager and art director.

Would Picturize Italian Romance

Fred Malatesta, well known "heavy" who is one of the featured players in Universal's "The Reckless Age," is interested in the plans of a Hollywood film company to produce Dante's "Divine Comedia," an opus which was part of his education as an Italian student, much of which he learned by heart. Being an Italian and knowing well his country's literature, Mr. Malatesta sees here a rich source for big spectacles and productions of high artistry. He names "I Promesi Sposi" (in English, "The Betrothed), as having marvelous possibilities; Tasso's "Jerusalem Delivered" as another, then there is the intriguing story of Francesca da Rimini, the works of Serao and D'Annunzio among the moderns and countless others. Among the roles he says he would like to play is that of Paolo Malatesta, the ill-starred lover of Francesca, who existed in reality and who belongs to his branch of the family.

CHRISTIE WILL MAKE BIG FEATURES FOR SPECIAL RELEASE; DOROTHY DEVORE SELECTED FOR FIRST

Comedy Organization to Produce Limited Number of Longer Pictures; Christie Folk Aided by Others

That the comedy program from Christie's for the year will include several special feature pictures, was announced last week at a trade luncheon in New York.

Contracts for the distribution of these pictures were completed last week, and production of the first offering has begun at the Christie studio. Dorothy Devore, one of the popular stars heretofore in the Christie two-reel comedies, will be the first star to head the cast of one of the feature pictures, it is announced. In leading supporting roles will be several big "names" from outside of the studio ranks, while other important parts will be played by Christie regulars.

The plans for producing a limited number of feature-length pictures have long been formulating in the Christie organization. It is said that the film market at the present time is demanding features of the type which a comedy organization is best fitted, by experience and facilities, to make.

"The selection of Dorothy Devore," states Al Christie, "to play in the first of these pictures, was made after carefully considering the field at our own studio as well as on the outside. She has stood out as one of the most consistent and appealing comediennes in the two-reeler this past year, and on several occasions she has been loaned out to play leads in feature-length pictures. This is the first time, however, that she will head a feature under our own banner."

Scott Sidney will direct the first offering. His work has already started, and he is drawing on a long list of comedy players for the production. The title has not been announced, but it is said that the story is one which has a generous sprinkling of the so-called "gag" comedy, with thrills and speed incident combined.

ROACH KEEPS STEADY PACE; PLANS FOR INCREASED PROGRAM; HAS EUROPEAN FUNSTER

Success of Short Subject Confirmed by Activity of Comedy Outfit; "Our Gang," Rogers, Jackman Continue; Big Films

Hal Roach has announced a new production schedule for his studios at Culver City. The program includes the making of two feature length pictures, as well as short comedies.

Most important of these is the new comedy drama in six reels, the story for which Mr. Roach is preparing himself. Glenn Tryon and Blanche Mehaffey will be featured. This pair of screen novitiates make their debut in "The Fighting Tylers," which has just been shipped to Pathe Exchange in New York for national distribution. This story also was written by Mr. Roach and directed by him and Roy Clements. In the second of this series of feature length productions, upon which camera work is now starting, Tryon will be seen as an unsophisticated youth who comes to New York and meets a chorus girl for whom life retains few illusions.

Mr. Roach is also starting a new two-reel comedy unit to replace the series starring Stan Laurel, which has been completed. James Finlayson, who has been appearing with Laurel, will have a prominent part in these and other comedians under contract with Roach will be used. Among these will be Charles Puffy, a 350-pound funster recently from Europe who is receiving his first picture experience at the Hal Roach Studios. George Jeske is directing the first of these.

Will Rogers, with Rob Wagner directing, has finished a two reel political satire in which he is elected to Congress. These two famous humorists are starting at once on another two reel comedy.

The little rascals of the "Our Gang" company are continuing their schedule of two-reel comedies under Bob McGowan's direction. The "Spat Family," with Frank Butler and Laura Roessing, again are embroiled in their two reel domestic difficulties, with Jay A. Howe directing. Charles Chase is continuing his one-reel comedies with Ralph Ceder directing and Fred Guiol is directing Earl Mohan and Billy Engle in a series of one-reel fight pictures.

Following the completion of "King of Wild Horses," which Fred Jackman directed with a magnificent stallion in the leading role, Mr. Roach is planning another feature production with this same horse under Jackman's direction.

"Peach" Writes Finis to Century Part

Beautiful and youthful Hazel Williams, one of the most attractive 'peaches' in Mack Sennett's relent success, "Picking Peaches," directed by Erle Kenton, has just finished playing the feminine lead in a Century comedy, directed by Noel Smith, featuring Harry McCoy.

B & H Suicide Not So Good, Says Go

Stabbing himself with the fe a tripod hasn't proved so sati tory an enterprise in his y life, says Frank B. Good, camera-man for the Jackie Co Productions.

It happened on the last "shooting" at the Metro St and it completed not only "A of Flanders," but Mr. Good tivities. The expert camera was moving his tripod hastily, one of the metal-footed legs o camera struck through his cutting into the flesh. A va fight for two weeks manage save the leg from amputation the camera-man is still confin his bed. His physician reports he'll be ready for work in course of another week.

"Which is time enough," Mr. Good, "for we don't begi Jackie's next picture for sev weeks to come, and I'm tryin 'kid' myself that I'm having a cation."

Schertzinger Music "Dorothy Vernon

Mary Pickford has confirmed announcement that the mu score of "Dorothy Vernon of don Hall" will be written by V L. Schertzinger. The picture been completed and those who seen it seem absolutely certain it is the high spot in Mary's ca both as a production and in star's characterization of the h spirited Dorothy.

Schertzinger is one of the versatile men in motion pictu having directed many producti and in addition has made a r tation as a musician and compo Among his notable picture so was that for "Robin Hood," w his Spanish ballad, "Marcheta, one of the outstanding song hit recent years.

Baggot Praises Film Editor

The film editor is coming into his own, or rather her own as it is in this instance.

King Baggot states that whatever success "The Inheritors" may score, a great share of the credit should go to Dorothy Arzner, who has been assigned to edit it in collaboration with the director. It was she who cut and edited "The Covered Wagon" and Lasky officials give her much praise for her work. "The Inheritors" will be a Super-Jewel and the biggest production King Baggot has yet made for Universal. It stars Mary Philbin in her first sophisticated role.

SWICKARD UNIT WILL FILM "SAN FRANCISCO" FOR GRAND-ASHER; JULANNE JOHNSTON PICKED FOR ROLE

Fairbanks Feminine Lead Will Have Dual Role; McDonald, Leong Rurye, Whitson, Munson in Cast

Julanne Johnston's transition from a Princess of Bagdad in the big Douglas Fairbanks spectacle, to a French danseuse in the Swickard production, "San Francisco," has been accomplished. Gone are the gorgeous trappings befitting an Oriental princess, and in their stead Miss Johnston wears a wide ballet skirt of old time character with a tight fitting basque-like bodice. Yet she is as charming in one as the other, lithe, dainty, almost a sprite despite the crude nature of the set in the Grand-Asher picture which Charles Swickard is directing and which started the picture. It is a dressing room for "La Petite Colomb," in the days of 1850 and connecting with the cafe proper, the stage and the bar, just as they used to be in the days when people from every clime thronged westward to the siren-call of gold. Josef Swickard, Francis McDonald, Ian Ruryc, Byron Munson, James B. Leong, Frank Whitson and others will have important roles in this film which was written by Harvey Gates.

Goldwyn Bid is High for "Tarnish"

Samuel Goldwyn, in behalf of himself and George Fitzmaurice, has purchased the screen rights to Gilbert Emery's play, "Tarnish," which has created a sensational success in New York.

Motion picture producers have been after this play, now appearing at the Belmont theatre ever since its first night. On that night one offer was received in the second act intermission by Charles Miller, manager of the company, and the offer was doubled after the final curtain.

Competition for the screen rights has been keen ever since and Mr. Goldwyn finally obtained the play for films last week at a price of $100,000.

Aside from playing one of the principal supporting roles in "Triumph," Cecil de Mille's production for Lasky, Spottiswood Aitken, who is an expert cartoonist, is drawing a series of cartoons for a big newspaper syndicate.

Lewises Product of Griffith School

Vera Lewis, and her husband, Ralph, are both products of the Griffith school of screen acting.

They left the stage at the same time and made their first screen appearance at the old Biograph company when D. W. Griffith first began putting art into pictures. Their first screen appearance was in the master's first picture, "The Thief."

When Griffith reorganized the Triangle, Ralph and Vera went with him and were in his first five-reel production in his new organization, "Home Sweet Home." In "The Escape" Ralph was the politician while Vera enacted the difficult role of the landlady.

In "The Birth of a Nation," Ralph portrayed his great role of Senator Stoneman, while Vera was the southern mother. In "Intolerance," Lewis was the governor with the Mrs. in the role of the philanthropic sister. They appeared together in several other Griffith features and indications are that they are going to appear together real soon in a big feature, the scenario of which is now being prepared.

Since the release of William Fox's "You Can't Get Away With It," which featured Percy Marmont and Betty Bouton, Miss Bouton has had many offers to appear in a series of current productions. She expects to sign a contract within the week, that will mean a starring role in a feature proudction, with one of the big producing companies.

Carries Out Spirit of Comedy Title

Fred Hubbard, director of Lloyd Hamilton in "My Friend" and in his latest comedy, "Going East," has done that very thing.

He left last week for a business trip to New York, expecting to spend several weeks in the metropolis. Lloyd Bacon succeeds him as Mr. Hamilton's director.

John Fox, Jr., after finishing his part in "Barnum, Jr.," started work at Pomona under direction of Arvid Gilstrom in a new Jack White comedy as yet untitled.

Picturize Life of Jail Inmates

"When you've got the ball and chain around your ankle" is the official song this week of the Cameo comedy troupe directed by Al Ray.

No, it isn't a picture of married life, but a jail comedy, with Cliff Bowes in stripes, Bobby Burns in uniform, and Virginia Vance in crisp organdy as the jailer's daughter.

Bonnie Barrett, two-year-old athletic and swimming marvel, has a chance to do her first diving before the camera in Lloyd Hamilton's current production.

Huge Increase in Beal Chest Inches

Scott R. Beal, production manager and assistant director to Maurice Tourneur, discovered Saturday morning that his hat had suddenly become several sizes too small for his head.

The reason was traced to the fact that a few minutes prior to the discovery, Mr. Beal became the father of an eight-pound son who lustily proclaimed to the world that he was full of vim and vigor.

Both mother and Scott R., Jr., are doing splendidly whilst Scott, Sr., smokes big cigars with chest expanded and looks down upon his studio co-workers with reasonable condescension.

For the first time in three years, Jean Hersholt, who epacts the role of a saloon keeper in First National's "The Woman on the Jury," plays a part where he does not have a fight with the juvenile.

Goldwyn Gives the Air to Scenarios

The Goldwyn studios are attempting to discourage the submission of amateur manuscripts. The department read 4000 amateur manuscripts in 1923 without finding one that it wanted to buy. Some of them had an occasional good idea, but the interest was not sustained, it was stated.

The economic situation is also against the amateur original because such a story has not the prestige of a published book or play or a story by a well-known author.

Samuel Goldwyn, associated with Mr. Fitzmaurice in the latter's productions, will arrive in Los Angeles shortly with new producing plans involving the picturization of future Fitzmaurice-Goldwyn pictures.

"Cytherea' 'is one of Joseph Hergesheimer's most popular sellers and is being produced on an ambitious scale.

Tourneur Realizes Wish; Signs La Marr

The casting of Barbara La Marr for M. C. Levee's, "The White Moth," is the realization of an ambition cherished for over a year by Maurice Tourneur, to direct her in one of his productions.

Mr. Tourneur has admired Miss La Marr's screen work for some time and has endeavored on several occasions to obtain her services but each time other contracts prevented her appearance in his pictures.

"Miss La Marr in my opinion, is one of the foremost screen artists of today," said the director recently. "I look forward with keen anticipation to her performance in 'The White Moth' which will afford her a part that I believe could not have been improved upon had it been written exclusively for her portrayal.

"Samuel Goldwyn proclaimed Miss La Marr one of the first in his selection of the thirty-three talented players in Hollywood and that expert knows whereof he speaks. Despite her triumphs in the past Miss La Marr has not yet fully disclosed her greatest acting capabilities and I believe that in 'The White Moth' she will accomplish this."

Hobo Airs Views for Conrad Nagel

Jeff Davis, the most famous hobo in the world, visited the Goldwyn Studios this week, and called upon the various stars.

Conrad Nagel asked Davis for his opinion on what the public wants, thinking the noted tramp would have an interesting view of the subject, through his wide peregrinations.

Davis replied:

"The public doesn't know what it wants. After they've got it they don't know they've got it. When they have it they don't know what to do with it. And if they miss it they don't know it's gone.

"In fact, the majority of the public is nutty."

Rapf Bakes Clams Under Kliegs

Pages have been written about gorgeous sets, cathedrals and entire streets reproduced in their entirety on studio stages and "back lots"—but neber before the filming of "Broadway After Dark" has a beach party been held on a studio stage under the lights of the "kliegs" instead of the moon.

A sequence in this production provided for a beach party on the sands adjoining a spacious Long Island home, and inasmuch as it was not practicable to build the house on the waterfront, the beach was brought to the house! The technical department provided the setting for the Long Island home, a beautiful mansion vine covered and surrounded with shrubbery and rose bushes—and then the work of preparing the beach began. Tons of sand were brought to the big stage on the Warner Brothers lot and spread over half of the immense floor area. Beach tents, chairs and umbrellas were laid out —and when the cast appeared in their bathing suits, the illusion was complete.

The night scenes included a bon fire and marshmallow roast—and is one of the many colorful incidents in the picture, a story of New York night life.

Every city and town—and for that matter every country claims that it possesses a "Mary Pickford."

And, now that American producers are showing all their productions in the foreign countries, the managers of Europe, endeavor to select some member out of the cast to be featured. This member is usually one who was born in that particular country.

For example, Miss Beth Kosik, one of filmland's coming stars, who has been appearing in a score or more of feature productions, playing parts, and special character delineations, in Europe, she is featured above the real star of the production. Because Austria-Hungary is her home. And over there Miss Kosik is considered a real star.

Newspaper clippings from Europe prove that Miss Kosik is beloved by her countrymen, and they endeavor in their own way to show their appreciation of her great success in her adopted country—by giving extra space and special mention to every photodrama in which she appears.

No one might know Beth Kosik in Kokomo—as yet—but in Austro-Hungary she is a star—and a featured star at that.

That's what happens when your home town remembers you.

Maybe It's the Last Trip, Too!

George Hackathorne, of screen fame, recently took his maiden trip to Tijuana, although he had lived almost continuously in Hollywood or Los Angeles for the past five years. His new picture, "The Turmoil," in which he plays "Bibbs," the lead, will be released late this month.

War Vet Scripter On White Scenarios

John Goodrich, scenarist and author of successful screen originals, has become a member of Jack White's scenario department, his avowed purpose being to learn comedy methods and values.

Mr. Goodrich holds with Rupert Hughes and Conrad Nagel a common allegiance to Keokuk, Iowa, whence they all hail. He started writing as a newspaper reporter, and soon progressed to writing articles and fiction.

The author's entry to pictures was interesting. Wounded four times while serving in the English army, which he joined before the United States entered the war, he was at last invalidated and ordered on convalescence leave to Cannes, south of France. He asked to be allowed, instead, to recuperate in his native America, and was sent to Southern California.

Goodrich had known Milton Sills very well, and the latter introduced him to many motion picture people. He began writing stories intended for the screen, and found that his ideas were readily salable. So he returned to his Chicago home, but only to make arrangements for returning to Los Angeles, to stay.

His most recent work has been as co-author with Lenore Coffee of their original stories, "Thundering Dawn" and "Daytime Wives," and one the screen adaptation of "The Meanest Man in the World." In his new association, he will be engaged in title-writing and editorial work on the four brands of two-reel comedies produced by Jack White, and directed by Fred Hibbard, Norman Taurog, Albert Ray, Arvid Gillstrom and Harry Edwards.

Neilan Gets Dope For Ivory Ticklers

Marshall Neilan, Goldwyn director, is the author of "Don't Forget," a popular song, which shortly is to be introduced to vaudeville by the famous Nora Bayes. Neilan also collaborated on the now popular song, "Wonderful One."

The director is not the only song writer among the Goldwyn celebrities, however. Lew Cody recently had two songs published by a Los Angeles music company: "Lady of the Orchids" and "Wait for Me."

Polish Delicacy for Irish Palate

Something new: an Irishman whose favorite food is a Polish dish!

John Rand, of Jack White comedies, sheepishly admits a weakness for "perogies." These are made of a boiled dough, in which are expertly enclosed cottage cheese, caraway seeds and other mystic ingredients, and the whole then fried to make a delicacy that, John says, beats corned beef and cabbage four ways from Friday!

And he ought to know, because he eats enough of both.

Alice and Anna Trip Along Together

Playing together has become sort of a habit to Anna Q. Nilsson and Alice Calhoun. They but recently completed work on Richard Walton Tully's "Flowing Gold," and now Miss Nilsson has signed to play the lead in Vitagraph's "A Woman Between Friends," opposite Lou Tellegen, and Miss Calhoun is also in the cast of this story.

Hangs Crepe on Sheiking Stuff

Desert sheiks, who romantically sweep out of the night on swift moving camels to kidnap pretty maidens, are welcome to their life, says Frank Currier, who is playing Asad-ed-Din, the Basha of Algiers, in Frank Lloyd's "The Sea Hawk."

"I rode one of those beasts for six days when touring Australia years ago with Neil Burgess' "The Country Fair," said Currier, scowling at the camels who were lazily chewing their cuds between scenes on the Algierian set. "And believe me, I felt like a rag and a bone and a hank of hair when we reached our destination."

The town was a tiny settlement, Currier says, and he had visions of playing to a baker's dozen at the opera house. But soon the streets swarmed with natives who came in on bicycles and horses and in oxcarts from the vicinity. A record breaking business was enjoyed. But even that couldn't erase the memory of the ride from Curriers' mind who says the only kind of camels he likes now are those one smokes.

PLAN TO STOP SILLY STUDIO RUMORS; GREAT DAMAGE CAUSED BY IDLE TALK; IS EXAGGERATED

Absurd Chatter About Griffith's "America" Expenditures Leads to Stringent Move by Hays Group; Studio Lectures

The motion picture industry is starting an educational campaign amongst the studios to suppress silly and harmful rumors which despite their falsity gain the dignity of facts through wide and repeated circulation.

Talks will be given in all studios by representatives of the Will Hays organization, pointing out that motion picture people are by nature imaginative and therefore receptive to interesting rather than accurate news.

In illustration, it is pointed out that recently a story gained circulation in the press that D. W. Griffith was forced to spend $200,000 in retakes in making "America" because of some complication in costume period. The basis for this report was the fact that during the taking of a scene, Mr. Griffith asked the studio costumer to make a change in one costume because a certain panel in the skirt was typical of a period other than the Colonial period which prevails in the picture.

When that incident reached the press, it had swollen into a $200,000 catastrophe, all through idle gossip.

Another incident occurred in taking the Revolutionary battle scenes at Lexington, when two cases containing six thousand feet of negative were mislaid for five hours. The story later appeared that 180,000 feet of negative had been stolen and secretly sold.

So much exaggeration of this nature arises among the actors that the lectures will be designed to impress them with the harm such looseness may cause the industry.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT TO BE THEME OF U. P. D. HISTORICAL PICTURE ALF GOULDING TO DIRECT

Will Screen Life of Famous American; Letters and Telegrams Evidence Enthusiasm; Ready to Start

Theodore Roosevelt and his illustrious career will be made into a screen epic of unusual proportions, according to an announcement just issued from the Hollywood offices of the United Producers and Distributors, which concern has signed final contracts for the sponsoring of the making of the Alf. Goulding production as well as the world-wide distribution of it.

The actual photographing of this picture will be started at once, all of the preparations covering a year's time having been completed. Every effort has been made to assemble much data heretofore unheralded, pertaining to the deeds of valor and distinction of the celebrated and revered Teddy, and, all the high lights of his career, from his earliest school days to his final adventures as an explorer in the jungles of Africa and South America, including the thrilling episodes of his Spanish-American war days when his regiment of Rough Riders occupied such a conspicuous place in the public eye. Much of his political life will be presented in a most romantic manner, this portion of the production to include his first noteworthy public service as a Police Commissioner of New York City, as governor of New York and finally as president of the United States.

"Of all the great men of history, we believe Theodore Roosevelt offers the widest and most interesting field for photographic effort of any of them and we shall certainly spare no expense to make this motion picture of his romantic career an American epic in all the term implies," declares W. F. Wood, vice-president and general manager of the United Producers and Distributors. "We fully feel our responsibility in essaying to thus perpetuate the memory of this great man through the medium of the screen, and, in clinging tenaciously to the facts we find we have assembled material of a nature far more impressive than any conceivable fiction could be, for his was a life of extraordinary events and deeds."

Recent inquiries in all parts of the country as to the desirability of making this Roosevelt feature at this time has brought a veritable avalanche of telegrams and letters, enthusiastically endorsing the whole plan and pledging unlimited support, all of which endorsements, Mr. Wood says, are obviously inspired by genuine patriotism.

John Steppling in Dennys 'Reckless Age'

John Steppling, who is playing an important role with Reginald Denny in "The Reckless Age," new Universal-Jewel production directed by Harry A. Pollard, is one of the best character men which the stage has contributed to the screen.

Disputes Ugliness Honors of Filmdom

Charles Conklin, who appears as the bus driver in Jack White's football comedy, "Pigskin," disputes with Dick Sutherland and James Farley the distinction of being the homeliest man on the screen.

(Note: This refers to their usual screen characters, not to their appearance when "being themselves.)

Are Your Vows Anything Like This?

Estelle Taylor, who plays "Miriam" in "The Ten Commandments," made a vow a week ago that she would take a vacation regardless of what happened.

In the past few days Miss Taylor has refused several attractive offers from producers. Some were very reluctantly refused, 'tis true, but Estelle states she has never broken a vow even though it be with herself.

Miss Taylor has been continuously engaged in picture work for over a year and has postponed taking a rest with every new offer that came up. At the suggestion of her physician she has been taking a rest and has refused to even enter a film studio.

Monte Carter, well known producer and comedian, who far the past fifteen years has been at the head of his own musical comedy companies throughout this section of the country, has at last heard the call of the camera, and it wouldn't be a big surprise, if the ever popular an dcongenial Monte would be at the head of his own producing organization, located at one of the local studios within a short time.

Buck Black, filmland's five-year character specialist, is rapidly taking his own place in Hollywood studios, where the little fellow is in constant demand.

His work in Gene Stratton Porter's production "The Girl of the Limberlost" will stamp little Buck as a real actor, and the release of this production should increase the demand for the services of the little lad.

Predicts Stellar Rise of Characterists

Nineteen twenty-four will see the sensational rise of character men.

Many of the larger productions to be released and produced during the coming twelve months will feature the dirty-dog villain who, until recently, was "one of the cast."

Theatre-goers will learn the names of those heretofore hidden persons and will connect their career with the success of scores of pictures.

The "rough 'un" of the outfit will, to a great measure, replace the adorable ingenue and the slick-haired juvenile.

So says J. C. (Jack) Fowler, stage and screen favorite and, of course, a character man.

"Think back a few months," says the actor, "and you will remember that in nearly every production of any consequence, the villain or character man has really "stolen" the picture. The average person is more interested in crime and villainy than in virtue and for that reason the character man, if given half a chance, can bring his work to the core of their hearts much more easily than the leads. That's only one reason. There are many more.

"The real character man of today will be the star of tomorrow!"

Kenyon Sounds New Note of Warning

According to Charles Kenyon, the eminent playwright and screen author, who is now adapting "The Mark of Cain" for John Gilbert, Fox star, the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce did not cover enough ground in its recent warning to Easterners about the over-crowded condition of the motion picture industry. "In discussing the motion picture field out here," says Kenyon, "too much stress is always placed on the acting end of the work, and as a consequence many Easterners believe that, while this field may be over-crowded, there is a tremendous demand for writers and other departments of the industry. Especially is this true of the writing field, since every man, woman and child who can pound a typewriter or wield a pen, thinks he has within him the possibility of screen authorship.

"Of course," continues Kenyon, "the screen is always in need of writers with new ideas and new stories; as the road to scenario success is fully as difficult as to the glittering heights of acting stardom. It requires just as many sacrifices and just as much preparation."

It pays to have a good press agent, for it is first aid to the postoffice authorities in locating your address.

William V. Mong believes so at any rate.

A fan letter to him for some reason or other was just addressed "William V." character actor, Hollywood, California. And it happened that the P. O. clerk had read the P. A.'s stories about Mong's new Beverly home, and the missive was delivered to the actor without delay.

Wins Plaudits of Newspaper Critic

Peggy Cartwright, ten-year- screen actress, without doubt least according to no less author than the leading stage and scr critics of the Los Angeles pre 'stole the show' in Hobart H ley's "A Lady of Quality" n showing at a local theatre.

Each and every criticism something worth-while to say ab Peggy's characterization of Cl inda, at the age of nine, later p trayed by Virginia Valli.

Peggy is now cast in a series Jack White productions and early ascension to roles of stel prominence has been prophesied

Actors Have Own Little Theat

Hollywood now has its "li theatre' 'but the organization unique in that it does not cater the public. It is a private insti tion, according to James Morris well known leading man of screen and one of the founders the novel enterprise.

The new "little theatre," wh is conducted in the private ho of a popular cinema star, is c ducted in the private home of popular cinema star, is conduc by, for and in the interests of acting profession and the public barred from its semi-monthly ga erings. Only recognized artists stage and screen are eligible participate in the functions benefits of the novel institution.

King Baggot, well known dir tor, and William V. Mong, f ured player of the screen, are sociated with Morrison in the c duct of the actors' own "little t atre."

Comes to Parting in Cinema Road

After eight weeks, Kathryn McGuire has finished her role as Buster Keaton's leading woman in "Sherlock Holmes, Jr.," his latest comedy production. Coming after her portrayal of the leading feminine figure in A. K. Mozumdar's metaphysical movie, "Beyond the Veil," the Keaton engagement, according to Miss McGuire, was "a sort of safety valve, or, to change the similie, like a change of diet!" The termination of the Keaton engagement has brought Miss McGuire again to the necessity of deciding whether she will specialize in comedies or the more dramatic features. Originally, she got her start in the Mack Sennett comedies, but as a matter of fact, the picture which brought her to the front and won her selection as a Metropas star-of-tomorrow, found her featured in a dramatic picture rather than in a multi-reel comedy. These were respectively "The Silent Call," which also served to introduce Strongheart to the screen, and "The Shriek of Araby," in which she was co-starred with Ben Turpin. Since that time, most of her work has been in such dramatic features as "The Flame of Life," with Priscilla Dean, and "The Woman of Bronze," with Clara Kimball Young, and an occasional foray into comedy, such as the engagement she has just concluded with Buster Keaton. Some players find themselves consistently cast in one or the other type of picture, but Kathryn McGuire seems to fit equally well either in drama or comedy. Her next picture reflecting her probable decision between the two types of entertainment, will undoubtless be of much interest.

Adapting Next Norma Talmadge Production

Frada Cowan and Howard Higgin, filmland's best known team of collaborating scenarists, have been signed by John W. Considine, general manager of the Talmadge companies, to adapt Norma's next picture. This will be based on "The House of Youth," a popular novel which has run through several editions, and will be directed by Frank Borzage.

By the time Miss Talmadge returns from Palm Beach, Cowan-Higgin will have completed the script, which they declare one of their most ambitious undertakings. They have just completed the adaptation of "Don't Doubt Your Husband," their own original, for Metro, and "Broken Barriers" for Reginald Barker.

Give Reason for Directorial Seat

Why do directors stand or sit beside the camera when a scene is being taken?

"Not in order to be handy to give directions," says George Melford, producing "The Dawn of Tomorrow" for Paramount, "but to be in a position to see exactly how the scene will appear on the screen." Jacqueline Logan is featured in his present picture.

Lewis Company Will Make Four Features

Arrangements have just been definitely concluded for the making of a series of four feature pictures by the Ralph Lewis Productions, Incorporated, which will star this favorite character actor. Of these the first will be "The Country Doctor," based on an original story by Albert G. Kenyon, who will also co-direct the series with Henry McCarty. Charles Mack is production manager for the new organization, which will commence actual filming about March first.

Anna Will Referee for Snow Frolicers

Anna Q. Nilsson, who has just completed her work in the leading role of Richard Walton Tully's screen production of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold," has been selected as the first 'Queen of the Snow Country of Southern California."

Arrangements are being completed for California's first snow festival and carnival, to be staged at Camp Baldwin, in Big Bear Valley, and Miss Nilsson will reign during the entire festival. She expects to have Strongheart, the famous motion picture dog as her mascot. Beneath the sway of her sceptre will perform the country's greatest skaters, ski-jumpers and tobogganists.

Abandons Politics for Motion Pictures

Abandoning what his friends and relatives thought to be a wonderful opportunity for the sake of entering upon a screen career, Kenneth Gibson, prominent juvenile, is today glad of the decision he made in 1920 to discontinue his services as secretary to Attorney-General Mitchell Palmer.

Upon the completion of his schooling in Chicago, Gibson determined to fit himself for the diplomatic corps and studied abroad with this end in view. Finding, however, that only young men with millionaire fathers should follow this profession and learning that he would have to pay more for his dress clothes than he could earn for the first four or five years in the service, he returned to America to make his home in Washington where his family resided.

He then accepted the position to Attorney-General Palmer, who was in the midst of his pre-convention campaign for the Presidency. Gibson accompanied the politician on his trip to San Francisco for the Democratic National Convention, expecting to return to Washington immediately following.

An excursion trip to Los Angeles, however, somewhat changed his mind and the desire to enter motion picture work won over his previous ambitions.

Starting at the bottom as an "extra," in which ranks he toiled for three months, Gibson is today one of the most prominent of "coming juveniles."

His most important work to date was done in Norma Talmadge's "Ashes of Vengeance."

NOTICE

To the Readers of "Camera!" and Members of the Motion Picture Profession in Particular

Dear Friends:

Upon numerous occasions recently it has come to my attention that there is prevalent in Filmdom an erroneous impression regarding the editorial and advertising customs of "Camera!" and The Film Tribune, which is included therein, and it is with the desire to correct any misunderstanding that I am publishing this.

FIRST, and foremost, there is NO CHARGE OF ANY KIND WHATSOEVER for reading matter published in our paper. It is true we do not make cuts; these must be supplied with news copy or we will prepare same for you at engraver's charge and after finishing with same they become the property of the purchaser. ANY PUBLICATION THAT MAKES ANY KIND OF CHARGE FOR EDITORIAL MATERIAL IS SUBJECT TO FEDERAL PROSECUTION AND REVOCATION OF POST-OFFICE MAILING PERMIT! You, individually or otherwise, are as welcome to our columns as the next person, provided your news is timely and interesting. We draw the line nowhere; WE ARE NOT AFRAID TO PUBLISH THE TRUTH.

SECOND, there has been much talk of late as to the duties of the "press agent" or "publicity manager." The press agent functions as an entirely independent unit and no reputable publication has other than the usual affiliation with him, which is this; the press agent is one who, as a general rule, has served time in newspaper or magazine offices or on the staff of an advertising agency. He is paid a monthly retainer by persons or organizations desiring to be publicized. This retainer is usually in the form of a cash appropriation. NO PRESS AGENT CAN GUARANTEE YOU STORIES IN ANY PAPER. The money he is paid is for his time and effort in writing suitable news paragraphs and stories for distribution to newspapers and magazines everywhere. You don't necessarily need a press agent; he is for the man or woman who is too busy to write his or her own stories or who doesn't possess the particular knack of preparing copy for journals. Insofar as "Camera!" is concerned mail or bring in your news to me; it isn't going to cost you a thin dime now or at any time. We'll revamp your copy if it's necessary, free of charge.

THIRD, certain antagonistic interests of low moral caliber have been spreading a lot of bunk and hokum about "Camera!'s" financial condition. This isn't John D.'s hangout, we know that, but we're still meandering along despite the false alarms of a lot of fair-weather-friend competitors. Whenever you hear any of that stuff let it go in one ear and out the other. These particular birds have a line of gab that would put shame to the champ small-town gossips. Just consider the source, my friends, and if you want to know if we're still on the map come on up and shake the mitt. You'll find us here night and day.

Yours for a Greater Filmdom,
FRED W. FOX, Editor

THE SPIRIT OF FAIR PLAY

[In the Case of Gaston Glass]

By Fred W. Fox

How fickle the public is! Quick to condemn and as quick to forget . . . and oftimes forgive. In the giddy whirl of hasty judgment based on circumstantial evidence it very rarely recedes to a sensible survey of things.

* * * * *

I refer in this instance to the case of our fellow-actor Gaston Glass who was unfortunately implicated in a recent affray that provided lurid headlines for scandalous metropolitan dailies from coast to coast. Since that time Gaston has not fared so well, cinematically speaking. The other participants are permitted to pursue their own paths unmolested, but it seems that Gaston has been made "the goat."

Evidently some of those interests so bitterly antagonistic to the motion picture profession are of the opinion the mental anguish that must have ensued in Gaston's case is insufficient punishment. For not so long ago as I sat in the stronghold of our flighty friend Shuler I heard this ultra-rabid member of the obnoxious "reform" element make some very insulting references to the unfortunates of Filmdom. Arbuckle, of course, was mentioned and so was Mabel Normand. But Gaston Glass was no doubt Shuler's pet peeve. In the course of his maligning he avowed he was a strict advocate of those measures intended to definitely bar Glass and the others from the screen. His reason was that the screen was the greatest of today's factors in molding thoughts and ideals and that it would be mentally and morally injurious for any of the coming generation to see Arbuck Normand, Glass and the others continue on the silv sheet after such unsavory publicity had been linked w their names. Yet he did not give any consideration that old saying, "to the pure all things are pure."

Naturally if one goes to the theater for the expr purpose of seeing Glass or the others because "th were the ones in that Hollywood wild party" that thoug will permeate the mind throughout the entire pictu But if one goes to see Gaston Glass, the actor, it is appreciate him as an artist and not as a personality.

* * * * *

This is not an attempt to excuse any of these folk their indiscreet conduct; it is just an appeal for a s survey of the matter. At the time of the Glass incide even the newspapers intimated that interests antagonis to those who figured in the party had "framed up" the avowed purpose of blackening their reputations the eyes of the national public. If there be any tru whatsoever in that it certainly has not met with even t most mediocre success for reports from all parts of t country seem to indicate that Gaston Glass still reta a spot in the hearts of those who seek romance at t motion picture theaters of America.

parently are meeting with the same good-will that they re accorded heretofore.

In a recent article in his "Something to Think About" partment Bruno Lessing, eminent Hearst feature writer, inted out that many of the accepted artists and niuses of the world's history had been addicted to bad bits of some kind. One famous poet was a drug fiend, ., etc. Physical and moral frailty in every instance s associated with mental strength. It is but indicative the freakish trend of some of Life's order of things.

* * * * *

Taking into consideration the number of people en-ged in film labors and the relatively greater emotional ain imposed upon the players as compared with the itude and hermit-like existence of those geniuses of gone days the moral trend has been for betterment.

In other words, it is my contention the motion picture ople are established on a much higher plane than some those great figures of music, art and literature who have won premier positions in history and who are often pointed out by the ardent exponents of narrow-minded reform as worthy examples for the present day artists of the cinema to emulate.

* * * * *

It is quite possible that the kiddies of the world can still laugh at the antics of that avoirdupois actor Roscoe Arbuckle and giggle at the mimicry of Mabel Normand. It is equally possible that the young ladies of the world can still get a thrill out of the shadow stage wooing of Gaston Glass. For it is not them that they are interested in so much as the characters they portray on the screen. And maybe after all they're not so bad themselves. Maybe they're just human beings like the rest of us, just unfortunate fellow-creatures who have been victimized by intolerant bigots. One thing I'm sure of, however. If they ever make a picture about reform I'd suggest some kind of fairy tale, with Bob Shuler as the big goblin. For as a modern leading man he'd be the bunk. I'm afraid I'd fall asleep.

They are coming by the scores!

The New Directors

By George Landy

The new directors will probably come as much from the ranks of the scenario writers as from the field of actors and assistant directors. This is the startling assertion of Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin, unanimously conceded to be among the top-notchers in this field. Coming from them, this statement has weight as well as interest, and leads the way to a new goal for the budding screen author.

Cowan-Higgin point out that, more and more, the scenario writer is taking his place alongside of the director, not behind him or beneath him. More and more, the author is consulting with the director about the picture, not only before it starts, but also during its shooting, and then during its cutting and titling. More and more, the director is coming to look on the author as a co-worker and not as a mere assistant or intellectual underling.

"As a matter of fact," say Cowan-Higgin, "this is not as surprising as it might be on first glance, when one stops to realize that those very qualities which make a successful screen author, need only a certain logical development and the benefit of practical experience, to turn him out a successful director. The man who yelled at his actors through a megaphone and who stormed around the set, is classed with other antediluvian fossils; the present-day director discusses things with his actors, and having talked things over, each goes about his business to secure the desired result.

"There are, to our minds, nine attributes which are necessary for the successful director: humanness—a sympathetic understanding of people—observance of detail—an innate sense of drama—the power to think in pictures rather than words—thought continuity—an artistic training which enables him to group and compose, not only aesthetically but also dramatically—a practical knowledge of the making of motion pictures—the power to draw from his players a response to his own thoughts.

"These are the requisites for the successful director——and even the slightest inspection of this list shows that they are ust as essential to the successful author. Perhaps the last named power, viz.: the ability to draw a response from the player, is not quite so necessary to the author, but outside of this one factor, he must possess absolutely every qualification that the successful director owns. Given these qualifications, add thereto the practical experience of the studio and the contact with the actor, and your scenario writer has every opportunity to be a director. That is whence the directors of the future are coming—and the very near future, at that! This tendency is expressing itself, not only in the teams of director-author which have sprung up of late in the motion picture world, and which work together consistently, but also in the evoluttion and growth of nopularity of several men who write and direct their own stories. This method is not, however, as good as the team method, since two heads are never as surely better than one as in a film studio

"In fact, that is one of the advantages of scenario collaboration at the present time. If the right basis for collaboration exists in the partnership, the team will automatically evolve a director-author combination for the future, since one of its members will surely work out the possession of that added faculty which the director needs beyond the scenario writer. Then you will have that ideal combination toward which the making of pictures is now definitely advancing, of an author and a director who are used to working together."

A Touch of Nature

By EDITH M. RYAN

CREIGHTON HALE

eighton Hale's interesting life and r bring to the fore that truth—"a touch ature makes the whole world kin!" He es on the screen with friendliness and ness registered on his open face. He is lly found in the role of a friend, who enses a ready flow of sympathy — the pathy that heals, that rehabilitates, that ngthens. It's the kind that rings true so leaves the impression that it has been ed out of his own experience.

eighton Hale has been characterized as t charming fellow who is the gentleman friend alike in silk hat and evening dress the well meaning chap, who is a little less, in his small town attire." He's the w in high life, who saves the country from feeling awkward and uncomfort-when the rest of his companions are
s. He's the happy philosopher, with a y face, when there isn't a nickle in his
ets. But withal is that persistent touch ature that fairly heralds his presence.
as played many roles on the screen, but one is lighted up with happiness and quility. There may be dark, draggy es in a picture, where the plot is murky then Creighton Hale appears with his halant ease and a ready sympathy, a estion of humor which fixes him gratewith theater goers as a thoughtful piece omedy relief.

e has broken up no homes. He never ters or raves. He has never waved a gage over innocent heads. Violent, he never been. He is nothing that is inal to sympathy. As a man thinketh, so
e. Creighton Hale is too definitely the chap to ever be anything but a misfit in in hard boiled roles. He prefers characterizations that reflect his own ideals. He would feel, he says, too much out of character, if he specialized in underworld roles, or came forth as a he-vamp, or a man that was utterly ruthless. He admires these types as creations, but in his own life, broad as his experience has been, he has not rubbed shoulders with them. They are not real people, he maintains.

"The realest person is the average person, even as you and I," he laughs. "The everyday fellow, whose life is the simplest affairs."

Wide contacts, with the silk hat as one pole and overalls, the other, have been the lot of Creighton Hale, who was born in Cork, Ireland of "well to do parents" as the authorative biography always begins. His father was an actor-manager, who had considerable prestige, but who had planned to give his boy a generous college education, then apprentice him to some important London banker and when he had learned through books and experience all about banking, send him to China to establish a bank there.

Creighton faithfully pursued his college courses, but before he graduated he discovered he wanted to be an electrical engineer. In some way he got a lot of practical experience, but the pay was small and when he found he could make more money at acting and newspaper reporting, he would follow these long enough until he had a little money laid by when he would go to his favorite occupation. Had he had any encouragement and help, he would probably never have entered the acting profession. This was a season of storm and stress in the way of conflict of desires, but he was laying a broad foundation for motion picture art. For he mingled with all kinds of people from the artisan and day laborer class, to the best bloods of England. As dramatic critic, he came in contact with every noted writer, as actor with the greatest artists in the profession. The struggle side, with these contacts, had its compensations, and he knows it has increased a thousand fold his sympathies and understanding of character and a feeling that a touch of nature makes the whole world kin.

"Struggle and disappointment should make one more sympathetic and I believe usually they do. But sympathy is a quality more often that with which a person is born," says Mr. Hale. "One has to feel it in order to portray it. If one simulates it, quickly is it detected."

Mr. Hale has joked about the number of sympathetic roles he has played, but nevertheless, he knows it is his line and so he is happy to be always consistently cast.

Forgotten, almost, are the London days, when he was called the "boy stage manager." Now facts of the long ago was his own fling at production, when he went on tour with several worthy melodramatic shows which he presented in the provinces. Then his advent as actor with Beerbohm Tree, Oscar Asche, greatest Othello, the world has ever known and other English favorites. Later, his coming to this country with "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" which he produced and appeared in. Before this, was his association with Fred Karno, in one of whose many companies he toured as pantomimist, dancer and sometimes singer. His first public appearance, it might be interesting to note, was as a choir boy in St. Paul's cathedral, London.

He had a long run on Broadway with "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," later toured with it, following this tour with another with the Ben Greet Players. When he returned to New York, he became interested in the progress of pictures and was offered his first opportunity with Pathe. This connection lasted a long time, the actor appearing in several serials in which he was co-starred with Pearl White and became known as stunt man and serial king. Before he left serials, he won a popularity contest, so that his name was a familiar one all over the world.

Desirous for broader fields for his art, he made his exit from serials and began work in feature pictures. For about three years he was a member of Griffith's company. Following this, he went back on the stage and it was the Broadway successes "Just Suppose" and "Little Old New York" which brought him to the Coast. When his engagement in San Francisco was completed, he came to Hollywood to see what the film colony looked like, as he expressed it, was offered the lead in "Tea With a Kick" and the rest is history familiar to all. One offer followed another, and the actor, whose life hitherto had been bounded by New York and Great Neck, Long Island, (where he still retains his beautiful home, but which he says he will never occupy again,) is in Hollywood, (which he vows is the one place,) to stay forever.

Pleasant contacts, as you look them over. Perhaps there were lean days when he was the "boy manager" and the ambitious electrician who wired newspaper offices and banks, but there was always conspicuous some high artistic venture, refined influences and the cultural things.

Creighton Hale is among those actors who are solidly for their art. He loves motion pictures for their human side as they touch the public. He rejoices when a great picture makes its appearance, for he quickens to the responsiveness of the public.

"The public is a part of each successful picture," he maintains. Which brings us back again to a doubled assurance that "a touch of nature makes the whole world kin."

Just now the actor whose work was conspicuous among the enconiums offered for "Name the Man" and "The Marriage Circle" is filling the role of a small town boy, who is so well meaning, but quite unsophisticated in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," an Irving Cummings production for Universal. Here there is comedy and heart appeal, in the kind of nature you and I and the whole world knows. There is no silk hat this time, just the "well meaning" hick clothes that the village blade would pick out for his colorful adventures, but Creighton is having his own adventure out of it, with all the small town stage, for the time being, his world!

Flashes from Frisco

By AGNES KERR CRAWFORD

Lon Chaney came to San Francisco last week to enjoy a little well-earned vacation in our Northern city, and is still a guest at the St. Francis.

Tom Gibson and the company working under his directions on a picture for the Rinella Productions, spent last week at Monteray on location. During their stay they shot one of the big scenes of the film, a fight in the sea between a man, and a giant octopus weighing over ninety pounds, that ought to put a real thrill into the picture. On account of the rain the company came back to town on Saturday, and are hard at work doing interiors at the Gerson Studio on Page street, they expect to return to Monteray later on to complete their exteriors, as the story is one of the fishing fleet. Ted Oliver is the latest addition to the cast, and Walter Bell is handling the camera.

"Bumpers," the first of the series of comedies being made by the El Dorado Productions, was previewed in Santa Rosa, where it was filmed, last Wednesday before a delighted audience. Work on the second picture, "A Rural Roustabout," was begun on Thursday, nearly all of it will be shot on the White Ranch, supposed to be the finest model ranch of Sonoma County. Earl Olin is directing the series, with Frank Alexander as the featured player, and Troy Brown at the camera.

Sol Lesser and A. L. Gore were here for a few days last week on a tour of inspection of the holdings of the West Coast Theatres of Northern California. Gore is president of the organization, and Lesser one of its vice-presidents. Lesser being also president of the Principal Pictures Corporation had a special interest in seeing how the audiences liked "When a Man's a Man" one of the companies latest films which was shown last week at the Warfield Theatre.

Quite a bit of excitement was caused in San Francisco a couple of weeks ago by the reported loss of the sailing ship Narwhal, which set sail about a year ago with a crew of some twenty gentlemen adventurers, for a voyage to the far islands of the South Seas, in search of thrills, and also to make moving pictures. Anxiety was allayed, however, by the cabled report a few days later of the ship's safe arrival after a long and stormy voyage of fifty-three days from Sydney, Australia, to Noumea, New Caledonia. About sixteen thousand feet of film has already been received in San Francisco from the expedition, some of it in bad condition from being kept too long in the tropics, but the rest very good and most unusual, none of it will be released, however, till after the return of the party, now headed toward home, as they expect to bring quite a quantity more with them.

Denison Clift and R. G. Folwell arrived in San Francisco last Wednesday on the Tenyo Maru, enroute to Hollywood, after an extended tour of twenty-seven countries including India, China, and the Orient with a view to making motion pictures. After a short stay here they left for the South where they will begin work this week under William Fox on the picturization of John Galswoth's "Loyalties."

Mademoiselle Judah, who is reputed to be the Mary Pickford of Russia's film world, spent several days here last week enroute to Australia.

Max Graf, head of the Graf Films, has already signed for his forthcoming production of "The Wise Son," from Charles Sherman's widely read novel of the same name, the following well known stars, Alec Francis, Bryant Washburn, Eugenic Besseser, Frankie Darrow, and Peggy Bronson. Several others are still under consideration for the other parts, and will be settled within a day or two. Mr. Graf, his director Phil Rosen, Lyman Broening, head camera man, and fourteen members of the cast and staff, will arrive in San Francisco on Friday to be ready to begin work on the actual filming of the picture Monday morning. All stud work will be done at the beautiful Pacif Studios at San Mateo.

Much local interest is being taken in the fir showing in San Francisco, this week at t Strand theatre of "Defying Destiny," first pr duction of the Rellimeo Productions, a local o ganization, although they do their studio wo in the South. The film is a fast moving mel drama, starring Monte Blue and Irene Ric and met with a ver ywarm reception in t East when first released through Selznick se eral months ago.

The San Francisco Photoplays expect to beg production March 15th. Just now Wayne Mac supervisor of production for the organizatio is very busy installing lights, having paintin done, and getting what used to be the large ca of the Van Dorn Hotel, into shape to be us as a studio.

Lieut. Bert Hall, well known to the fil world, spent a few days last week callin on friends in town, having recently returne from the Orient, where he went thru all th horrors of the Japanese earthquake.

Pauline Lord closed her very successful ru in "Anna Christie" at the Alcazar theatre la Saturday night, and Wallace Eddinger came on Sunday with his big Broadway hit, "Capta Applejack," in which the star is supported b an unusually capable cast.

Lionel H. Keene, who for nearly tw years has been Pacific Coast representativ for Marcus Loew has been called East, an left for New York a few days ago. Whe Mr. Keene came to San Francisco he ex pected to be here only for the opening o the new Warfield Theatre, but various bus ness matters have conspired to keep him he till he has grown to love California, and no leaves with real regret. He will probabl have charge of the opening of the new Loe house in St. Louis.

Palmborg's Paragraphs

(Being one of a series of impressions of film folk and cinemaland anecdotes as written by a motion picture insurance man. By C. F. Palmborg, special analyst and Hollywood representative of the New York Life Insurance Company).

Doris May and her husband Wallace MacDonald are splendid examples of matrimonial happiness in the motion picture colony. This interesting, talented young couple pull together in double harness—they work and play together—and the result is success in life and days filled with the joy of doing what one likes to do and doing it well.

Both are home lovers and after the day's work is done, they have their happiest hours in their own home nestled in the quiet of one of the canyons that lead into Hollywood. A canyo n that is cool and green with many shade trees—a restful spot that radiates the feelings of the country, while in reality, the city is just around the turn of the road ahead. So they have their fingers on the pulse of life on the outside yet their fireside is withdrawn into a little nook of their own, where life goes on and plans are made just as hundreds of other happy, young folks are doing.

I had seen Miss May in many pictures—"The Common Law," "Conductor 1492" and "Tea with a Kick" and had pleasant memories of her long before when she played opposite Douglas MacLean. What royal entertainers those two were! So I was not surprised to find her a sweet, dainty little girl. She is only a little girl in the true sense of the word for an insurance man needs to know the correct age of his client, and I know that in years Miss May is very young.

The general public is apt to shrug its shoulders in doubt when an actress is said to be of tender years, but I have found that usually the correct age has been given. Often the actress starts her career when a child and as her name has been before the public a number of years, the public takes it for granted that she is much older than she is.

Miss May has quite a few years of good acting to her credit, but she too started when she was almost a child.

Wallace MacDonald is a wholesome, athletic type, a fine looikng upright chap. He is devoted to his charming wife and proud of her success.

He has a very fine record as an actor and is probably one of the youngest actors who has so many entirely different character roles to his credit.

I particularly remember his work in "The Day of Faith" and "Thy Name is Woman," but his characterization of the kid gambler in "The Spoilers" is to me one of the finest things he has done.

They are two earnest, serious workers enjoy ing life as they go along and planning for day to come. Although young in years, they hav level heads and keen judgment in business a fairs as I learned when we discussed their in surance problems.

Both took out policies through me and in do ing so they feel they have created an estat which will always prove a comfort to them.

The Folks O' the Silver Screen

By JACK McCREADY

When the finger of charity beckons
For help in her hour of need;
When some famine-swept country reckons
How her starving souls to feed;
When the heart of humanity quivers
With pain from some sword thrust keen,
Not last on the list of the givers
Are the folks o' the Silver Screen.

When the roar of catastrophe thunders
By quake, or by flood, or by flame,
Or mayhap some engineer blunders,
On land or on sea, it's the same.
When the dirge of disaster distresses,
When the scythe of Old Time cuts too keen,
The prayer of some sufferer blesses
The folks o' the Silver Screen.

Editor "Camera,"
Hollywood, Calif.

Dear Mr. Editor:

Referring to the malignant attack of Mr. Shuler on the motion picture people, to which we, in common with all interested in this great industry, have taken such great exception, I would like to ask this pretended exponent of the doctrines of the gentle Nazarene whether he can see any connection between this unbecoming spirit of the licensed persecutor and slanderer and the wave that seems to be sweeping so many of our young men into the abyss of crime and anarchy.

The two unworthies, Shuler and Briegleb, seem to have cast aside the sheep's clothing and "in naturalibus puris" are ravening the flock of the unfortunate film people.

I am reminded of the thrice-wise monkey of the Japanese who "hear no evil, see no evil, speak no evil," and would commend this heathen morality to their notice. But if the Sermon on the Mount says nothing to them, surely they would not heed the teachings of Shinto or Buddha!

It is hard to understand how these two persons can be permitted to misrepresent the God whom they pretend to serve and still be permitted by their congregation to retain their pulpits.

Mr. Briegleb advertised that he would preach on "Slanderers of God." Well, this is a subject on which he should be well informed!

Congratulations on the vigor with which you have taken up the cudgel for a much-maligned profession!

Faithfully,

(Signed) GEORGE SLOAN,
3851 So. Hobart Boulevard.

He has been associated with various distributors in Detroit for the past seven years, and was prominent in that city's motion picture circles since the industry's infancy.

Millers Prophesies O. Henry Film Style

"One reel and two reel features are coming. They will be the O. Henrys in style and subtlety!"

Carl Miller is authority for the above prophecy. He says that the short snappy vaudeville number has created a habit of mind for tabloid forms of expression.

"Long features bring on with many, weariness of the eyes, a strain on the attention and a consciousness of the long time spent in a picture house," argues the actor. "Many people would welcome shorter features. This would not mean that there would no longer be big productions that would consume two hours or more on the silversheet. But the screen eventually, will have more forms of expression, just as literature has. There are those who prefer the discursive novel, while others like the perfection of form as in the short story. But the short feature is bound to be popular."

Mr. Miller is now filling a feature role in "The Rose of the Ghetto" for Grand-Asher.

MOVIE MONEY By Jack McCready

A satirical novelette of movie life, as written by an extra man.

As the great D. W. once seriously remarked to a group of interested spectators who were watching him "shoot," "Into the lives of people that attempt to make a living in pictures, comes a blue Monday."

Johnny Porter had spent most of a very uninteresting life in a small town in the Middle West, and was acclaimed by numerous friends and relatives, as being a very wise young man. A stray publicity pamphlet had caused him to join an ever increasing stream of pilgrims, who were journeying to that sun kissed mecca of Pictures and Prosperity, locally called "Los."

With Johnny when he reached his destination was his recently acquired wife named "Min," and his means of moving, whom he affectionately referred to as "Liz." She was fed on gas, that is "Liz" was.

Johnny was a jack-of-all trades, and when, after becoming suitably groomed he went out to seek a position to provide the necessary means for subsistance, he was very disagreeably surprised to find that "Los" was a perfect haven for jack-of-all's and if his appetite kept normal it would be necessary to specialize in one particular line.

On returning home, he called a council of war and with Min as an advisory board, tackled the supply situation, for their financial standing was, in a manner of speaking, run down at the heels.

Min had been reading the evening paper and in looking through the "Help Wanted Male" columns, had found an ad which she could not clearly understand, but which she hoped to solve with Johnny's aid. She pointed it out to him and he read—Wanted: Thursday A. M. 50 extras, between 25 and 30 years old. Well dressed and clean shaven. $5.00 and lunch. Apply Hokum Studios.

Johnny fairly shouted, "Gee, Min, I'm it. Here's' where you dear loving John gets his primary education in the business end of inducing photographs to wiggle, so remember Min, in the days to come when I am being catered to by all and sundry, that you gave me the hunch that brought success."

Before they fell asleep that night, it was very definitely arranged that a five-roomed bungalow and open car would serve them in the beginning of their new state of riches.

Johnny was on the job, bright and early the following morning, and was picked as one of the fifty supers, and inoculated with the "movie money" bug, shortly after.

When the fifty chosen ones were allowed to enter the studio, they were approached by a dapper young gentleman, who after calling them together and handing out pay checks, informed them that they might not have to work that day, as the leading man had been to Watts the night previous and was slightly indisposed. If he did not reach the studio by 10 a. m. they could cash their checks and go home, but be certain to be there the next morning at 8 a. m. sharp.

The bug was starting to work, for Johnny was thinking how surprised Min would be, when he returned home so early, with a day's pay for doing nothing.

When the time limit expired, and the leading man had not arrived, the half hundred supers charged the cashier"s window, and received their pay. Johnny lost no time in reaching home, and throwing his arms around Min, said, "Girlie, my maiden effort was a bye, but I got a day's pay O.K. and I hereby faithfully promise and vow, that I am prepared to abide by all the rules and usages of Pictures, if the lodge will keep on paying benefits like today, and Min, I've got to go back tomorrow."

The next day Johnny spent on a rather pretentious cafe set, listening to the trials and tribulations of a blonde young lady, who, seing he was new to the game, told him her so-called professional history, from the time that Griffith picked her out of the mob, to do a close-up, until last week when she was almost cast with Charley Ray, only that the part called for a brunette. Johnny at that time believed the young woman, but later discovered that she was only one of a thousand similar young ladies who dreamt. When he got home that night he did not mention anything about the blonde to Min. Women are so suspicious.

However, he had learnt how and where to apply for work, and had a list of casting directors and employment agencies that supplied atmosphere to the studios.

Beginners in Pictures are usually lucky, and Johnny was kept busy at the different studios for over a month, by which time he was more or less acquainted with a dozen casting directors, and in his own estimation had advanced to the regular stage of the game. So much so that his personal cards of which he had five thousand printed, read —Jack Porter, Cinema Artist.

At this particular stage he began to experience how it felt to be a "regular," for he did not get any work for a week, and the following week he only worked a couple of days.

This condition of affairs kept up for several weeks, Johnny just making sufficient money to barely subsist, but the "movie money" bug was firmly entrenched, and he insisted to Min that his ship would dock presently. Finally it became imperative that work of some sort must be obtained, for they were getting down to their last dollar.

They could always depend on Liz as a sinking fund, though they hated the thought of parting with her, as she meant so much to them, for on Sundays they "took in" the mountains and beaches in the vicinity, nor could Johnny part with the wardrobe which he had accumulated, and which was partly the cause of their lack of funds, for a skilled mechanic must have proper tools.

II.

It should be explained that the house in which they roomed was the rooming place of a score of other regulars, and it was part of the duty of the picture-wise landlady to receive and record the studio calls of her guests in their absence.

Johnny and Min had decided that the first move to be made, until conditions improved, was to find a cheaper place to sleep, so they went out together, and spent the evening, looking at rooms, but could not find any that would help them to cut expenses. It was late when they returned, and on entering their room and switching on the light, Min noticed a piece of note paper lying on the floor, which had evidently been pushed in under the door. She picked it up, looked at it, and said, "Gee, Johnny, here's all kinds of work." Johnny took the note out of her hand and read:

Artograph, 7:30 a.m., Miner; Defiance, 8:00 a.m., Waiter; Bronson's, 8:30 a.m., Full Dress; Ardsley, :00 a.m., Pyjamas or Night Shirt; Uniformal, 9:30 a.m., Indian.

"Suffering mackerel, it never rains but it's wet, well what do you know about that," Johnny shouted, "Say, Kid, I've got to figure this out. I wonder which one would last the longest time? The Uniformal is too far away. Bronson's' no money until next Friday, Ardsley on Monday only, Defiance pays next day, and the Artograph, your dough when you're through.

"Guess I'll take the ready money one.

"Hang on a second. Say! We need the money bad, Min. D'ye think I could pull the bunch? Listen, girlie, it's like this, they give out the pay checks when you enter the studio, and the assistant doesn't sign them until the day's work is over. Now, since five of them have called me, it's likely they're all using a bunch of people and if I could show up at all five studios and collect my checks, I could beat it afterward, and go back and get them signed when work is over, and no one would get wise to it. I can keep in touch with you on the phone and if anyone inquires about me you can tip me off and Liz will have me Johnny-on-the-spot. I can frame some kind of alibi to get by. What do you think of the idea Min?

Knowledge

By ERIC MAYNE

Eric Mayne

Knowledge is the intellectual recognition of facts; and the mental companionship of truth.

The first step to knowledge is to know that we are ignorant.

Real knowledge, like everything worth having, is not easily acquired. It must be worked for, thought for, studied for, but it is worth the investment.

True knowledge is the foundation of individual and national liberty.

A little knowledge may be a dangerous thing, but much ignorance is far more dangerous.

Knowledge develops the strength and increases the value of our opinions.

Knowledge gives us the power to be of service to our fellowmen.

Unless wisdom accompanies our knowledge, we are in danger of vanity and arrogance.

Knowledge enables us to practice what we know and to know what we practice.

We often try to gain a knowledge from books which we can learn only from experience.

We are so far removed from the Garden of Eden that we are beginning to perceive the infinite purpose of the serpent's suggestion.

We know good and evil. We need knowledge that will enable us to cherish the good and conquer the evil.

A Quiet Way

By A. H. SHIRK

Methods of directing motion pictures differ as much as do the methods of stage directors, but after several years it has become more or less the accepted custom to employ a calm and confident demeanor. This, it is generally conceded, reflects itself in the acting of the players, whereas an excitable, nervous manner is pretty likely to get the actors on edge and consequently result in jerky acting.

R. William Neill, who is now producing high class screen dramas for Grand-Asher is regarded as one of the pioneers of the profession. He directed many of Dorothy Dalton's earliest successes for Thomas H. Ince, released by Paramount; he did much of the actual megaphonic work on "Civilization." H went to Italy and made "Toilers of the Sea" and other productions. Recently he produced "By Divine Right" starring Elliott Dexter for release by F. B. O. Now he is to make a series of five pictures for Grand-Asher, first of which is "Rose of the Ghetto" with an all star cast.

Neill, on starting a picture, gets his continuity well in hand. He studies it conscientiously and in this particular picture collaborated with Jos. von Sternberg on the script. He draws his own sets—that is he roughly sketches the sets with their angles and favors very large settings, with rooms which are conjoined. This of course obtains where the interiors are of sufficient richness to warrant great size and luxurious furnishings.

When he directs, he does so with quiet courtesy. Usually he rehearses a scene pretty thoroughly bfore taking it and while working almost invariably sits in a rocker and rocks violently back and forth. This is his only exterior sign of concern; otherwise he is calm and self-possessed and seldom lifts his voice unless necessary to summon some actor on the set above the noise of the studio.

Mr. Neill is a stickler for detail and attaches much importance to the smaller touches, little intimate scences, and bits which approach the whimsical. He would be an admirable interpreter of Barry on the screen; he possesses the same instinct for the quaint and out-of-the-ordinary.

Mr. R. William Neill was born in Dublin, Ireland, but his parents were Spanish. This combination undoubtdly is responsible for his artistry and his sense of proportion.

In handling mobs and big scenes, he seems to hav almost a magic quality,, getting the most out of every individual in the atmospheric crowds, finding some whom he can bring out for a moment in closeup, to get over a point; working up to the culmination by adroit use of dramatic tension and that greatest of all the dramatists' wapon-suspense.

Oddly, in "Rose of the Ghetto," it is not a person but an inanimate, if articulate, thing which helps along this suspense—a siren whistle. Its frequent blasts, interspersed and illustrated by the jets of steam escaping from the valve, in closeups, keeps the spectator rigid with anxiety for the outcome.

Mr. Neill will next make the following four big features for Grand-Asher releases:

"The Furnace of Life," "Back of the Beyond," "The First Violin" and "The Way of All Flesh." Each will have an all star cast.
